Not an Enterprise for the "Quitter"

"If there is one enterprise on earth," says John Wanamaker, "that a 'quitter' should leave severely alone, it is advertising. To make a success of advertising one must be prepared to stick like a barnacle on a boat's bottom.

"He must know before he begins it that he must spend money—lots of it.

"Somebody must tell him that he cannot hope to reap results commensurate with his expenditure early in the game.

"Advertising does not jerk; it pulls. It begins very gently at first, but the pull is steady. It increases day by day and year by year, until it exerts an irresistible power."

The Cocoanut and Why Market is High

Nine Years Required for Tree to Bear Fruit—Cyclones are Damaging—Dealers Constantly Selling More of It—How the Cocoanut Grows and What It is Used For—Care Should be Taken in Selecting Place in the Store for It.

Montreal, Oct. 26—(Special).—A few weeks ago a slight advance was announced in the price of cocoanut, as it is ordinarily sold in grocery stores. This article is staid and sober in its market transactions and very rarely attracts attention. It might, therefore, be well to consider the cocoanut and some of its history.

Tropical countries are subject to cyclones and other severe window storms and it is only recently that many plantations were ruined in this manner. As it requires about nine years for the young trees to arrive at a good bearing state, the supply has been greatly reduced while the demand has increased. Some of our large manufacturers have been taxed beyond their capacity and are working day and night to fill the deluge of orders on hand.

The Cocoanut Palm.

From a mere trifle the industry from this tree has developed into one of world wide scope and represents the turning over of from ten to twenty million dollars a year. The tree serves the natives with liquor from the sap, vegetables from the small roots, sewing materials from the stems of the leaves, and in many places its fruit is the natives' chief source of food. The life of the tree is upwards of fifty years and commences to yield about the fifth year and continues to do so continuously until it dies of old age.

Unlike most other trees it never ceases bearing fruit and on the same tree you will find everything from a blossom to the ripe fruit. Each tree will produce about fifty nuts annually, and three months are required to ripen the nut, which falls as soon as ripe.

The industry in oil made from cocoanuts is extensive and has been greatly developed in Europe. This article is now refined so as to keep perfectly sweet and is extensively used for culinary purposes, soaps and cosmetics.

The Cocoanut.

While the cocoanut comes from many parts of the tropics, Jamaica produces a nut that is highly regarded by the manufacturers of fine strip cocoanut, the kind that the grocer sells. The history of the nut and the story of how it eventually reaches the market is interesting, but it is too voluminous for this article. The cocoanut grows on a palm tree whose round regular trunk rises unbrokenly to a height of from 20 to 50 feet, terminating in a cluster of leaves that have won such unlimited admiration for the palm. Young palms are to be seen in hotel rotundas, conservatories and elsewhere, and enable the norther to form a good idea of the appearance of the full-grown tree. It is in the cluster of leaves that the cocoanut is found, and imagine its fall from this lofty position upon reaching maturity.

Growth of the Nut.

The growth of the nut is most interesting. We are accustomed only to the form in which we have seen it, the hard shell enclosing the meat and milk. When the nut is ready to fall it is enclosed in a thick fibrous covering which serves several purposes. The whole nut, therefore, is about the size of a pumpkin with the nut proper, snugly and securely enclosed in its casing of fibre. When green the hard shell, that we know, is soft and pulpy and the whole nut could be easily cut in two. But as it grows and begins to ripen the shell becomes firm and hard, and finally the nut is fully developed and becomes too heavy for the slight stem that has held it to the tree.

Fibre a Protection.

It is then that the fibrous outside covering proves its usefulness. In a drop of fifty feet a nut might easily be broken, but the spongy fibre casing acts as a "buffer" to the nut which remains intact. The palm tree shows a preference for growing near the sea and again the outside fibrous substance proves its worth by keeping afloat, carrying the nut to some shore where eventually it becomes the seed of another tree. Thus does nature provide for its reproduction.

The husk covering, or fibre, also protects the nut from numerous insects in the tropics and from mice and rats. There are several "eyes" at one end of the nut, anyone of which may be easily punctured, and the milk drained. It quickly sours if the eye is disturbed. Hence the protection.

Ready for the Market.

Then comes the collection of the nuts by the natives. They are gathered from the ground, collected at various points and brought by boats to some port where they are sold to representatives of fruit dealers or cocoanut manufacturers. In former days there was no hitch to this method, but of late the nuts are practically double their former cost and the native sells as suits him. He may have promised you 5,000 nuts and is on his way to a port with the shipment, but another buyer intercepts him and the native suddenly forgets that you ever existed. This is one of the hazards of the business and frequently inconveniences manufacturers of fine strip cocoanut. Of course, the nut has been stripped of its fibrous case before delivery and arrives on the market in the form the small boy knows best.

Such, then, is a brief outline of the growth and marketing of the cocoanut. When it reaches the manufacturer the shell is removed and is thrown away, and likewise the milk. The meat is pared and is ready for the machines through which it passes coming out in fine thin strips. A certain amount of sugar is added, mostly as a preservative. Next comes a drying process and other details depending upon the manufacturer. Cleanliness is a watchword of the factory and in its final state cocoanut of the highest quality is certainly a delight to the housewife.

Profits Have Been Small.

It is generally admitted that the profits to the manufacturer have been dwindling. The price to the retailer has remained unchanged for 18 years according to one authority, but practically everything connected with the cost of manufacture has increased. As stated above, the nuts themselves are about twice as dear as they were a few years ago. Labor now demands a much higher wage, and the actual cost of operating has certainly not diminished. Everything has been going up except the price to the retailer. These are the facts that account largely for the recent advance.

Advice to Retailers.

The handling of cocoanut is a point demanding the grocer's careful attention. This article should be kept cool and dry. A place of even temperature is required and an absence of moisture is desired. A Quebec wholesale house had placed a shipment of cocoanut in a position where the sun glared down upon it during a part of the day with the result that there were complaints about the quality. The room happened to be damp at the same time and the result was disastrous to the quality of the cocoanut. It should be kept away from mustard, spices, coffees and other odorous groceries like matches and coal oil, for cocoanut is decidedly susceptible to strong flavors. In this respect it is even worse than butter. Dryness and an even temperature, are the points to be remembered.

Quality in Cocoanuts.

There is another feature worthy of note. The grocer knows that almost every article has several qualities. This is true of potatoes, apples, eggs, butter and so on. It is also true of cocoanut, both in the raw and shredded state. Cocoanuts when collected may be punky or spongy, they may be immature, they may have been damaged in some way. The old principle of quality applies to this article just as it does to almost everything else. When it is prepared for the consumer it appears in different forms. It may be snowy white, or rather yellow. It may be in long shreds, the desirable form for household requirements, and is always to be found in packages, or in the macaroon form mostly used by bakers. And so it goes. Years of careful experience are required to produce a first-class article for the housewife. The grocer knows that there are different qualities and that the housewife will get the best results by using cocoanut of highest quality.

What becomes of the fibrous casing, mentioned above. To-night when you go home you will find before the welcome door of your own domicile an ordinary doormat. In this utilitarian age when it seems nothing is going to waste, it has been found that the fibrous casing of the cocoanut makes a fine line of door mats and matting.

These facts are vouched for by a manufacturer who has had an experience of twenty-five years in the business.

Wide Awake Methods of Retailing

Western Ontario Dealers Annual Fall Catalogue—Believer in Displaying Individual or Associated Lines—Weight Guessing Contest.

The Grocer will pay any dealer or clerk for practical items for this page.

His Annual Fall Catalogue.

Hartford, Ont., Oct. 26.—B. W. Thomas has this year again issued his Fall bargain sale catalogue. As there is no printing establishment here, he has printed it himself, covers being in 2 colors. The sale days are Nov. 1, 2, and 3 and this announcement is made quite plainly on front cover.

The catalogue is 7 x 5½ inches in dimensions and was distributed in a large envelope printed in blue and red with the slogan: "Ringing in the annual fall bargain sale, etc." Cut of a bell makes this appropriate.

The Telephone.

Montreal, Oct. 26.—"When a woman prepares a list of groceries, calls up her grocer and gives him her order, there is little or no chance of salesmanship entering the transaction," says a local dealer. And while the phone may be highly regarded by the customer, the trade are by no means a unit in approving it."

There seems to be an effort here on the part of a few of the very best grocers to bring the women to the store as frequently as was the custom before the phone orders became the rule. When the customer cannot see new goods it is much more difficult to sell them to her than when she used to call regularly and often at the store. One prominent grocer holds the telephone a doubtful asset to the trade. He is now planning to lessen the tendency to use the phone for orders.

The thought is one that grocers should not overlook. Salesmanship and the personality upon which it appears in its best form are something to be considered.

Displays Lines Separately.

Quebec, Oct. 26.—A local grocer recently gave an interesting talk on window display.

"The value of a window, well trimmed as a selling agent is not questioned by any dealer who has studied the matter. However, there are good and bad methods of window display.

"The window with a number of lines jumbled together fails in it's purpose. It does not attract attention. While it is best to show only one line at a time, the small merchant cannot afford this nor has he generally a large enough stock of any one line to make a fitting display. I am in the same position, I overcome it by showing associated lines at the one time, and separating them as far as possible. That is, I do not pile one line upon another but show each one separately, preferably raised slightly on some manner of pedestal above the window floor. In showing fruit, for instance, I separate the varieties by showing each individual line in a fancy basket."

Ham Guessing Contest.

Ripley, Ont., Oct. 26.—Charles Pollock recently held a guessing competition on the weight of a ham. Fifty persons competed for the prize, which was a large ham. Rev. W. A. Bremner was the nearest to the exact weight, and bacon became the favorite dish at the manse for a time.

CARTOON TALKS ON SERVICE

Scooping something that has been spilled on the counter into the paper bag is not the height of cleanliness. Sanitary methods are absolutely necessary in the modern store of to-day.

Lesson 6--Short Course in Card Writing

The Brush Stroke Roman, One of the Most Speedy Styles of Letter in Practical Use—Sample Card Introducing Simple Form of Decoration — The Edwards Short-Cut Course.

By J. C. Edwards. Copyright, Canada, 1911.

This style of lettering, the brush stroke Roman, is considered one of the most speedily-made styles used to-day in modern card-writing. The slant style, which will be taught in a few lessons farther on, is the speediest, as the forward slant of the strokes has a decided tendency to promote greater speed. This lettering was executed with a No. 7 red sable brush (in albata), the corner of the brush being used to make the fine lines and the width for the strokes.

Correct Use of Brush.

Don't try to just touch one corner of the brush to the card. Draw the brush flat and use it as we have already indicated in previous lessons, and as shown in the corner picture on the lesson chart, but instead of using the T square, except for very long strokes, let the hand rest as shown in the picture at the upper left-hand corner and draw the brush (edgewise) from top to bottom by simply resting fingers very lightly.

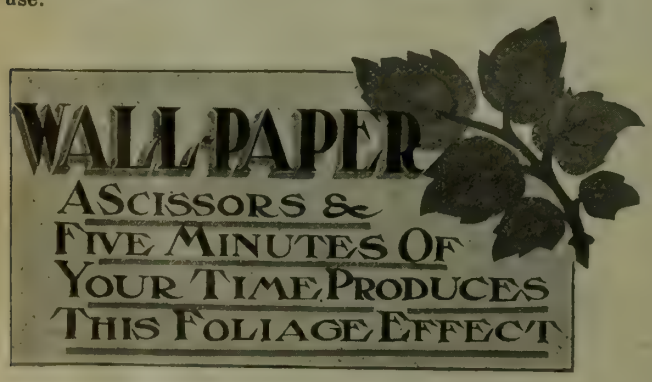
Practice this stroke steadily for a while and you will find it comparatively easy. If you do not accomplish the results desired at first, try again and again. The hardest stroke of all, which you will come in contact with in this lesson, is the small horizontal stroke, as stroke 3 in A, stroke 1 in T, stroke 2 in L, and so on, but if you would persevere, always remember that the edge of the brush is used for the fine line and that you press it according to the width stroke you desire. The heavier you rest the brush the broader stroke you get, no matter whether it is the edge or width of the brush you use.

How to Add the Spurs.

There is one point in this lettering that the student will find quite hard to master at first, and that is the adding of the spurs to a fine line in such letters as A, N, M, V, W, X and Y. The corner of the brush alone being used (not the whole stroke, except for the horizontal stroke, as No. 5 in A and others).

In the letter A you commence to add the spurs with No. 4, using the left-hand corner of the brush and without lifting it from the card, draw the brush edgewise, as indicated by stroke 5, and finish up with the right-hand corner of the brush with stroke 6.

The addition of spurs to the broad stroke is comparatively easy, as the whole brush is used without danger of covering the edge with the opposite side of the brush that is not actually in use. In the letter B you will find with practice that you can accomplish great accuracy as well as speed. This also applies to such letters as P and R, they being composed of practically the same strokes as the B. The P is is really the first stroke of the B, with an enlarged second stroke; the R is a P with the addition of the No. 3 stroke, which may be made as shown in the plate or a straight stroke brought down on a slant and finished with spurs. The other letters are easily understood by close examination of the plate. The finished card illustrated here is a half-sheet (22x28 inches) and lettered entirely in brush stroke Roman capitals.



Simple Form of Decoration.

The display line, "WALLPAPER," is brought out more prominently by being shaded with a left-hand lower shade of grey; the reader is underlined with broad strokes of grey. We are here introducing the first and most simple form of decoration. The effect being accomplished by pasting a section of foliage cut from wallpaper, on one corner of the card and breaking the line border. This is easily executed and adds greatly to the appearance of a window card (not for interior display purposes).

The display line is lettered over it, giving the whole a more real pointed effect, which is, of course, desirable. The same brush was used for all the lettering on this card; the top line was made with two strokes of the brush for the wide parts of the letters.

Try one of these cards, using any kind of an illustration or flower you wish, as long as it is in keeping with the inscription.

FALL CAMPAIGN NUMBER.

Our next issue will be our big Fall Campaign number. Special efforts have been made to produce a bright, practical issue, and one which dealers will keep on file for future reference. It will contain an unusually large number of advertisements, and therefore as a directory will be invaluable to the trade.

The editorial matter will consist of actual methods in use by Canadian dealers for increasing fall, Christmas and winter trade, looking after various departments, delivery, etc.

See that you get your next week's copy. It may be a little late, but you should receive it shortly after day of publication, Nov. 3.

WESTERN WHEAT CROP SITUATION.

Considerable speculation has been roused as regards the extent of damage done to the growing crop in the West during the last few weeks, owing to the severe wet weather, which has delayed threshing operations to such an extent that at the present time only 50 per cent. is completed in Manitoba, 10 to 15 per cent. in Saskatchewan and 20 per cent. in Alberta.

So far the most reliable figures which can be received show an estimated loss of 8,925,000 bushels of wheat, 37,980,000 bushels of oats and 1,200,000 bushels of flax. Barley remains unchanged.

The former estimate, from which this estimate was made, during the last week in August showed a total yield of 178,650,000 bushels for wheat. Apart from this loss in yield, the depreciation of grade is a serious factor, and of the three provinces Manitoba is the safest. Not only is the wet weather delaying harvesting, but men are also scarce, and farmers in the neighborhood make up the threshing gangs.

NEWS OF ADVANCING BROOM MARKET.

Some complaints have been made by retailers that they knew nothing of conditions affecting brooms until prices had been raised to a high figure.

The Canadian Grocer has been giving to its readers the conditions of the broom and broom corn market, as any features bearing on it arose. The careful reader will have noted this, and will probably have benefited by getting in on brooms when they were considerably below the present prices.

In the markets of Sept. 22, the first news of the rising market was given to readers. On Sept. 29 not only was the broom situation dealt with in our general markets, but a good-sized editorial on that date forewarned the grocers of Canada on what they could expect. The last sentence said: "Conditions would indicate a continued strong market on brooms." Thus was the reader supplied with knowledge that if acted upon meant dollars and cents to him.

Since then, the issues of Oct. 6, 13 and 20 have all made reference to the situation, which could not be taken by readers to mean anything but a strong market. Such is found to be true, and those who have kept in touch with the situation have benefited.

MAKE AN EXTRA EFFORT.

Grocers should make a decided effort to profit by Thanksgiving Day and Hallowe'en coming together. It is not only a season of re-unions, but of home parties, socials and friendly gatherings. Nuts, oranges, grapes, apples, confectionery, besides pickles, jams, jellies, and a host of goods that will be asked for.

The last Saturday in October is going to be one of the busiest days in the year, and to get the most from the natural demand, there should be an effort to attract attention and business. Windows and interiors should be appropriately arranged, and the store should be given a festive appearance.

Cast a herring to catch a salmon is often a good business motto.

VALUE OF ADVERTISING.

An Ontario farmer had an orchard which yearly produced a large volume of apples. He had been each year selling them to a certain apple dealer as they stood on the trees. He had to take just about what that dealer offered him, as he was the only man who approached him to buy.

Suddenly the idea dawned on him that probably if other buyers knew what he had to offer he would be able to get a larger figure.

With this in view, he had circulars printed and sent to a number of buyers, telling him what he had to offer, and soliciting their bids.

That farmer with the increased price he received for his apples over the previous year, figured that the investment in the advertising brought him just 5,000 per cent. dividend.

This is just another proof of the value of advertising. The grocer cannot expect the amount of returns on his advertising to be quite as large as this in percentage, but he will certainly find that it pays to let the people know what he has to sell.

RETAINING PUBLIC CONFIDENCE.

A merchant the other day promised to deliver some goods before a certain hour. He failed to keep his promise. The customer's confidence in him decreased. Next time that customer will probably go to Jones, on whom she can depend.

The same merchant recommended a certain brand of preserved fruit as of the best quality. The customer found it was not the best, but about the worst she had purchased in years.

The next time he recommends an article, she will probably not believe him, whether he tells the truth or not. Thus he proceeds to destroy his customer's confidence in him.

A merchant must keep faith with his customers if he wishes to succeed. A man who does not live up to his promises or statements cannot maintain the confidence of his customers, and without their confidence, business cannot be expected to increase or even maintain its present standard. It will show a gradual decrease as customers' confidence in him dwindles. As far as lies in his power, every effort must be put forth to make good every single promise or statement made by a merchant. Unless he does, success is certainly difficult.

LOSS OF A GOOD CUSTOMER.

In a Canadian city, a woman customer, settling up her summer account with the grocer, wrote: "Herewith is the amount of your account as rendered. I think, however, you have been charging me rather high prices on some goods."

The grocer, on receiving this hint of overcharge from his customer went into a rage and answered: "You had better find some place else to deal if you think I am overcharging you." Of course, that is exactly what the customer did when she received the note.

Did this grocer act just in the best manner in this case? It was certainly not to the good of his business anyway, for the customer, if she had not received his reply, would have continued to deal at his store, as she had undoubtedly received good service and good goods. The letter, of course, was in a certain manner a charge against his honesty and he refuted it by showing that he could do without her trade, and it no doubt appeased his anger somewhat.

Nevertheless, considering the matter seriously, it would have been better not to have glaringly displayed his anger. The dealer is in business to do as much trade as possible and it is well that he handle these questions tactfully. Perhaps, it would have been best to have allowed the matter to drop without any comment. If he felt he should try to convince the customer that his prices were reasonable, he might have at least done so diplomatically. He might have explained to her that in comparing prices, she consider the quality of the goods; that he made a special effort to give the best goods and service possible. He was in reality not charging too much for the goods and service supplied. If he had explained this, he would likely still be receiving the trade which amounted to an appreciable figure.

CARE OF FIXTURES.

Most fixtures in the grocery stores to-day are substantially made. It is essential that the manufacturer put an article of the best quality on the market if he hopes to make a success. They are so constructed that they will with proper use last indefinitely. They must, however, be given some care.

Many of these fixtures are put together in such a way that with use will become loosened. They should immediately be tightened, if the life of the fixture is to be made as long as possible. Some portion of a fixture may get out of place or some part of it slightly damaged. The best time to give attention to these things is just as soon as noticed. If left, the damage will probably become much greater. It only requires a moment or so, and does much to prolong the life of a machine.

If there is any portion of a counter fixture that will move, there are some clerks who take particular enjoyment in monkeying with it, generally to its depreciation. This is not what the fixture was made for, and should not be played with in this way. Manufacturers are sometimes blamed for poor fixtures, when the employes are at fault in not handling them properly.

SALESMANSHIP NIPPED IN THE BUD.

A case of salesmanship nipped in the bud was related to the writer the other day by a clerk in a grocery store.

A new delivery boy had been engaged. He was a hustler, and while on the route tried to secure any orders possible. The second day he came in as if he were proud of what he had done. "Mrs. Jones wants me to bring her up two cans of tomatoes," he said.

"We can't be running up there with two cans of tomatoes," gruffly replied the proprietor, who was out of sorts that day. "Why can't she order all she wants at once?"

The young delivery man was taken back. He expected that, being able to sell some goods, he would be praised, instead of meeting with such a reception. After closing-up time, he took the tomatoes up to Mrs. Jones, as he had promised, but his zeal to secure additional orders for his employer had disappeared.

Thus had the proprietor crushed the ambition of a budding salesman, and at the same time caused direct loss to himself. Words should be carefully considered before they are spoken, especially when the temper is ruffled or aroused.

THE FUTURE AND THE DRUMMER.

American and English contemporaries are having a great deal to say just now about the commercial travelers, some urging that his day of usefulness is past, others saying a word in his defence. There seems to be a certain amount of ground for both contentions.

At present there are travelers calling upon the merchants who really have little of value to show. They are working on commission pure and simple, and are trying to sell something which is at best only a fad. They are worrying the merchant, and blocking the way for the legitimate traveler who represents some house which has goods of value to sell.

The day of these travelers has not passed. They will likely be used more and more. They advertise goods as well as actually sell them. They give the retailers selling ideas, as these could not be given by circulars. They answer questions, meeting the need of each customer.

A good staff of road men means much to a firm. They stimulate trade and get the company well known. Indeed there are many dealers who come to respect a wholesale house by learning to respect the man who travels for it.

No, the drummer has not lost his usefulness. It is only the counterfeit drummer who has made himself unpopular.

Looks Like a Mercantile Gold Mine

Retail Business With a 6.63 Per Cent. Expense and Net Profit of 11¼ Per Cent.—The Normal Gross Earning Placed at 25 Per Cent.—More Light on a Previous Financial Statement.

*By Henry Johnson, Jr.

On Sept. 15 I reviewed a statement which seemed really too good to be true so I asked my correspondent for further details, and I have them now as follows :

Editor Canadian Grocer,—

Gentlemen :—We note in your last issue of The Canadian Grocer our statement sent you recently for your criticism and note that your Store Management editor wants more information, which we are pleased to give herewith.

"We enclose our balance sheet, inventory taken July 1st, 1911. In explanation of some of the accounts, beg to state : Store building is net cost after allowing due rent per year ; Telephone Stock is cost of line—our investment in same ; Personal Accounts of $4,051.83 is what our customers owe us. This generally extends from April 1st to December 1st following ; the item of Foreign Personal Accounts, $1,891.43, is amount of outside accounts due us for wood, and are paid promptly when due. Now regarding the Loss & Gain Account, wish to explain as follows : The Suspense Account is lost customers that failed to pay, and is considered lost. Telephone account is telephone rent over lines other than in what we are interested. The Expense account includes salaries, stationery, light, fuel, donations, and all other charges not included in the other accounts. Furniture and Fixtures is depreciation in value. Inventory July 1st, 1910, was $5,600 ; amount due us on personal accounts was $3,723.45, which was paid by April 1st, 1911. We do a large credit business as we are in the timber and the farmers here make wood along in the spring and summer and begin to haul the wood in the fall and mainly in the winter, and in this way pay up their store bills, and as a rule pay up by April 1st each year for bill contracted for from spring previous.

Nearby Competition.

"We trust you will understand how our business is run here and bear in mind we have neighboring towns to compete with that practically do business on a cash basis, hence we are not getting fancy prices. We of course are aware that we do a large business with small help, and the writer thinks he has a system that is hard to beat in running this store with little help.

Please answer through your paper as before. Thanking you for your kind attention to this matter,

Yours very truly, C.M.S.

Sept. 22, 1911.

P.S—We have not included interest on the investment which, on July 1st, 1910, was, in round numbers, $20,300.

This is the accompanying statement :

RESOURCES.

Real Estate, Timber Land .....$	2,800.00
Cash on hand and bank	2,510.10
Bills Receivable (Good)	2,294.55
Bank Stock	300.00
Furniture and Fixtures	150.00
Store Building	1,260.00
Telephone Stock	36.77
Personal Ac., due us (Good)...	4,051.83
(Begin 4-1-11 ; run to 12-1-11)
Personal Accounts, Foreign ...	1,891.43
Wood on hand, Inventory	3,675.22
Merchandise, Inventory	5,700.00
	$24,667.90

LIABILITIES.

Amount due on Bark	14.50
Owe on personal ac., not due...	685.20
Capital	20,000.00
Loss and Gain Account	3,968.20
	$24,667.90

In some respects this statement serves to obscure more than elucidate matters For example :

The item of Store Building is so accounted for as to leave its status in doubt. Did it cost $1,260 to build ? If so, what kind of building can it be ? Or have they credited against it, as an investment, a liberal rental which rental has covered all charges, including interest, and operated to reduce the investment besides ? It were much better to give the cost of the building and the ground under it, and hold it as a resource at a fair value, crediting any surplus to Loss & Gain ; because this method would more correctly show the status of the assets.

The Doubtful Accounts.

Suspense account nowhere appears in either statement. If it be a temporary method of carrying doubtful accounts for a period or permanently, so that unexpected payments may be credited thereon and so get into Loss and Gain, the idea is a good one. Perhaps this is the reason why it does not appear. It certainly should not appear, if this is its character, because it presently is not a resource. The practice of boldly wiping out doubtful accounts is the best of management.

Furniture and Fixtures is said to be depreciation in value ; but I cannot make that jibe. In the previous statement Depreciation of $500 was taken from the stock inventory, making the net $5,700 apparently very conservative. If the one item of F. & F., $150 is depreciation, then it cannot properly go under Resources. What should appear there under F. & F. is the present fair value of the business equipment. Is that not correct—or do I not get the right idea ?

Phenomenal Net Profits.

All these points are, however, of comcomparatively minor importance. The great, big fact is, that these people are operating on a phenomenally light expense and making net profits which I have never known to be equalled anywhere in this line of business. The entire capital is turned 1¼ times annually including every item of ownership and investment. The working capital is turned only 1½ times, but the very light expense and the fine average margin, considering light expense, offsets this slow overturn. The expense of 6.63 per cent. remains a marvel, and the net 11¼ per cent. stands as monumental in its significance. The net annual gain on the investment is 25 per cent., which is surely good enough for anybody.

This writer is surely correct in thinking he has a system that is "hard to beat." Indeed it is, and he may well be proud of it. He may be a bit backward in the matter of lucid statement, but he sure knows how to handle things to earn a fine profit. I have nothing whatever to suggest for the improvement of this business, but frankly take off my hat to the management thereof. I wish I knew how to do even nearly as well in the way of net profits and light expenses. If I could figure out that way in my business, with my 5 2-3 times overturn, I should show about 100 per cent. on my invested capital every year.

Twenty-Five Per Cent. Normal.

The lesson may be here : That the retail business may be likened to the bond business in that, one way or another, it works out about the same. Investments in bonds and, in fact, all securities, works out to about 4½ per cent. That is to say that, over a long period of years, if one seems to earn a higher rate, his losses will reduce his average to 4½ per cent. If he wants absolute security, he must be content with 4½ per cent. to begin with. So, too, 25

Montreal, Oct. 26.—Seasonable business is booming, and the prospects for a good fall and Christmas trade are glowing. Such are the opinions rather freely expressed by those in a position to know the trend of affairs, and to gauge to a certain extent the outlook for the near future. Prices are generally firm and are by no means low, but withal there is a feeling of security, based upon the prosperity of the country, that is taken as a basis for splendid business. Just now things are brisk and bright, and the season is only beginning. While this satisfaction and hopefulness reigns among the wholesale trade, it may be safely taken for granted that the retailers are in a similar position.

Sugar.—The market remains steady with a fair demand. It is out of the question to estimate the next movement. Opinion is divided. High prices have held for quite a time, and a reduction would be welcomed by many heavy users of sugars. The falling off in demand may result in easier prices, but the principal conditions in the primary markets have not been extensively changed.

Syrups and Molasses.—The demand for syrups and fancy molasses has been encouraging and for the former especially there should be a good seasonable enquiry. This is the beginning of the period when syrups are in particularly good demand, and special efforts to get new trade will surely be effective.

Dried Fruits.—Jobbers are now offering new prunes, Valencia raisins, and some currants. These goods have arrived at an opportune time, for already there is a demand for dried fruits, and it should be only a short time until the season reaches its height. A glance at the appended list will show that the larger prunes are quoted at a high price, just as intimated some time ago. The smaller sizes are more plentiful, and are a little easier. The market as a whole, however, is firm.

New figs by direct steamer will be here next week. The price is firm. Retailers report a good demand for the supplies they received by express some time ago. Malaga table raisins are a little higher than formerly. Valencias are likewise rather firm. New dates will not be here until some time next month, and according to reports will be higher in price. The Persian date crop was short and the existing international troubles have increased insurance risks with the result that freight rates are higher. Nothing has occurred to relieve the general firmness in dried fruits and nothing of that nature is now expected. Hallowe'en dates are quoted at old prices, and the earliest arrivals at open prices. One jobber remarked that the open quotations are the highest he has seen in many years.

Rice.—Yet another instance of high prices, giving business a new impetus, is found in recent transactions in rice. The demand for rice this fall has been fifty per cent. heavier than during the same period last year. Prices are very much higher, and yet it is a fact that business shows a big improvement. The market is firm, primary market conditions remaining unchanged, if not firmer. It seems to be generally held that prices will go higher, as there are no indication of relief in the districts of production.

Teas.—The market for Japan teas still remains high and firm. Several shipments of better grade which were intended for Canada, have diverted to the United States, where they will meet a higher market, realizing fully ten per cent. more than in Canada.

The United States markets are very short of Japan teas, as also desirable China green teas. A review of the Indian market for last month, remarks that some falling off in quality was noticeable. The choicest lots were therefore keenly competed for and realized top prices, as it is felt that the tendency of the quality will be downward to the end of the season. It is of interest to note that the shipments from Calcutta to the United Kingdom from April 1st to September 30, were 92,677,000 pounds, against 87,348,000 pounds in 1910. Common Ceylons showed a poorer quality at times than the average for the early autumn, and buyers seemed unwilling to operate except at a decided reduction.

Coffee.—The present situation is certainly vexatious to the trade. Not quite two weeks ago, medium and low grade coffees in the world's markets advanced a cent a pound, and the better grades responded in sympathy to a greater or less extent. A local coffee house remarks that there are pronounced indications that still higher figures may be reached, "as the October flowering is reported as comparatively poor, and with bad weather conditions, less than the average crop is predicted." That, however, is only one factor contributing to this period of artificial prices, but it helps the big interests, with whom the Brazilian Government is in league, to keep absolute control of the market, and although there is ample coffee in sight for the world's requirements, we see no immediate prospect of relief from the present fictitious conditions. Prices are almost up to the highest point reached in thirty years, and these may be surpassed, as the big interests seem determined to force prices to the utmost limit. From the viewpoint of most coffee dealers, such control of the market seems piratical, but whether it is called piracy or conspiracy, does not help matters in the least.

Valorization was introduced at a time when there was an overproduction of coffee. It was intended as a relief to the planters and traders when prices where too low. The governments of Sao Paulo and Rio Janeiro borrowed money to buy up coffee and put restriction upon its export. Now the tables are turned and there is an underproduction

One can make a good guess as to whom the valorization scheme is benefiting most.

Canned Goods.

Montreal.—There is nothing very new to report in canned goods this week. One house reported a complete delivery of tomatoes, evidently desiring to further the goodwill of their customers, by thus filling their orders completely. Of course, they had to go outside for supplies, possibly being among those who were reported purchasers in Maryland markets. There is a good demand for canned goods, but there is no particular feature this week.

TORONTO.—There are no particular features, other than those in evidence before, to be reported this week. It can be said that the general tone of the market is steady and prices are well maintained.

From $1.60 to $1.75 per doz. is being quoted for spot tomatoes, but with retailers having just received their season's supply, there are but few purchases. Indeed wholesalers just at the present have few to offer. Gallon tomatoes are quoted at $4.50 to $4.80.

Inquiry among retailers brings out the fact that already a good demand for canned goods is being found. With prices in a number of cases high, consumption is accordingly smaller than it would be under lower market conditions, but it is true that consumption as a whole is on the increase.

New pack salmon is coming forward. Based on what he got compared with the amount he wanted, one wholesaler says he only received 25 per cent. delivery of sockeye. Of cohoes, 50 per cent. was recived and a full delivery of humpbacks. With sockeyes at such a high figure, a heavier demand will be thrown on the other lines, and the general opinion is that a strong market can be expected in the lower grades.

It is reported that the supply of lobsters is not all that could be desired. Last year there was a considerable period during which the market was bare. Some dealers expect the same thing this year.

New Fruits on market.

Toronto, Oct. 26.—A good steady demand for groceries from wholesaler to retailer is apparent. Wholesalers are making no complaints regarding business. A fair amount of orders from different sections for shipment before the close of navigation is reported, but it is believed that some retailers are holding off in their purchases in this regard as long as possible. That at least is the opinion of one wholesaler. Navigation will not close until well on in November.

Reports from the retail section of the trade reflect a general healthy condition of affairs. General lines are moving freely. Canned goods and new dried fruits are coming into their hands and they are using them as a lever for more trade.

Sugar.—Sugar remains unchanged, $5.95 per cwt. still ruling. There has been no change in price since Sept. 8th. The raw market is fluctuating within a narrow margin with futures in European beets about the same as spot but Cuban cane is about 1c lower. When pressure of domestic beet is brought to bear on the raw market, there is a belief that an adjustment will be brought about. At the moment the market is steady. First crop estimates giving something definite regarding the outturn of European beets are now awaited. Demand for sugar is good for the season.

Syrup and Molasses.—A good volume of trade in syrup is being found by the grocer who is pushing it. Several conditions increase the opportunity for its sale, one being the high prices of various lines of canned goods. Both syrups and molasses are quite strong.

Dried Fruits.—A good array of new crop dried fruits are now to be found on the local market. Besides new prunes and Valencia raisins which have been here for some time, there have been arrivals of currants, peels, Malaga raisins and new table figs. The first shipments of new dates are expected by Nov. 15.

There are not many large-sized prunes on the market yet, and no plenitude can be expected during the season, as the large sizes are extremely scarce this year.

The new arrivals are welcomed by the trade, for already an appreciable consuming demand will be found for them.

In primary markets both Valencia raisins and currants have been steadily stiffening up, and indeed raisins have ascended so rapidly that some dealers would not be surprised at a slight setback.

Tea.—A report from London, Eng., on tea says that the stocks of tea there are considerably below those of the same period of the past few years. However, a fair increase is expected from India. From Ceylon, it is expected there will be more tea during October, but even so, it is not believed that deficiency of the previous months can be made up before the end of the year. The world's consumption is still going ahead, states this report, so even anticipating this increase from India, it is difficult to foresee anything but a strong market from now onwards.

Coffee.—The late advances in prices are well maintained. Reports from New York indicate an exceedingly strong market, and in very strong hands, so that present conditions would indicate no weakening.

Manufacturers have been finding it necessary under the higher prices they have had to pay to advance their standard blends. One dealer reports his own brand up 5 per cent. Others report an advance of 2 to 3 cents per pound.

Nuts.—There are no special features bearing on the nut markets. The arrival of the cool evenings and the family gatherings around the fireplace work for a better demand for nuts from the dealer who gives them prominence. Chestnuts are selling well just now and are quoted at 10 cents per pound.

Spices.—There is a general steadiness in spices covering the whole list. Nutmegs are firming up. Drought in the producing sections has curtailed the yield of pimento, and only about 1-3 of an average crop will be made. A good steady trade in this line is reported.

Rice.—Even with the advances which have taken place in rice in the past two months, there is still marked strength, due to the poor outturn of the crops in the producing sections of the East, and the high level of prices there. The position of Java is strong in keeping with the reduced crop and the practical prohibition put upon the export from the country of origin. Trade is said to be good in this line despite the advances.

MANITOBA MARKETS.

POINTERS:

Syrup.—Advanced.

Beans.—Advancing.

Salmon.—Very scarce.

Winnipeg, October 26.—The grocery trade still continues to show large increases in the volume of trade transacted from week to week this fall, in spite of the unsettled weather conditions which have been delaying the harvesting of the crop. Wholesalers report that the demand is just as strong as ever and that their orders show no inclination to falling off. Collections are reported to be a little better this week as a fair quantity of grain is being marketed, and in spite of the fact that the yield has been affected considerably, the price of wheat is remaining high and farmers are receiving good prices for the grain.

Advances in price have been noticeable this week in many lines and the tone of the entire grocery market is strong. Syrup has bounded upward another 5c per case per 2 lb. pails and 10c per case for 5, 10 and 20 lb. cases. Salmon is very scarce. One wholesaler stated that only 25 per cent. of purchases in the Fraser River Sockeyes would be delivered this season. The northern sockeyes are more plentiful and it is estimated that about 50 per cent. of purchases in this line will be delivered.

Sugar.—Sugar prices remain the same as last week, and the market appears on the weak side. No predictions can be obtained from any reliable source but it seems to be that the feeling is that prices will not go down rapidly.

Syrup and Molasses.—Syrup continued its advance of last week by going up another 5 and 10c per case this week, and is expected to even reach higher figures if sugar maintains its present price. The demand at the present time is only normal, but it is not expected that the present advances will affect it much. Molasses are in good demand.

Evaporated Apples.—The market shows a slightly easier tone this week although prices have not declined to any extent. There is a difference in the prices quoted by different houses, some offering No. 1 stock at 12c and medium at 11¾, while others are still on the basis of 11 to 11½ per lb.

Coffee.—At last the predicted advance has taken place in one house in coffee prices. This firm having sold its supply was forced to buy on the New York markets and at the present time is quoting green coffee at 18c per lb. The same wholesaler expressed the opinion that a 20c market was being looked for by his house in the near future. Other firms, however, have not made any increase in prices yet.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MARKETS.

Vancouver, B.C., Oct. 25.—Eggs, butter and potatoes, three great essentials of regular diet, are among the articles reported scarce on the local market. With a big consumption here, potatoes have not been very plentiful for several seasons past, and the scarcity is being looked for ahead of time now.

It is the usual thing for eggs and butter to begin creeping up in price at this season, and newly laid eggs, jobbed at 50 cents, are hard to get. There is a great run on case eggs, and these graded, run from 30 to 34 cents. Bulk butter from the east has a quality that compares favorably with the best creamery here.

Apples are also on the scarce list this fall. The softer kinds, such as the Rome Beauty, are sold at $1.50 while choice Jonathans, imported from eastern Washington, climb up another dollar. Apples on the local market are as dear as oranges, retailing at from 30 to 50 cents a dozen.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, Oct. 26.—Wholesale grocery business shows marked improvement. Markets have recovered from recent stagnation and jobbers report brisk demand for nearly all lines. Collections show steady improvement, and prospects for big autumn trade are excellent.

New prunes are now on the market and prices are lower than those of last season. They are going to the trade at 7½ to 8 cents.

The price of canned tomatoes shows a heavy advance. The wholesalers report that the canneries have filled only forty per cent. of orders. They are now quoted at $1.75 per dozen.

Extra standard granulated sugar is quoted at $6 per hundred pounds. Molasses is unchanged.

Flour prices are firmer, there being an advance of ten cents per barrel during the past week. Manitoba high patents are quoted at $6.15 to $6.25, and Ontario blends from $5.10 to $5.20. Feed flour is $1.70 to $1.75 per bag.

Large cheese are quoted at 15½ cents, and twins 16 cents.

Potatoes are selling freely, and there is a good export demand. This week several thousand barrels were shipped to New York, something that has not occurred for a long time. They are quoted here at 60 cents per bushel.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Oct. 26.—Local grocers are looking forward with interest to the Hallowe'en trade, and are of the opinion that it will be quite brisk this year. Business in general is encouraging, although there are few changes in the markets. Sugar still remains well advanced, with no change since the latter part of September, while molasses is still on the upward grade. For fancy Barbadoes 36 cents is now being asked, and the prospects are that the price will reach 40 cents before long. The market is reported as being particularly strong and stocks are light. Manitoba flour advanced 10 cents on Saturday, Oct. 21. The market in beans is strong, and new beans are selling a few cents cheaper at present than spot stock. It is doubtful if there will be any lowering of prices, for reports from the West are not encouraging. Much strength is being shown in cheese, and those who made early purchases are congratulating themselves. Butter and eggs are bringing good prices and are none too plentiful, so that the market is firm, per cent. seems about normal for the retail business.

LOOKS LIKE A MERCANTILE GOLD MINE.

I work much harder in many ways than this man does. That is, I have deliveries and fussy city customers to whom I must often send goods five times in a day, and many other troubles which this man wots nothing of; and I make 2 per cent. or 2½ per cent. more than he does, gross. Then I have twice his expense and have to watch that item constantly, lest it wipe out all the net margin. But in the end I make 24½ per cent. on my capital—yes, I forgot; I make 24½ per cent. after I have charged up 6 per cent. interest, so I really make 5½ per cent. more than he does, net. But I hasten to say I would exchange places with him in a minute, for the sake of working with one or two others and cutting out a load of work and worry from which he is free. In fact, I regard this man's statement as delineating about the happiest lot to which anyone could aspire: To have a good business, entirely within one's own immediate control; to be the "big frog in the little puddle," interested in all the town's movements, consulted and looked up to as a substantial man by everyone about one; to steadily pile up a solid competence with such regular certainty of outcome that one need have no real anxiety about it. Where is there a happier lot to be found?

Best wishes to you, friend; let us hear from you again.

Have You Been After The Pedlar?

You can put him out of business if you try. Never as good a chance as right now.

Dealer Criticises Railway Companies

Blames Them for Majority of Damage Done to Goods in Transit —Says That They are Slow in Settling Claims—Some Experiences are Given.

Editor Canadian Grocer:—Something was said in a recent issue of The Grocer regarding the method of procedure the grocer has at hand in tracing shortage of goods. I would like to voice some of the grievances of the retail dealer in regard to damaged goods, which is a big source of trouble, especially in the smaller towns and villages.

While this is more marked in some portions of the country than others, and on some railroads more so than others, nevertheless it is present to a greater or less extent all over.

As I see it, if goods are damaged, a dealer has two alternatives.

He can refuse the shipment. But he needs the goods and he orders again. The second order has arrived, or is on the way, when the railway company, seeing they cannot bully you, allow you to take the goods and they will pay the damages. I believe that the railway is the one that the dealer should apply to in regard to damage to goods in shipment. The wholesaler's responsibility ceases when he passes the goods over to the railroad and receives a receipt stating that the goods were received in good condition.

Long-Drawn Out Settlement.

If, on the other hand, the agent at the receiving point requests you to take the goods and put in a claim, it is only with the greatest difficulty that it can be collected. I have had experiences where they stood you off with useless red tape until the interest amounted to a considerable sum, and I had to threaten to sue for it before they finally settled. There have been other cases where the amount was only small and it was nearly eaten up in postage.

There should not be such delay in the payment of damages, and if there is no legislation on our statutes at the present time limiting the time which a claim can be held off, it is high time we did have.

Here is another example of damaged goods where the grocer has little or no relief. A pail of candies was opened in transit, a quantity removed, the lid fastened on, and thus delivered to the dealer. When he finds this out what is he to do?

He applies to the railway and they say it must have been that way when they received it, and "at any rate you have signed a receipt of delivery in good order," so they consider themselves free. The shipper is written and states he delivered a full pail to the railway, and thus the dealer is without means of securing redress. Such goods are weighed in bulk and not separately, and so it is almost impossible to secure payment for the damage.

All Counts Up.

These amounts individually may not be great, but if a grocer had the total for the year added to his bank account, they might look big.

Firmer Tendency in Butter and Eggs

The Production of Both Decreasing and Prices are Firming Up—Live Hogs Continue to Slump, and Provisions are Accordingly Easy—Good General Demand for Pork Products—The Cheese Situation.

Live hogs continue to depreciate in value, this week marking a further easing off in prices. They are now at as low a figure as they have been during the year, or in fact for two years, and dealers are wondering whether the end is in sight. Offerings continue on free scale, but just what supplies are back of these is a question. The English bacon market is still quiet and lower. Canadian bacon is quoted at 55 to 59s., as compared with 64 to 67s. at the latter part of September.

Provisions exhibit an easier tendency under lower figures for live hogs. Reductions are noted at some centres, while at others, only an easy tendency is noticeable. Smoked meats are not quite so much in demand as during the warm weather, but the dealer who is pushing this department finds a good trade in provisions at the present time.

In spite of the lower price for porkers, lard maintains a steady position. The cooler weather has brought a somewhat better demand for this line, and with butter prices marching upward, it can only be expected that there will be a larger consumption of lard.

Butter prices, as has been expected would be the case, are on the upward trend. The production has been falling off, as is natural at this season, and while the export demand has not been so large of late, the West and Pacific Coast have been relieving Eastern Canada of considerable supplies.

Eggs are to some extent following the example of the butter market. Arrivals, although perhaps fair for the season, are now on a small scale, thus firming prices. There has already been some imports to Ontario from the Chicago market, to fill the gap between demand and production.

On the surface there appears to be a fairly steady tendency in cheese, but easiness is noted in some quarters. The English market has been easing off, perhaps more so than prices here. Montreal reports the total receipts to Oct. 14 as 1,558,352 boxes, as against 1,698,376 boxes last year, showing a decrease of 140,024 boxes.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—The market showed a little further weakness in live hogs recently and dressed followed in sympathy. There is a good demand for pork in barrels just now, but cooked meats are rather slow. Compound lard is slightly reduced.

Provisions.—With the big slump in live hog prices that has taken place in the past month, lower prices on provisions will not come as a surprise to the trade. This week there is a general easing off in prices with the exception of lard which seems to be shaping in the opposite direction. Smoked meats and cooked hams are lower in price while long clear, the price of which had been firming up for a time, is now quoted at 12 to 12½ cents.

Live hogs are again lower and are now down to a basis, $1.95 below the values ruling on Sept. 1.

Butter.—The situation in butter continues one of steadiness with nothing apparently in sight to shape the market otherwise. The production has been falling off to a marked extent and already some storage butter has been called into play. Prices are slightly higher in general lines this week.

Eggs.—The stronger feeling which has been reported in eggs is still present. Supplies of new laid are scarce and commanding a good figure. Storage are being used to supply the demand, while already there have been some shipments to this market from Chicago. The fact that eggs are being brought across the line so early in the season denotes the situation in this commodity.

Cheese.—Some firms are quoting cheese ¼ cent per pound lower, at 15 cents for large. This is in sympathy with the lower prices at country boards. While the English market is considerably lower, the market here is still fairly steady.

Poultry.—A fairly plentiful supply of poultry is expected for Thanksgiving. This week is expected to bring forth considerable supplies. The market was until on in the week bare of the "Thanksgiving" turkey, but dealers were expecting shipments as the holiday approached. Reports seem to indicate that turkeys are not in any too good shape, but there will no doubt be enough available to appease to some extent the "turkey" appetite. Around 24 cents was being quoted on Monday, but by the end of the week it is expected that the dressed article may be had at 20 cents and even below that for the poorer birds.

Butter.—There has been a great improvement in the quantity of cream that has been sent to the creameries during the last week. Prices remain unchanged for Manitoba fresh made creamery bricks which are quoted at 30c per doz., while boxes have advanced 3c per lb. during the week, and are quoted at 29c. Dairy butter shows considerable advance in price owing to the improved quality, and strictly No. 1 is now offered at 21c, No. 2 at 18c, No. 3 at 15½c, No. 4 at 13½c per lb.

Cheese.—The product of the Manitoba farms is noticeable by its absence and practically none is being offered at the present time. Until the harvest is out of the way there will no doubt be little doing. Ontario cheese is being offered at the present time.

Eggs.—What has been said about cheese applies to eggs as well. The situation is unaltered and they are very scarce. Jobbers are offering 25c per doz. for Manitoba fresh gathered in cases. These are being retailed at 35c per doz., while guaranteed strictly fresh are bringing as high as 45c per doz.

THE SMELL-LESS ONION.

If there can be a spineless cactus why not a smellless onion? A Chinaman named Wing Hop, who for years was an employe of the California plant wizard, Luther Burbank, claims to have developed a variety of the onion which is without an odor, though possessing all the valuable qualities of the common or garden variety of onion that advertises people who eat it. Eat the Wing Hop onion, if what is claimed for it be true, and nobody but yourself will be the wiser, for it will not scent your breath. But will the smellless onion appeal to the palate as do the varieties of onions heretofore known to man? The thing is worth looking into. Thousands of people who crave for onions in their diet, but who abjure them out of regard for society, would be very glad to experiment with the new variety.

The London, Ont. city council are considering a food protection by-law, similar to that in Toronto. The matter has been sent on to the Board of Health.

Hamilton Grocers Favor Shorter Hours

Agitation on Foot For Holiday on Wednesday Afternoon During Whole Year—Some Objection to the Idea—Different Grocers Express Their Opinion on the Matter.

Hamilton, Ont., Oct. 26.—(Special)—As in nearly every city, town and village throughout the Dominion, Hamilton grocers are giving unusual attention to the "early closing" and "shorter hours" question. There has been a feeling, well founded indeed that the hours of the grocery trade are too long and should be materially shortened.

Not alone is there a general clamoring for early closing among grocers in general at a set hour but there is now an agitation on foot for a half holiday each week during all the year, namely on Wednesday afternoon, the same as has been in practice during the summer months.

However this latter proposal is meeting with some opposition, especially by the grocers in the down town section who maintain that with other stores such as dry goods, hardware, etc., open, it would be practically impossible. Those who are backing this scheme are mostly dealers in the residential sections of the city.

One Who Favors It.

One of the big grocers who is in favor of a holiday on Wednesday afternoon when interviewed by The Grocer stated that "the retail merchants of Canada are confined altogether too much to their business and of all the retailers, the grocer is the man who has the fewest holidays. How can a man going on from week to week without a holiday expect to be in shape to deal carefully with the many business propositions, or how can he expect his clerks to put life and energy into their work?

"And I want to tell you that one of the reasons that capable men shun the grocery trade is because the hours are so long and the holidays so few. Most of the other trades have a 9 hour day with a half holiday each week and if we wish to maintain good men as clerks we must give them reasonable hours.

"In Europe there are many holidays, the merchants prosper just the same, make money and retire from business.

"In our sister colony, Australia, there has been an almost general establishment of early closing and a half holiday each week. They have lifted the grocery trade into a higher plane and we here in Canada must do the same.

"Right here in Hamilton, we have plain evidence that the idea of a weekly half holiday is workable. During the summer months the stores closed every Wednesday afternoon and I have heard no complaints that business was adversely affected. All we need is to educate the public. Other trades demand a weekly half-holiday and the public should be educated to give the grocer the same."

Opposition to Half Holiday.

Jno. Carpenter, a grocer, on Market Square, in the centre of the city is in favor of early closing but not of a weekly half-holiday. He already closes every night at six o'clock except on Saturday and the night before holidays.

"Possibly the dealers in the residential section of the city might find the idea workable but here in the business section with dry goods, hardware, jewellers, etc., keeping open, the public expect to find the groceries open also. With the department stores also open, they would get the trade while we would lose. It works all right during the summer months when all branches of trade are closed, but I do not consider it would do all the year round.

"If general early closing throughout the city was worked for, I think it would be much better."

Advocates Early Closing.

Alderman John Forth, a grocer on Queen St. in the residential section is in favor of early closing, and also of an earlier hour on Saturday night.

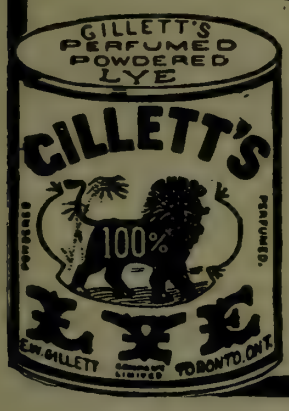
"When a man, proprietor or clerk," he said, "starts in at an early hour on Saturday morning and works until 11 at night, he does not feel like going to church next morning, or in fact he does not feel like doing anything but sleeping. Therefore, I think that an earlier hour for closing on Saturday night should be established.

"It might be secured by a by-law but I think that it is much better to attempt it by an educative campaign. It is hard work to drive the public into anything like that but they may be led."

While the matter of shorter hours has received consideration from the grocers' association for several years back, it has been prominent in discussion during the past few meetings but that is as far as it has been carried. Time will tell whether or not the Ambitious City is to be the first in Canada to adopt a weekly half holiday all the year round in the grocery trade.

Gray, Bernie & Co. have sold their general store at Listowel, Ont., to H. S. Alexander & Co., of Belleville. The firm has been established in Listowel about nine years, the business being in charge of J. W. Bernie.

GILLETT'S PERFUMED LYE



CAUTION.

Put a strong glass on the label and examine it closely every time. Always look for the name "Gillett's."

Like all good articles, which are extensively advertised, Gillett's Lye is frequently and very closely imitated. In some instances the imitators have actually copied directions and other printed matter from our label word for word. Be wise, and refuse to purchase imitation articles for they are never satisfactory.

Insist On Getting Gillett's Lye

and decline to accept anything that looks to be an imitation or that is represented to be "just as good" or "better," or "the same thing." In our experience of over fifty years in business we have never known of an imitation article that has been a success, for imitators are not reliable people. At the best the "just as good" kinds are only trashy imitations, so decline them with thanks every time.

Flour and Cereal Markets are Firm

Markets in General Strong—Another 10 Cent Advance in Manitoba Flour Announced at Some Centres — Wheat is Grading Very Low—Corn and Oats Both at a High Level—Good Season for Trade.

This week there is again a stronger tendency in flour, and another advance of 10 cents per barrel is announced at some centres, although this cannot be said to be general. Some mills in Ontario are quoting a higher price, and the product in the Maritime Provinces is also firmer. The delivery of Ontario wheat is exceedingly small, and prices on the flour made from it are somewhat higher.

Oat quotations are still on the upward trend, and in sympathy rolled oats prices are firm. The estimated yield of oats, placed at one time as high as 224,000,000 bushels, is now down to 185,000,000 bushels.

Wet weather has seriously interfered with threshing operations in the West, while the wheat coming forward is grading very low. In some sections of the trade there is a feeling that with the large yield of wheat in Canada this year, that when threshing can be commenced in full swing and deliveries become more free, that an easing off will be seen. "The slow deliveries and the poor grading is holding wheat prices up," said one dealer. "I believe that prices will have to come down to an export basis."

Others maintain that the poor grading is liable to hold prices. "If grading doesn't improve," said one such dealer, "prices will be firmly held."

Corn prices are at a high level, putting firmness in the cornmeal market. For the dealer who features these lines the present is a good season for the sale of both flour and cereals.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—The local and district demand for flour continues very favorable. Prices are firmly held, as they are lower than those of a year ago, while quotations for wheat announced by cable are higher. Enquiry from European sources for spring wheat flour have been good but do not quite meet the figures of the millers. It is noticeable that the report from Winnipeg continue, to show a large percentage of third grade wheat. The Winnipeg Free Press crop report of Sept. 4 says one communication from the west put wheat yield of three provinces at 178,650,000 bus. They are now out with 169,725,000, a loss of 8,925,000 bus., by bad weather and frost. The crop is therefore pretty big.

Cereals.—Rolled oats remain firm and in good demand; no price changes are reported. The estimated yield of oats placed some time ago at 224,000,000 is now down to 185,000,000 bus. The tone of the market is firm in sympathy with the higher prices ruling in the primary markets. The cornmeal market is also steady and has a rather firm tone.

TORONTO.

Flour.—Some mills have marked Manitoba flour prices up another 10 cents per barrel during the past week, although this change cannot be said to be general, so that prices range from $5.40 to $5.50 per barrel per car lots with an additional 10c per barrel being asked by a number of mills for flour in cotton sacks.

The future of the market is problematic. While in some quarters there prevails an opinion that prices are slated for an easy tendency, on account of the large Canadian crop and the freer deliveries expected later, there is also an opposite view taken by other millers who maintain that the present low grading of wheat coming forward is likely to hold prices steady.

Ontario flours are higher in price. Millers are complaining that they cannot secure enough Ontario wheat to keep them going. Blended varieties are ranging from $4.50 to $5.00 per barrel.

Cereals.—Quotations for cereals remain unchanged. Oat prices are still higher and there is accordingly a firmer tendency in rolled oats. There has been some further advance in prices for export. Those dealers who are pushing cereals are finding a good trade.

Fruits in Demand for Thanksgiving

Retailers Have Been Ordering in Anticipation of a Good Sale—Imported Fruits Given More Attention—New Crop Lemons on the Way—Shipment of Potatoes From West to East Reverses General Rule.

Thanksgiving and Hallowe'en are accountable for a somewhat brisker movement of fruits this week, retailers throughout the country anticipating increased sales around the holiday. Trade in domestic lines of fruits, with the exception of apples and grapes, and a few belated shipments of pears, is small. Imported lines have accordingly to be brought to the fore, in order to appease the public appetite for fruits.

Valencia oranges are on the up grade. That is, prices are. Shipments are on the wane, which with the better demand under the falling off in domestic fruits, is causing the stronger tendency. Florida oranges, the quality of which is said to be good, are now on their way to Canadian markets.

The first shipment of new crop lemons is on its way across the water, and should adorn at least the eastern Canadian markets some time next week. Prices for first arrival will no doubt be high. However, a fairly high range of values, according to importers, can be expected.

Prices of Florida grapefruit are ranging higher than last year, the yield this year being considerably smaller.

MONTREAL.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—The locks have again been snapped on the fruit market at the foot of Yonge St., the summer home of the fruit and produce merchants, and business has been transferred to their up-town quarters. Canadian peaches have served their time for this years, although Colorado, may be had at $1.50 per box. Florida grapefruit of excellent quality has arrived on the market, and is selling at $5.50 to $5.75 per case, while a recent addition to offerings is Almeria grapes at $5.50 to $6.50 per keg. There are still some of the Canadian variety obtainable, while supplies are also being brought from California. Valencia oranges are scarce and high. Indeed, one firm quotes 150s and 176s at $6.00 per case. There are some shipment of new crop Florida now on the way, and the quality is said to be good. Tomatoes are drawing to a close, while the quality is not exactly all to be desired. Lines are firmer.

Apples are quoted all the way from $2.25 to $4.00 per barrel, and supplies on the market now are quite plentiful.

Vegetables.—In past years it has been the general rule for Eastern Canada, Ontario incluutp., to ship potatoes to the West. Is this rule to be reversed? This week marks the arrival on the Toronto market of a car of Manitoba potatoes. The quality is said to be generally good, and the price will be such as to compete with Ontario stock this year. The crop in Ontario has been generally lower than elsewhere, and below the past two years. As a result there have been large supplies brought in from New Brunswick, while now a first shipment has been made from the West.

Conditions are more settled in Spain, and while shipments of onions have not returned to normal, they are expected to soon. Canadian onions are a little firmer this week.

Fresh Fruit.—Trade continues active in all these lines and in spite of the cold weather orders continue to arrive in large quantities. The crop of new lemons are on the market, and are selling at $7 a crate. California Tokay grapes have risen 25c, and are selling at $2.50 per case, while Red Rogers are going for 35c per basket. There has been no change in the apple situation except that Canadian MacKintosh Reds are now quoted at $5.50 to $6 per bbl.

Potatoes.—The supply of potatoes continues to be very plentiful and carload lots are being received every day by wholesale houses in the city. Up to the present offers have been confined to a radius of about 60 miles of Winnipeg, but in spite of this there is no scarcity and the condition also is stated to be "up to the mark." In consequence of this increased supply, prices have fallen and are now quoted at 50c per bushel.

KEEP VINEGAR ON BULK PICKLES.

"The main reason why bulk pickles go bad," said a manufacturer, "is because theretailer does not take enough care when scooping them out of the barrel or keg. Pickles will not keep unless they are covered with vinegar. Many grocers keep continually scooping out of the centre, so that there is a wall of pickles around the edge of the barrel not covered with vinegar. The result is they spoil. If they are kept well covered properly with vinegar, they will keep for any reasonable length of time."

Those grocers who have had cause to complain at any time, will probably find this the reason. They should give the necessary attention in the future.

JUST ANOTHER EXAMPLE.

"A customer of mine," remarked an Ontario grocer, "wanted a certain biscuit, which she said cost her 16c. I rang up the wholesaler and was quoted 14½c. Selling at 16c. was too small a profit, so I sent to the grocer who was offering the biscuit at 16c. to get the required pound. He only charged 16c., but when I placed them on the scale, I found he was charging 18c. per pound."

Just another example of those who cannot last long, but who demoralize the trade while they are in business.

Fish - Oysters

Supplies of Fish None Too Plentiful

Shipments of Such Lines as Fillets and Haddies are Slow While Unfavorable Weather Has Interfered With The Catch of Fresh Fish—Frozen Lines are More in Evidence—Weather Not Exactly Favorable for Trade.

The weather is not exactly all that could be desired to be most beneficial to the fish trade. There is a fair movement of general lines, but the briskness that real cool weather would bring is not in evidence.

Supplies of a number of lines are none too plentiful. It seems somewhat difficult to secure shipments of fillets, haddies, and kindred lines, from the eastern provinces. Receipts of fish on the east coast have been rather small, owing to unfavorable weather. The halibut catch has been small owing to stormy weather, and the frozen article is being used. Offerings are turning more from the fresh to frozen varieties, as for instance, the season for fresh pike and pickerel is over, and the frozen article is now going out.

Oysters are moving fairly well, but in this line also, the weather is not exactly favorable.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—While the fine weather may appeal to people in general, it is not very encouraging to the fish trade. Business has been fair but there has been lacking that impetus which regular cold weather contributes. In fresh fish there is a noticeable advance in the price of halibut, arising from stormy weather on the coast and consequent scarcity due to the delay in operations. Lower prices are not expected for some time. In the meantime supplies of frozen halibut will have to meet the demand. Steak cod is likewise none too plentiful, but other fish are in fairly good supply. The season for fresh pike and pickerel is completed, but supplies of frozen will have to serve the trade. The quality is good and should give satisfaction. Among the lines of smoked fish, fancy haddies and fillets, too, are not over plentiful. New fancy haddies are bringing a rather high figure. Oysters are in good demand and will move more rapidly and steadily as soon as the cold weather has arrived for the season.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—Fish are moving out quite freely for the season and real cool weather would start a good many more retailers handling this line. Oysters are meeting with a good reception. Labrador herrings are firmer at $6.00 for barrels. Supplies from the eastern coast are hard to get, there being a scarcity of fillets, haddies and kindred lines reported at the present. There is a plenitude of fresh caught trout, however.

Dear Mr. Merchant:

It's well to be careful about these things in connection with your oyster business:—

See that your oysters come from communities that produce oysters with the best flavor and that these oysters mature sufficiently firm to retain that flavor for the longest time possible. See that shipment is made in the most sanitary package obtainable; and that the oysters are refrigerated at a low temperature, and also protected from freezing. And be sure you display them attractively.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—A good run of mackerel struck in on the Nova Scotia coast last week. At Canso, one day, fifteen thousand fish were taken. At some other places smaller catches were made. The fish are large and fat. Mackerel are now in excellent demand, and the fish caught this week found a ready sale. Some of them were shipped on ice to Boston, and the balance were placed on sale on the local market.

The receipts of fish here during the past week have been comparatively light. Haddock continue scarce, and only small quantities of halibut are offered for sale. The weather has been unfavorable for the fishermen, and this is mainly the reason for the falling off in the receipts. Fresh fish, however, outside of mackerel are in light demand at present. The salt article is selling much more freely, herring in particular.

The price of salt codfish remains unchanged. The receipts have been light this week, but some large cargoes are now on the way. One steamer, now due from St. John's, Newfoundland, has 4,500 quintals on board. This is one of the largest shipments of the season.

Fishermen on the west coast of Newfoundland held a meeting this week and advanced the price of herring. According to government regulations, the price is $1.25 per barrel, that is, they cannot catch them for less than that figure, which has been the standard for several seasons on green goods. The fishermen went on record as binding themselves not to sell this coming season at that figure. They agreed not to sell any American or Nova Scotia herring at less than $1.50 per barrel, this price to hold until December 15, and after that date the price is not to be less than two dollars per barrel.

POTATOES IN MANITOBA.

Two million bushels more of potatoes are expected to be raised in Manitoba this year than last. Some shipments have been made to Ontario, while last year Ontario shipped west.

The imports into New Zealand from Canada for the quarter ending June 30, amounted to $244,620, an increase of $9,285 over the corresponding period of last year.

Canadian Goods Now Going to England

Our Fruit Being Well Received — Canadian Canned Apples and Pears on the British Market—Canned Salmon and Lobster Among Our Exports—Prospects for Onions and Condensed Milk.

Leeds, England, Oct. 25.—Inquiries are being made by local importers as to the extent of the cultivation of onions in Canada with a view to their export to this market. In former years Canadian growers have been at a disadvantage owing to the proximity and consequently cheaper prices quoted by shippers on the Continent. This year, however, the hot and dry summer is reported to have been very unfavorable to the crops in Holland and Silesia, which together with Spain, are the chief sources from which supplies are sent to the English market. The prices quoted by Hamburg shippers already show an upward tendency and during the coming winter onions are expected to command enhanced prices. For shipment to this market it is suggested that onions could be packed in barrels to hold about 168 pounds, the top and bottom being slightly perforated to keep the contents in cool condition.

Arrangements for Canadian Fruit.

The crop of English apples has turned out larger than was at one time expected and liberal supplies are now on sale in the local markets. The fruit is of varied character, some being exceedingly small in size, while, on the other hand, arrivals from certain districts are of satisfactory quality. It is expected that these supplies will be finishing about the time the Canadian apples begin to arrive.

Some local firms have already concluded arrangements with Canadian apple exporters for shipments this season, and others are now in correspondence with exporters on information furnished by this office. Canadian shippers who may be desirous of increasing their business on this side should correspond with this office, giving particulars as to the quantities they wish to send and other details, which information will be placed before reputable firms.

Local merchants are also looking forward to a continuance this season of the shipments of dessert pears from Canada. The trade in this class of fruit, so far as this district is concerned, was initiated last year, when a number of boxes of fine looking fruit were sent direct to Leeds and disposed of with results which were regarded as entirely satisfactory to the shippers and receivers interested.

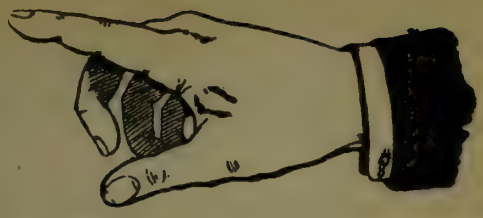
Canadian Canned Goods.

Certain lines of canned goods put up by Canadian firms are coming more into evidence on this market. In fruits, a progressive trade is being done in canned apples in tins holding approximately one gallon. These are supplied mainly to restaurants, hotels and boarding houses, and at present three Canadian brands are on sale. Canned 'Bartlett' pears of Canadian origin have also been introduced on to this market.

In fish, British Columbia canned salmon is largely sold under various labels, but the demand for canned lobster among the public is now a limited one owing to the enhanced price ruling. Canada, however, continues to do the largest trade with the British market in this class of goods, and last year contributed 84 per cent. of the imports.

Condensed Milk and Canned Meats.

At present, the condensed milk sold in this district comes mainly from Holland and Switzerland and so far as can be ascertained, no condensed milk of Canadian manufacture is on sale although inquiries regarding the trade have been received at this office in the past from Canadian firms. Canned tomatoes are chiefly of Italian origin although there is one brand put up by an Ontario firm which is sometimes seen. The import of canned meats from Canada to this market is but small in comparison with those received from other sources.



It may be stated, however, that the trade done in this class of goods has fully recovered from the set-back of a few years ago, the opinions expressed by merchants indicating that this article is more than ever a necessity to the large industrial population in this part of England.

PECULIAR LEGAL CASE.

An interesting case came up in an English court recently, when one grocer sued another for damages, by reason of having given the plaintiff a false character of an employe. The plaintiff was awarded £21 while the employe had only absconded with £14 12s 3d, the balance being for expenses incurred in searching for him.

The judge stated it appeared to him that the defendant, having knowledge of the clerk's dishonesty, when he was asked by the plaintiff if he knew anything against him, while not necessarily answering the question, could have given such a reply as would have put the plaintiff on his guard.

When placing your order for Canned Fish, be sure you have the name right:

The Grocer's Encyclopedia—Cranberry

Interesting Features About the Growth of the Cranberry—Grown in Swamp But Requires Considerable Attention—Cape Cod the Largest Producer—Also Grown in Certain Sections of Canada.

It is but early in the fall when the sumach is turning a brilliant scarlet, and down in the swamp the foliage is sending forth a blaze of color, that swamps on Cape Cod take on an air of briskness. It is again cranberry picking time, and the residents of that district are about to go forth to gather a renumerative harvest, that of the cranberry.

Whole families, women and men, boys and girls turn out to assist in the work. Besides the profitable side of the cranberry period, with the hard work it entails, it is made a time of merriment, and is somewhat akin to the husking bees so well known in Canada.

Industry Sixty Years Old.

It was about 60 years ago that a Cape Cod resident saw the possibilities of cranberry growing. He began by planting a few vines, was successful, and kept at it. The result is, that the Cape Cod cranberry industry is now a large one, and there the greatest amount are produced.

There is, perhaps, no other place in the country with so many bogs as on Cape Cod. Bogs require hard physical labor, such as weeding, fighting insects, rot and frost. There is also the flooding of the bog, which plays so important a part in the preservation of the berry.

Bogs are rather expensive too, as the first four years of their existence only small profits or none are realized. In the latter part of each May, the swamps are flooded to drown out the insects. This is repeated again in June. They are flooded for the winter some time in November or December, for the safety of the vines.

Fires to Prevent Frost.

Some years when the berries have developed and are about ready for picking, it is necessary to keep fires burning around the edge of the bogs, in order to keep the berries from being damaged by frost.

As has been said, Cape Cod is the largest producer of cranberries. The yield in Wisconsin is also considerable. In Canada, both Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island are quite large growers of the berry. In North Ontario, in the neighborhood of Parry Sound, they also grow, and in fact the cranberry, or bogberry, as it has been called, can be grown in almost any swampy place if given proper attention.

Cranberry picking is hard work. The picker has to creep along the low vines in a stooping manner all day. Then too, the fingers get wounded by the brambles on the vines, and have to be protected by gloves.

Various Brands.

One of the most noted brands of the cranberry is the Early Blacks. Usually these command high prices, because they are the first to go on the market. Then comes Mathews, the Howes, the Early Reds and the Bells. The choicest berries are always hand-picked as then there is no danger of bruising them.

The cranberry, besides its food value, market for some time, but with the cooler weather it is generally in even greater demand, and now is a profitable season for the grocer to feature it.

The cranberry, besides it food value, like other varieties of fruit, is of great assistance in the digestion of other foods.

CURRANT JELLY FROM GREECE.

Glucose to be Admitted Free Till 1925—Provides Outlet for Surplus Currants.

New York, Oct. 26.—The National Assembly of Greece during its closing session enacted an amendment to the tariff law in virtue of which glucose may be admitted into Greece free of duty, when intended for manufacture into sweets for export.

The action greatly facilitates the operation of a recently drawn contract, by which a Greek firm is to manufacture currant jelly in Greece on an extensive scale for export to the United States, utilizing as an important ingredient American glucose furnished by a New York firm. The arrangement, which looks to the establishment of a number of currant jelly plants in Greece, extends to 1925. It permits the use of 12,000 tons of glucose the first year, and increasing amounts in the future, as the development of the business warrants.

This is intended to have the double effect of providing a market in Greece for this important American corn product, and of enabling the Greek company concerned, to dispose of a portion of the annual surplus of the currant crop, which it is under contract to take from the privileged company. It will also promote the sale of glasses, jars and other containers, labels, etc., from the United States, since it is the idea of the parties to the undertaking to obtain all this material from United States.

The last bag going out meets the first bag coming in

FIVE ROSES never outstays its welcome.
Each bag is a transient visitor—
A paying guest.
It comes with a profit for you—delivers it—moves on.
Not a minute longer does it stay.
Remember, its a full profit you get from FIVE ROSES.
With nothing taken off for storage charges, long time insurance, idle capital, deterioration, and other expenses of slow-moving stuff.
FIVE ROSES never falls in love with your shelves.
Its character is active, energetic, pushful.
It simply must keep on the move — naturally a quick seller.
Regular as clockwork are your FIVE ROSES sales.
Each bag is a link of uniform satisfaction in the rapidly moving drive-chain of your permanent patronage.
And as this chain moves faster, the bags move faster through your hands.
And the movement is quickened because—
Each bag is a salesman which never misrepresents.
The language FIVE ROSES speaks is unmistakeable — the housewife hears and heeds.

Each bag from your store increases the kitchen happiness from the bag that has gone before it—and that's Goodwill.
It opens wide the sales door for the goods that will come after it—and that's Confidence.
Stretching from the mill doors to your store, there's a long line of FIVE ROSES sales waiting for YOUR door to open.
There's an equally long line of profit opportunities between many expectant housewives and you.
Let your store be the missing link.
Let it be the point where FIVE ROSES meets the user—
Where the profit is really made.
Sell FIVE ROSES—cash in on its splendid reputation, its purity, its uniformity.
Thousands of successful retailers—just like you—never knew the really profitable side of flour sales till FIVE ROSES showed the way.
This steady, clock-like profit—is business so very good that you can ignore it?
Write our nearest office—or ask your jobber.
Now is the time to be more prosperous.
Don't delay.

Weston's Biscuits

Your trade in Biscuits will be a steady one if you are handling the Weston line of Fancy Biscuits. They are absolutely unequalled in quality of ingredients used in their manufacture.

They cannot get stale for reason of that excellent quality that keeps up a steady demand for them, besides they are packed in very handsome air-tight tins.

Perfection has only been attained after many years of steady experiment, and to-day the Weston Co. are housed in a modern factory of cleanliness and light, which for size and appearance will compare with any factory in Canada.

An interesting feature of this modern structure is the fact that the ovens are built and operated on the top floor, thus preventing the biscuits being subjected to the influence of heat and gas, as must happen when ovens are on the ground floor.

If you are not yet handling the Weston line of Fancy Biscuits, order a stock NOW. Quality always counts—and it will bring its reward.

Why Not Make Your Full Profit?

Being a good fellow when selling cheese is not going to make that department pay. As long as you continue to measure cheese by GUESS-WORK, give the customer the little extra that you cut off, or if you leave it to dry up and waste, you are going to be a loser in the matter of cheese sales. Modern Store Economy has supplied a remedy, that is simple to operate, and accurate in its work.

MEASURES EXACTLY

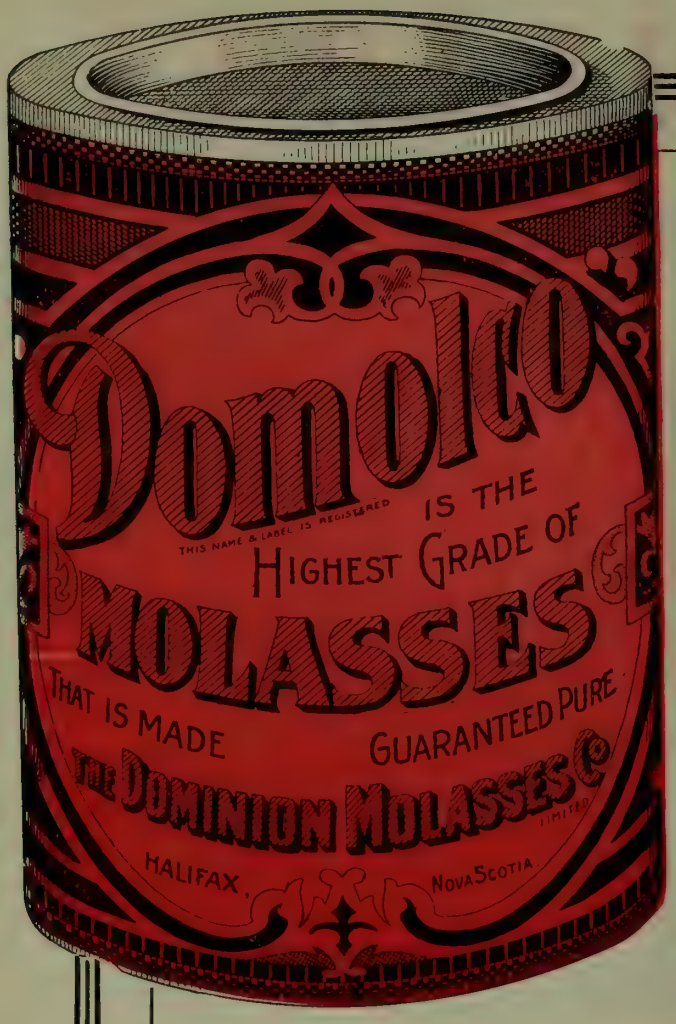
The Perfection Cheese Cutter

Makes every piece cut show its own profit. It insures you against careless and wasteful clerks.

No figuring required. Directions—Set the price mark on one scale opposite the weight on the other, turn the thumbscrew and it is ready for business. Each raise of the small lever to the stop turns five cents' worth of cheese under the knife.

PROTECTS THE CHEESE

Automatic Cutter Cabinet



A handsome glass and wood cabinet, highly polished, very practical, adding greatly to the appearance of the store. It keeps the cheese in the most sanitary manner. The Perfection Cheese Cutter is well made, of the best material, and will last a lifetime.

The unusual price we ask for such a fixture will surprise you. Send for Particulars. We manufacture cheese cutters for all countries.

STOP

LETTING GOOD MONEY SLIP THROUGH YOUR FINGERS!

Of course, you don't mean to let your profits leak away, but why don't you STOP IT?

If you let an item of $1.00 each week slip by without being charged that means a loss of $52.00 for the year.

If you let $1.00 each week SLIP THROUGH YOUR FINGERS in settling DISPUTED ACCOUNTS that means you must sell $260.00 worth of goods to make up for it.

If you are using some drop-leaf SLIP system where several accounts are exposed at the same time, and lose slips (representing money), get accounts mixed, bring forward wrong past accounts, and possibly, to cap the climax, lose all your accounts in a fire, you may not be able to estimate your loss,—but why bother then—it's too late.

CUT IT OUT—NOW!!

It will stop FORGOTTEN CHARGES on account of the NUMBERING FEATURE. No other system has this feature.
It will absolutely prevent disputes—ask us why.
It will positively prevent losing of slips, mixing of accounts, and manipulation of charges.

Use Your Advantage

The Grocer Has a Distinct Advantage Over the Tea Peddler

Women have an instinctive dislike for peddlers, tea peddlers included. Women buy tea from peddlers in spite of this dislike, simply because the peddler has what seems to be better tea at a better price than the grocer.

It stands to reason that if you can offer your customers a better tea proposition than peddlers you can win back your own tea trade. You can do this by selling

"Maybell Ceylon Tea"
in 5 and 10 lb. Lead-lined Decorated Chests

We aim to point out where YOU possess a distinct advantage over any PEDDLER and to suggest a means by which you can make the most of it. The advantage is this:

When YOU are talking to a customer, she is in your store VOLUNTARILY and is open to suggestion. On the other hand, when she opens the door to a PEDDLER her attitude is usually ANTAGONISTIC.

Now it is obvious that if, when you have a customer voluntarily in your store, you can offer her as good a tea proposition as the peddler, you can practically bank on getting her order.

That's reasonable, isn't it?

And we know we can put you in the way of offering your customers a MUCH BETTER tea proposition than any peddler in the country.

"Maybell Ceylon Tea"
in 5 and 10 lb. Lead-lined Decorated Chests

Packed also in 50 to Half-chests.

The prices at which you can get "Maybell" Tea, the splendid quality of it, together with the specially attractive chests, containing just the quantity country housekeepers prefer to buy, make this Maybell Tea Chest Proposition the ONE SURE METHOD of regaining your tea trade from the peddling fraternity.

NOTE THESE PRICES

5-lb. Boxes, 8 to a case, 24c. per lb.
10-lb. Boxes, 4 to a case, 23½c. per lb.

These prices enable you to meet the average peddler in price, if you want to; and they certainly DO yield you a better margin of PROFIT than any line of package on the market.

If you are interested in putting tea peddlers out of business in your locality, just give this "Maybell" Tea Proposition a fair trial. You will be amazed at the good results.

Gentlemen:—

I am the proprietor of a general store and have used your Quinquinol for my own horses. Having found it most satisfactory, I wish to sell it to my customers. Please send me four dozen tins, and if my goods from Hudon and Orsali are not already shipped you can place yours with them.

I am, yours truly, W. LEROUX.

THREE DIPLOMAS GAINED

The only Stock Food awarded diplomas at Three Rivers, Sherbrooke and Ottawa Exhibitions. Recommended by the Minister of Agriculture.

ONE DEALER WANTED IN EACH TOWN

We will only sell our goods to one dealer in each town. Are you going to be that one and have the whole territory for yourself? If so, get in touch right away as we are booking orders for next spring and dividing territory. We must do it in advance as we have a large amount of "Quinquinol" to turn out every year.

QUINQUINOL IS DIFFERENT

entirely from other Stock Foods. It is packed in tins, and attractive ones at that, so that no loss can take place from vermin or moisture. You can "money-back" the goods if customers are not satisfied. But we have never had any complaints from dealers.

Register Now. Exclusive Territory means an Increase in your Spring Stock.

System in Keeping Oils Brings Increased Trade

The most rigid, cleanly methods must be adopted nowadays to make storekeeping a success. Is it not right that the public patronize a grocery where cleanliness is first thought—wherein lies the store's success?

Oil improperly cared for in a grocery will make itself a menace to that store's success, but if stored in a

INCREASE YOUR FALL AND XMAS TRADE.

The retail grocer is now upon the threshold of one of the best seasons of the year.

There is usually more money afloat at this time than at any other. The farmer is turning the fruits of his summer's work into dollars and cents, and in many cases is laying in winter supplies.

Christmas is less than two months distant, and there is no necessity to elaborate on what this greatest of all festive seasons brings forth.

It remains for each individual dealer to make every effort to increase his business beyond the figures of last year. Waiting for demand will never bring increased trade. One must go out after the business—not simply hand over the goods asked for like some mechanical device.

Advertising in its broad sense must be done. Advertise the store, the goods, and the service, at every possible opportunity. Not merely on paper, but by putting forward best efforts to send away satisfied customers.

In succeeding pages of this, our annual Fall Campaign Number, are scores of actual methods in use all over Canada for selling goods beyond actual demand and the giving of adequate service. Each of our readers should sift out what is best for him, and probably by the application of some of the principles laid down by other Canadian retailers, he may be better fitted to carry to a successful conclusion his fall and Christmas campaign.

Let us know what you think of this issue.

FROM ALMOST EVERY PROVINCE.

Results of our competition on why and how confectionery should be given attention in the grocery store appear elsewhere in this issue and the prize articles submitted are worth attention. These cover pretty well the points the dealer should feature in handling this line and will be read with profit.

The particular feature in the replies to this contest is the fact that every province in Canada is represented, except Prince Edward Island. Newfoundland was represented, too, and, moreover, was successful in carrying off first prize. Those who study the arguments of the winners will find much food for thought and will understand why the honors were given to them.

Other articles are also good, and we only regret we have not in this issue the opportunity of presenting more of them. In future issues it is our intention to publish some of those worthy of special mention.

THE WESTERN WHEAT CROP SITUATION.

The weather has brought little improvement in wheat conditions throughout the entire west, except that sharp frosts have been prevailing the last three nights and these may possibly indicate a return to a period of dry weather. Threshing has been resumed and is in full progress wherever climatic conditions are favorable, and results show that in many districts better returns are being obtained than was anticipated a week ago.

From many points in Saskatchewan, however, reports of low-grade wheat are prevalent, although the yield remains fairly high. Those farmers who have an opportunity of threshing have taken advantage of the high prices. The supply of Nos. 1 and 2 Northern appears, however, to be decidedly limited and it is a matter of speculation at the present time among wheat authorities as to whether much higher prices will now prevail for these two lines. The terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur have announced that they will not be responsible for damp wheat and that they will not store it after the close of navigation, which is expected to take place within a month, without being treated.

Much speculation is being indulged in at the present time as to the facilities at the head of the lakes for drying the enormous quantity of damp wheat in the country, and there is an increase during the week in the low-grade and rejected columns.

WINDOW DRESSING AND AD. CONTEST.

On another page of this issue is the announcement of The Grocer's annual Christmas Window Display and Ad.-writing competitions.

Opportunity is afforded every dealer and clerk at this time of the year to use originality. The Christmas season is the most festive of the year. There is no dearth of goods available for a good display. Plan early for a window that is attractive and that will sell goods. Decide now to enter our competition, and even in the rush of the Christmas trade don't forget to have a photographer get you a good picture.

Mail it to us before the last day of the year, and forward also one or more of your best Christmas newspaper advertisements. Read all about the two competitions on page 192.

DIRTY BASKET SPOILS A SALE.

Dealers striving for success must learn sooner or later that they cannot afford to lose a customer through unsanitary conditions about the store.

Here is an actual case where a sale was lost on account of uncleanly habits. Not only that, but the customer will not in future have many good words for such a store.

The purchaser in question, in giving her regular order, asked the proprietor if he had any breakfast bacon. There was none in sight. He wasn't sure; he thought he had, and pulled an old dirty basket from beneath the counter. There was bacon in it.

But—he didn't make the sale. The customer saw the basket and that was the end of it.

"I don't believe I do want any bacon to-day, after all," she politely said; "I remember now I have some left," and went off without it.

CONSTRUCTIVE VS. DESTRUCTIVE SALESMANSHIP.

We have heard a great deal about constructive salesmanship. Everything that aids in the making of sales, or, more properly, in the making and holding of customers, is included.

There is a variety of salesmanship that makes sales but does not build for the future. That might be defined as "destructive salesmanship."

Examples of it are not lacking, nor are they few. This method is employed by those who can see only the immediate profit, but not the greater loss which lies ahead.

We find a dealer at times recommending goods which he really knows should not be recommended, or about which he knows absolutely nothing. We find him at times stretching the truth in his personal talks, or in his advertising. We find him sending goods to customers which lack in quality, and even at times we will find him using what he may term "tricks of the trade," but which verge upon dishonesty.

All these methods may be included in "destructive salesmanship," the kind that may bring a little larger profit at the time, but which breaks down the confidence of the customer in the merchant, and eventually brings loss to the merchant.

The merchant himself must choose which method he will adhere to in his business, constructive or destructive salesmanship. It is his pleasure to make a choice. In making that choice he should consider the experiences of others. He will, if he is wise, decide on the method that not only makes sales, but holds customers.

DEFINITE CLOSING HOURS FOR DELIVERY.

The early-closing movement gathers weight as it moves along, and a greater number of merchants all over the Dominion are coming to the conclusion that keeping their stores open to late hours every night does not pay—that just as much business can be done through concentrated hours as spreading it over many.

Barrie and Orillia, Ont., have had early-closing for some time now, all the grocery stores closing at six o'clock week evenings and eleven Saturday night.

But Barrie added a new feature in its rule of early closing of orders for delivery. All orders intended for delivery on the day received must be in by five o'clock on week days and by seven o'clock on Saturday evening, else the goods will have to wait until the next business morning.

This allows the driver to get away on his route by 5.30 on week days and 7.30 on Saturdays for his last delivery, and allows him to get through his work at a reasonable hour, as well as guaranteeing to the purchaser an early delivery of goods.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The cover design of this, our annual Fall Campaign Number, is worthy of attention. It is the work of F. S. Coburn, the artist who illustrated Dr. W. H. Drummond's famous "Habitant" and his other French-Canadian poems.

The egg carriers now in use by many Canadian grocers are well thought of by the trade. They are handy and safe, and therefore save money.

The Business Situation In Canada

The business outlook in Canada at the present time, in the opinion of those most competent to judge, could scarcely be improved upon. There is ample money for all legitimate requirements; there is large expansion in railroad building, and in ordinary building; crops on the whole have been excellent, and immigration continues on a large scale, and, finally, the English market, which had shut its doors to our securities during the past two months or so, has again improved its position to such an extent that it is willing to take them.

The expansion of railroad building, of course, depends directly on the London market, for it is there that the railroads sell their securities which they issue to raise the money for new branch lines and improvements on old ones. The immigration not only gives us more mouths to feed, but it gives the railroad companies the large westward haul of goods and chattels, which offsets, to a small extent, the heavy eastward traffic in grain and cattle. This means that the railroads can employ more men and spend more money in other ways, with the result that Canada profits doubly.

An Optimistic View.

The eastern daily press has been busy since August killing the western crops, and as a result many otherwise well-informed people who are dependent on the daily papers for their western news, are decidedly depressed over the outlook for the coming year. The general managers of the various banks, however, are in a very different frame of mind. The largest of those doing an extensive business in the west is fairly bubbling with optimism. Easy money conditions abroad and in the United States, and our own carefully-laid plans for financing the heavy grain movement this fall, have combined to leave money easier than it has been at the corresponding time in a number of years, and, therefore, their worries are smaller than formerly. This enables them to look on the western situation without other misgivings to influence their attitude, with the result, as previously stated, may be summed up in the two words, "optimism and satisfaction."

No doubt, of course, many districts have been injured, and in many places there will be heavy loss on the crop, with the result that payments on mortgages and on accounts of commercial contracts will be slow. But the mortgage companies are not worrying, as the treasurer of one of the largest Canadian insurance companies remarked to the writer last week: "Of course, there are a number of districts where the re-payments on account of principal will probably not be made this year, and perhaps interest will be in arrears in a number of cases. But," he continued, "we would rather have our money out bearing interest, and we can still afford to forego the relatively small amount of interest arrears from the few districts that have been hailed out, or destroyed by frost."

Meantime, the insurance companies are borrowing from the banks in order to loan the money out west, in anticipation of future premiums. This is a customary movement at this period of the year, and the fact that it is not lessened in the present year shows that not only the banks, but the insurance companies, approve of the western business which the latter have been doing.

From Millers' Standpoint.

The millers, however, are not so optimistic. They probably are influenced by the fact that there will not be the amount of high-grade milling wheat commensurate with the tremendous total yield. In the case of one large eastern milling concern it would appear that they loaded up with wheat at a time when the western crop promised to be very small and are now rather taken aback with the outlook for a substantial yield, though naturally their attitude also was biased. The others, however, appear to look on the western situation with equinamity, which is doubtless the result of finding that their earlier judgment of the situation at present coincides with events. On the whole, conditions are satisfactory in Canada, although the delay in getting out the western wheat has caused some uneasiness by the requests for the expansion of credit. Again the banks display a cheerful tone.

Effect of Strike in England.

The strike in England has had a serious effect on Canada in two ways; the first indirectly through its effect on the English security markets; the other directly through the difficulty Canadian wholesalers have in obtaining goods ordered from England. A few weeks ago one wholesaler complained to the writer that he had orders for ten cars of coffee which he could not obtain from the shippers, owing to the fact that, so far as he could tell, it was still lying on the wharves at Liverpool, as the shippers were giving right of way to perishable freight, and it would take them some time to catch up. This strike has also affected prices on other goods of this class, and the result is that it is quite possible there may be a shortage of some during the next few weeks.

The dullness in trade in the United States has had little effect on Canada, except in the west, where the dumping of cheaper grades of United States lumber, regardless of cost, and in some parts of Ontario, where the cement industry has suffered from the same cause, have been the chief effects. Probably to this cause, too, must be assigned the dullness in the asbestos industry in Quebec, which is dependent, to a large degree, on the building trade in the United States, where the greatest consumption of asbestos takes place.

Ease in Money Situation.

On the other hand, the ease of money in the United States, combined with that in Europe, has reacted favorably on us here, and the result is that money here is quite easily obtainable, contrary to the usual condition of things at this period of the year.

Everything considered, therefore, the outlook is very bright. Ontario crops, of course, suffered severely from the drought, but Ontario is in a better position to stand the off year than most parts of the country, owing to the very good yield it had a year ago.

KEEP STOCK FRESH.

To begin the fall season well, a first consideration is the quality of the stock that has been on the shelves during the past summer. Some of them may not have been sold and others may not have been brought in from the store room.

The fact is that some grocers carry large stocks and there is the possibility of them overlapping and some goods may become stale. This applies to package currants, jams, rolled oats and similar goods.

A grocer recently found two glasses of jam in such a condition that he had to throw them away. He had purchased them before the summer set in and it must be remembered that the weather was intensely hot at times. This grocer, in referring to the fact, blamed the weather. A package or two of rolled oats was also in such a condition that a customer might not have appreciated them.

Long Hours Not Necessary to Success

Dealer Proves Explicitly in Facts and Figures That Just as Much Business Can be Done in Shorter Hours—Public Need to be Educated—Has Always Closed at Six Except Saturday—If Grocers Maintain Long Hours They Cannot Expect Good Men to Enter Business—Other Trades Have Shorter Hours.

THE belief that to be successful in the grocery business you must open your store at sun rise and close only when the last night loafer might choose to go homeward has been steadily losing ground in recent years. Still there remain grocers who call themselves business men who continue to be slaves to the business by continuing the long hours that make the business anything but pleasant.

In many cases we find the dealer from early morning until late at night, six days out of the week, both winter and summer confined within the four walls of his store with nothing on his mind but business. Is it any wonder if the mind gets clogged and that "Don't care" feeling shows itself? When considered seriously it is perhaps the retailer's own fault, as he had got into the habit and makes no effort to change or improve affairs.

Former Wholesaler's Opinion.

Neil Carmichael, grocer, 1212 Yonge street, Toronto, is a strong advocate of short hours. While he has only been in the retail end of the trade for the past year and a half, over a quarter of a century's connection with different lines of the grocery trade has made him conversant with all the details pertaining to it.

"If I could not conduct my business on an early closing basis, I would quit," he says. "Every grocer, unless circumstances connected with his trade are most unusual, can do just as much business by closing early every night."

This is a strong statement of Mr. Carmichael, but he backs it up by facts and figures showing that a dealer may close every night and be just as far ahead in the end.

Decided to Close at Six.

Mr. Carmichael took over the present business a year ago last April. The store had been kept open every night until around ten o'clock by his predecessor. He had studied the problem from all standpoints, and determined to close every night at six o'clock, barring Saturday.

What was the result of this determination on his part? Did sales fall off or the business decrease as other dealers often fear will be the case under similar conditions.

$1,200 Per Month Increase.

Striking an average for five months from April 1st, his business this year in spite of or probably in view of closing early, has increased at the rate of $1,200 per month. No better proof that shorter hours does not affect business could be asked for. He was operating against odds too, being a new man in the retail business. Many of the surrounding dealers kept open, while his store too had previously been a "long hours" one.

The Clerk Who Expended His Energy Working Late the Night Before.

From Seven to Six.

"There should be shorter hours in the grocery business than is generally the rule," maintains Mr. Carmichael. "A man should be able to do a day's work from seven in the morning until six at night, and business could be confined to those hours if the merchants only decided on this course and educated their customers along the same line. No merchant, or his clerks, can do a day's work and do it properly if he has been working until all hours the night before. For that reason it is wise that the grocer confine himself to shorter hours.

"People may think you independent by refusing to supply them with food at all hours of the day or night. I do not mind catering to the public because that is what we are here for, but I do not believe in being a slave for them."

A Labor Day's Conversation.

"Will you be open on Labor Day?" inquired a woman customer, prior to that holiday.

"No, we certainly will not," he replied, "We close on Labor Day."

"Oh," replied the customer, "you seem to be very independent."

"Is your husband going to work on Labor Day?"

"No, he is not," she replied.

"Well neither are we," he said, "we like to have a day off just the same as everyone else."

Thus, Mr. Carmichael has stuck firmly to the idea of putting his business above the drudgery state into a higher plane. "I would not stay open after six o'clock for any money," he says, and he is a man who appears to mean what he says.

Long Hours Make Poor Clerks.

He attributes a good portion of the poor clerk problem to the long hours in the business. "The hours are so long," he maintains, "that we cannot get men who would make good clerks to engage in it. The grocery business has got the reputation of slavish hours and young men avoid it. In other walks of life, a nine-hour day is the general rule, and to these the young men are attracted.

"I remember when I began to learn the grocery business in a small town; I had to get down at ridiculously early hours and remain until late at night. It was then that the germ of shorter hours in the business began to grow, when I looked at it from the viewpoint of the clerk, and now that I am engaging clerks myself I have some consideration for them.

"Leaving out the matter of principle, I believe it is to the advantage of the grocer to give his clerks shorter hours because in the time they are at the store, they can do much better work. How can the merchant expect the clerk to put life into his work when his energy is about all expended working late the night before? Then, again, we cannot expect to retain good men in the business unless we give them decent hours."

Interior View of Handsome New Store of Fraser, Viger & Co., Montreal.

Realizes Value of Modern Fixtures

Big Montreal Firm In Erecting New Store Show Appreciation of Facilities for Displaying Goods and Giving High-Grade Service—Fixtures Include Quarter Cut Oak Fittings, Meat Slicer, Electric Coffee Grinder, Display Bins for Rice, Spices, Cereals, etc., Electric Cash Register, Large Refrigerator, Several Show Cases, Banana Rack and Vegetable Display Fountain.

THE steady advancement of the grocery business is best illustrated by the new ideas, the splendid equipment and the general improvements that are found in the new stores. Grocers long established are more likely to be satisfied with their place of business. They are slow to replace old counters with new ones, and are for the most part content to continue business as they have been accustomed to it.

But the new store opens with the latest notions in shelving, bins, show cases and general equipment. Labor saving devices are all to be found in the bright new store of to-day, and it is by visiting one of these that you come to realize the advancement that is being made from year to year in the good old grocery trade.

Fraser, Viger & Co. have opened an uptown branch on Laurier Avenue, Montreal, the heart of one of the best residential districts in Canada's largest city. The wisdom of the choice of this situation is proven by the success that has attended the venture during the past two months. That part of the city is being rapidly settled, and it was with the intention of catering to many of these newcomers, and also to the store's customers in that section that the branch was opened. As stated above, it has already proved its worth and is a testimony to the business instinct of those who planned it.

Quartered Oak Fittings.

The store fittings are in keeping with the class of trade catered to. Fraser, Viger & Co. stock groceries of the highest quality and they have been displayed to good advantage by the equipment that has been installed. The shelving is of quartered oak and the counters are of the same material. Six showcases are very noticeable to those who appreciate good store fittings, which means practically every customer. More will be said of these showcases later.

Use Modern Meat Slicer.

A short counter on one side has been devoted to meats and provisions. It is close to the refrigerator and is therefore convenient when orders for provisions, including butter and cheese, are being made up. A marble slab on the counter of this department is a good idea. It can be kept clean easily and it always looks neat and appealing to the customer. A modern meat cutter is naturally a feature of the department.

Have Electric Coffee Grinder.

Coffee is a leader in this store and special arrangements have been provided to ensure the entire satisfaction of customers. To begin with an electric coffee grinder has been installed in a conspicuous part of the store. A customer gives her order for a pound of her favorite coffee and it is ground while she waits. Thus has modern science invaded the grocery business. But the usual method is to grind a certain amount of coffee every morning. Five different grades are commonly sold. On a counter a large round tin divided into compartments is used for this coffee and as one kind is ground it is placed in its section of the tin, similarly with the next until the usual amount is ready for the day's requirements.

Often it is found necessary to grind another supply early in the afternoon. By this means the coffee is always fresh and the customer may have it ground as fine or coarse as desired.

Fine System of Bins.

The system of bins in this store is perhaps the finest and most complete the writer has ever seen. They are behind the main counter and provide for almost everything. In the lowest row the individual bins are large and roomy.

They are devoted to rolled oats, graham flour and similar goods. The second row is composed of smaller bins and there is another tier of still smaller bins. It would seem impossible to think of another article to be provided for. Rice, tapioca, spices, nuts—they are all there.

The bins enhance the appearance of that part of the store, and especially do they delight one who realizes just what such a system means in the store management. Above them are shelves for canned and bottled goods, such as pickles, catsups, sauces, jams, etc.

Electric Cash Register.

An excellent fixture is one of the latest types of cash registers. It works by electricity and combines all the features that are now indispensable to this particular system of taking care of the cash and performing the other valuable duties of the register. This one in particular makes it easy to find the amounts of the sales made by the clerks. This is only one of the accomplishments. It is compact and neat and fits well with the general quality of the store's equipment.

Refrigerator a Feature.

At the rear of the store, extending across almost the entire width is a large refrigerator finished with the same care and richness of the rest of the equipment. A glass front enables the customer to see most of the articles on the shelves. Butter cheese and some lines of meat, etc., in jars, are shown in the refrigerator, which proved its worth particularly in the warmer weather. It will be invaluable in future summers. This is certainly a capacious refrigerator with access to the shelves being obtainable from the rear.

Showcases, Banana Rack and Vegetable Fountain.

Other fixtures there are worth mentioning, such as banana rack and fresh vegetable fountain, but the different showcases are worthy of the very best store. They are in the same material as the shelving and are large and well put together. One is devoted to cigars, cigarettes and tobaccos, another to confectionery, another to soaps and toilet preparations, another to honey, jams, marmalade and other glass goods.

Throughout the store are found articles of foremost quality, displayed in settings that are worthy of them. The appearance of the store should appeal to the most fastidious customer, and the care the firm has bestowed on their northern branch is already being repaid by increasing trade. H. Hampton is the manager of the branch store. He has worked up to this position from that of a clerk. Fraser, Viger & Co. stand among Canada's foremost grocers and they strengthen their position by the practically model store that bears their name on Laurier Avenue, Montreal.

A Call to Grocers from the Mother Land

More About the Institute of Certificated Grocers—Tends to Level up the Whole Trade—How the Institute is Making a Science of the Grocery Business—"Optimistic Enthusiasm," The Institute's Keynote—Sample Examination Paper on Opposite Page.

By J. A. Sharwood, London, Eng.

Editorial Note.—A few weeks ago occasion was taken on the visit in Canada of J. A. Sharwood, F.G.I., a leading English member of the trade, and vice-chairman of the Institute, to introduce to the readers of The Canadian Grocer the Institute of Certified Grocers. So much interest has been shown by the Canadian trade in that society we have considered that a further account of its purposes, personalities and methods would not come amiss in our Fall Campaign Number. Mr. Sharwood has written this article at the request of The Grocer. We feel that this question is one of the highest importance to the future of this country and would urge everyone to study it carefully. The Institute is a comparatively new organization and aims at uniting the whole trade, including merchants, managers, clerks, and even apprentices, in one body; and that, not only for the benefit of the trade and of each and every member of it, but also for the benefit of the public at large.

The first idea of the Institute grew out of the feeling in the trade that the quality of the clerk was deteriorating. Of old the trade was recruited by means of a five, and even a seven years' apprenticeship; but times changing, of late grocers have ceased to take and teach apprentices, and thus clerks entered the trade and learnt it, or did not learn it, in a haphazard way. Evidence of this was found in the frequent complaint among employers that they could not get good, skilled, competent clerks, and the effect was felt in the management of many a business, especially those of the better class, up and down the country.

The Seed Plot of the Institute.

Consequently about six years ago a number of men variously connected with the trade, took counsel as to the means of improving the training of the grocery clerk from a practical standpoint. They argued that systematic education and inducements thereto were what was needed. They saw that at the evening schools and ploytechnics, instruction was provided for the workers in other industries during the winter months, and that, both in commercial and scientific branches. Why should not the young grocer attend these institutions and receive well arranged tuition in the goods he handles, such as teas, coffees, cereals, dried fruits, provisions and so forth, as well as in the management of the store, the laws which affect his trade, the art of salesmanship, bookkeeping and even in arithmetic and the use of his own language? That nineteen out of every twenty clerks should profit by it, they were well assured; and the trade would soon feel the benefit of such a levelling up process was their conviction. The National Association of Grocers' Assistants, of which body J. Aubrey Rees was then the energetic secretary, decided to form a technical education section, and invited me to become its chairman. Already in Manchester, John Williams, since chairman of the Institute Council, had formed the Manchester Grocers' Technical Society, subscribing liberally to its inauguration.

Formation of First Classes.

Soon classes were founded in London, Manchester, Leeds, Belfast, Brighton, Bristol and other centres, a prominent manufacturer giving a prize for all England competition, after the first three years of training, of a shop valued at £500 ($2,500). This was awarded in the fall of 1908, after a written and practical examination lasting three days.

At the same time it was felt that to concentrate and to widen the movement for systematic education, and to ensure its continuance, a separate society was needed, and after much deliberation it was decided to found the Institute of Certified Grocers. A precedent and example from another trade was already to hand in the Pharmaceutical Society, to which every one carrying on the business of a retail chemist and druggist must belong, after proving his qualification by a series of examinations. Accordingly a provisional council was formed to fix the constitution of the Institute, consisting of leading merchants and traders, men eminent in the world of education, and representatives of the managers in the retail trade. Sir William R. Anson, Bart., M.P., Warden of All Souls' College, Oxford, and late a secretary to the Board of Education, willingly accepted the first presidency, and John Williams, the veteran retail grocer of Manchester, already mentioned, was chosen chairman of the council, with myself as vice-chairman; whilst J. Aubrey Rees became general secretary.

Legal Recognition.

Thus the Institute was launched and steps immediately taken to give it a legal status by incorporation. Articles were drawn up, and after approval by the Board of Trade, the Institute was granted a certificate of incorporation in November, 1909.

In the meantime the trade, both wholesale and retail was showing its practical approval of the venture by gifts of money for its purposes, and a valuable prize list was soon also secured, including an annual prize of $500 offered for ten years by Cadbury Bros., Ltd.; a silver challenge shield, and an annual prize of $50 by the Nestle & Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk Co., Ltd.; and a prize of $125 by J. & J. Colman, Ltd., besides other awards to be bestowed upon the best men of their year at the spring examination of the Institute.

Three Grades of Membership.

Membership was arranged in three grades; thus the council set itself to elect fellows from among the traders of established position and reputation all over the country, who by carrying on a successful and respectable business for upwards of ten years at least, had proved their right to the honorable and ancient title of "Grocer." With them were associated merchants and manufacturers in sympathy with the movement, and of course the ultimate aim was to be the inclusion of the whole trade. Lower grades of membership were to be those of associate and member, to be gained by the young men after a course of study and the test of examination, each grade to contribute to the up-keep of the Institute by an appropriate yearly subscription (Fellows $5.25; Members $2.50; Associates $1.25).

But to come to the practical working of the Institute, and the progress it has made. An organizing secretary was appointed two years ago, whose duty it has been to be the missionary, so to speak, of the Institute throughout the trade. Wherever enquiries have been made, there his work lies with the local education authority on the one hand, and with the master grocers and their clerks on the other. The master grocers are interviewed and the objects of the Institute and its methods explained to them, with a view to enlisting their sympathy and active support.

Methods and Propaganda.

If a grocers' association exists in the place the president and secretary are approached and perhaps the committee is addressed. With their concurrence, the stores are visited and the clerks are made aware of the Institute; and its classes, examinations, prizes and certificates are explained to them. Possibly a public meeting of all the trade is held, and a resolution is passed welcoming the Institute's activities and calling for the establishment of courses of instruction, whilst the names of those willing to become students are taken. Next, armed with a mandate, so to say, from the local trade, the local education secretary is interviewed with the purpose of getting a course of instruction arranged during the ensuing session at the evening technical school, in preparation for the spring examination of the Institute. If the co-operation of the authority is enlisted, a small local advisory committee is formed, and one of the traders is chosen as local correspondent to be the medium of communication with the Institute headquarters, and it is not long before the young men get to work. Thus at Hull and at Middlesborough, for example, this plan has been lately followed with excellent results. At the former place, a class of 89 is now meeting, and at the latter a class of 60.

With regard to the teaching, which, it may be thought, presents some difficulty. In many places a member of the trade has been found who combines good knowledge and experience of the store and all its details, with teaching ability. In others the lessons in bookkeeping, commercial arithmetic and law (all given by the regular teachers of the local evening school) are supplemented by visits, weekly or fortnightly of experts in various subjects. Thus on one night, a practical demonstration of "coffee-roasting," may be held, on another, a lantern lecture on "bacon and hams," on another, a lesson on "cereals" illustrated with numerous samples, etc. In time it is believed that many of the brightest students will become, in their turn, able teachers, as is already in some instances the case. The average cost to the clerk of a course of instructions is about $2 for the whole winter session, and in April he sits for an examination, on passing which he receives a certificate. After the second year's examination he is eligible to take up the associateship. Finally at the end of the three years' course he can take the final examination, which is both theoretical and practical, and gain the special final certificate, entitling him to election as a member, besides standing a chance of winning a valuable prize.

That participation in the above is of immense value to the young clerk is obvious. The institute stands for the truth that the leaders and employers in the trade in England are taking a thorough interest in their employes. This should encourage them to become really skilled and efficient. Moreover the rule is that renumeration follows efficiency, and the man who makes himself worth big money, invariably gets it. To study the trade systematically induces a man to put head and heart into his work, gives him an interest in it, makes him happier whilst firing him with an ambition to get on. This is the Institute gospel, and its leaders are convinced that it is having an incalculable effect, and will have more so as it grows, in raising the tone of the whole body of clerks. Enthusiasm is the keynote of the Institute's council, officials and members, and it is permeating the trade with a new spirit of optimistic hopefulness.

The Institute a Public Benefit.

And the Institute in making the trade more efficient and more useful is doing a big public service. Just as the nation wants good carpenters, good chemists, and good doctors, so it wants good food purveyors. The Institute is out to make the distributing of groceries and provisions almost a fine art, in short to hand the nation so large a part of its food supply as well chosen, as well bought, as well handled as possible. The public aspect of the Institute has lately been recognized again by that eminent authority on food, Sir James Crichton-Browne, M.D., F.R.S., who presiding at the annual banquet last month, freely admitted the national service the Institute was calculated to do, and blessed its work in no equivocal terms.

Thus, then, the trade of the Old Country is seeking to set its personnel in order, and the time is rapidly coming when the letters F.G.I. (Fellow of the Grocers' Institute), after a trader's name will be the recognized guarantee to the public of the most reliable grocery service. It has been hinted to the writer that a field for similar energies exists in Canada, that there is a call to the Canadian grocery clerk to improve his trade knowledge and skill, his interest in, and esteem for his business, his quality and spirit. Could not Canada and the Old Country march hand in hand in this work?

The Institute of Certificated Grocers is eager to place its experience at her disposal.

What measure of inspiration will the Dominion receive from the Motherland?

Using the hands in weighing goods is not sanitary. It should, therefore, be eliminated.

Nova Scotia Dealer's Winter Campaign

How One Dealer Proposed to Conduct His Winter Campaign—Believes Careful Planning is Necessary for the Best Results—He Intends to Use Plenty of Advertising—Lines He Will Feature During Each Period.

The "hit or miss" method of doing business is not productive of best results. The dealer who allows trade to slide along without a definite plan of action in every department of his business is likely to be a long time in seeking success in the grocery business. As in every line of endeavor, careful planning is necessary in the grocery trade. "Now and again," advertising conducted without a special aim or without any definite plan of action, will not beget the best results. The same may be said of business in general. Careful planning is essential.

Planning should be done early that the dealer may get off to a good start. I have already outlined a winter campaign. Long ago I found the value of advertising, and have allowed a liberal amount for that purpose, which it is hoped will be money well spent.

A Five Months' Campaign.

My present campaign will cover five months from the first of November. There is nothing like making a big start. Early November a good sized circular devoted to general lines will be issued. That will be to improve general business.

Prominence to Fish.

Towards the latter part of November with the opening of Advent, fish will be splendid sellers, and special prominence will be given to this line. I used to wait until after the rush of Christmas before starting to feature fish, but have found that by starting with Advent many more steady winter customers can be attracted. Frozen fish are the chief lines handled during Advent, but later on smoked and pickled fish are added.

By the first of December it will be high time to get the housewife interested in her Christmas cake and other Christmas cooking. Therefore begin to feature dried fruits, peels, nuts, spices, and other baking essentials. I usually begin my advertising in this regard by publishing a recipe for a Christmas cake. The strong points in advertising are the superior qualities of the goods, pointing out that the housewife would rather pay a little more and get goods that will make her Christmas baking a success. Sometimes I have placed a special price on one particular line, such as lemon peel, as a trade attractor.

Display Christmas Novelties.

Fully two weeks before Christmas, special prominence should be given to Christmas novelties and those goods that are acceptable for Christmas gifts. I devote one window the first week to this line, still retaining one for baking goods. Decorating in our store is done early so as to get the public in a Christmas spirit as early as possible. I believe in getting the advertising started early also. On the Monday of the week preceding Christmas, we send out a small dodger, just to bring the store before the people, before they do their final buying. One of our windows will show Christmas novelties and presents, and the other fruit, candies nuts, table raisins, and kindred lines.

Get After New Year's Trade.

We all used to consider the week between Christmas and New Years a holiday season, but not now. I believe in "making hay while the sun shines," and while the public are in festival, we take the opportunity to increase sales. Therefore, keep right on showing fruits, nuts, etc., and give special attention to the confectionery department, for sweetmeats are good sellers at this season. We make an attempt to clear out any Christmas goods that might have been left over.

After the New Year.

With the opening of the year, we enter upon the second portion of our winter campaign, and with this in view, we again do more advertising. Like the first big spread, it usually covers general lines. Get the good will of the people by asking them to begin the year right, by dealing with you.

About the middle of January, our plan is to specialize each week on one line in display and advertising. I believe that concentration of efforts on one line at a time brings the best results. The lines we usually feature each week are: Canned goods, dried fruits, flour and cereals, fish, fruits.

Beginning with March, we remember our duty on cleaning up the winter lines, on which there is a chance of making a little profit. The arrival of Lent means special attention to fish again, and once more the cycle of the seasons brings us to spring and increased trade.

HE WAS A JOKER.

In a grocery store there appeared a sign "We give $38 for 1899 pennies."

In walked a man and laying a penny on the counter triumphantly asked for $38.

The clerk took the penny, examined it closely, asked if it were genuine, and after several minutes sighed, and said he guessed it was good.

"Certainly it is," exclaimed the man. Then pointing to the sign, said, "where is my $38?"

"Oh," said the clerk, "where are the other 1898 pennies?"

Honey a Highly Nutritious and Palatable Food

The food value of honey is not sufficiently realized either by the consumer or the retailer who sells it. A writer in a German paper recently referred to it as follows:

"Honey is easily digested, and goes direct into the blood vessels without leaving deleterious residues in the intestines, so that a spoonful of honey means a spoonful of food. It contains: grape sugar, fruit sugar, and cane sugar (all differ chemically), water, fat, albumin, and some other substances, and its use cannot be substituted by grocers' sugar. It is a good food to take at breakfast time, being sustaining, warmth giving, and aiding in the digestion of other foods taken. Eaten with bread it is very palatable, and is also better than molasses with porridge.

"In many countries of Europe honey is more freely eaten than in England; in Germany, Switzerland, and Denmark amongst others; and by the people of old: the Indians, Egyptians, Jews, Greeks, and Romans, it was held in high estimation. In addition to its nutritive qualities, honey is also held to have therapeutic properties. Its great power for restoring health lies in the ease with which it dissolves excess of mucus in the human system. In troubles of the stomach and intestines, the use of honey by breaking up the mucus, frequently prevents acute inflammation; in the same way it mitigates the evils of lung consumption, and has been found most useful in diphtheria, especially among children.

"Honey is also recommended for delicate young people suffering from anaemia, as it is a useful stimulant, imparting warmth to the body, and helping the circulation. It is very largely used against anaemia in Denmark and some parts of Germany. Made into a poultice, for which purpose mix with flour, it acts as a cleanser and healer of putrid sores and ulcers."

"Yesterday is dead—forget it: To-morrow does not exist—don't worry; To-day is here—use it."

Interesting Views of a B.C. Dealer

Gives Some Good, Homely, Practical Advice—Started Strictly Cash but Found This System Not Always Best—Later Gave Credit Carefully—Keeps Complaints For the Traveler—Story of Scotch Knight of the Grip—Inferior Goods and Low Prices.

By R. G. Joy, Nelson, B.C.

MY literary efforts are confined to ad-writing and letter writing, but I always read The Canadian Grocer, and have got many useful hints from it. So now I am trying to make some reading matter for my brother grocers. The previous proprietor of my store was of Jewish extraction. He called it the "Ideal Cash Grocery," and I shall tell why I call it "Joy's Cash Grocery."

When I commenced business on the new venture (or I might say we, because my good wife helped me considerably with the books), I tried the first year to do a strictly cash business. Yes; it was cash, but I could not get sufficient turnover to show much more than a living at the end of the first year, so I launched out into the credit business. I was careful with whom I did business and found that the sign "Joy's Cash Grocery" helped me several times, it often kept undesirables away.

Gave Credit Carefully.

Some of our citizens would come and ask me if they could open an account because it would be so convenient when sending the children on messages. I then made inquiries, if I did not know them personally, and I still have some of those customers on my books that opened an account with me ten years ago,—in fact I might call them friends.

Some brother grocers may ask, did you have any bad debts? Yes, I have had some, but most of them were contracted when the head of the family met with some misfortune or sickness came into their midst. Some of the public say, "Yes, we who pay, have to pay for those who do not pay." I say they do not in my case. I and my family put up the balance; there is that much less to my credit on the right side of the ledger.

Ha, ha, say some, look at Joy, he's fat and hearty, says he suffers. Yes, they say, I am a living advertisement for the quality of my groceries, and "Joy will meet you at the door" is my motto, and "Smile" is written on the little card above the cash register. I smile when the money comes in, I smile when the money goes out, for I am happy when I can meet those chilly things called drafts.

Favorable to Draft System.

I think that the draft system of collecting is quite satisfactory and the wholesalers know that Joy meets them with the cash. The most enjoyable time I have is when a drummer comes in, one that sells good goods, for goods well bought are half sold. I believe in buying goods with a good reputation for quality. They move quickly, and the faster the goods move the more profit for Joy.

Some grocers say, "sell the goods on which you make the largest profit." This advice does not always work. I knew a grocer in England that bought a corner grocery doing a good business, but he was not satisfied with the lines his predecessor carried. They were good lines, the kind that people come again for, the kind that mother used and who would turn to her daughters and say, "Now children, you can always depend on the things that you get at Blank's."

Inferior Brands Not Wanted.

The new man bought brands that he could make more money on, but alack, alas! the customers quit. He had the inferior brand of goods, but no business. I say, sell the best you can buy, be careful of your weighing, cut out mistakes in your accounts, take an interest in your business, like it, and success will follow.

I spoke about commercial men. There are all kinds that come up the hill to see Joy. The easterners, especially, come puffing into the store and say, "These hills are a terror," and hinting that an order would appease them for their efforts of climbing. I have received good advice from some of the Knights of the Road. They are always welcome at Joy's corner. One of the knights was an old grocer. He failed in business, not entirely his fault if the truth were known, and this was his brief summary:

He said, "I failed in business. Competition was keen, I had to raise a large family. I gave them a good education and fed them well; my opposition ate what he could not sell and died of cancer in the stomach. I am still alive, and selling merchandise to good grocers."

Tenders Complaint to the Drummer.

When I have a complaint to make, I wait till the drummer comes round. I find that when I write to the house a letter comes back that makes one get his back up. One time I purchased through a traveler of Scotch descent, some pickles. On receiving them, I found in one of the bottles a large bluebottle fly. I put the bottle aside and said to myself, "It is a good thing I noticed it; it might do the firm harm if I sent it out with the fly showing."

After some time Mac came around for another order. I took the bottle and showed it to him, with a few remarks about such unsanitary methods of bottling, etc. He did not turn a hair (it was red), he looked up at me, and said, "I would na waste it, tak it to the hoose and use it yer' sel'."

Meat Slicer Free From Flies.

You will find under separate cover two photos of the interior of my store. In one of them you will notice that my meat cutter is in an enclosure made of wood and the ordinary fly screen wire netting. It opens like an ordinary window, up and down, the sashes are balanced with weights. I found that during the hot weather the flies could not be kept away from the meat slicer when cutting boiled ham, and to cover it with a cloth would not be practicable, so I devised the enclosure shown in the photograph. I noticed that when the ladies came into the store they took particular notice of it and congratulated me on keeping my meat, cheese, etc., from the flies.

I also have fly screen doors. A clean store is a good advertisement. My store is located in the residential portion of Nelson. Some of the famous Kootenay fruit is grown in gardens that surround the residences. My clerk and I are English but have adopted Canada as our home and country and my children are good Canadians.

Now, brother grocers, we all have our little troubles. This is the generation of big combinations, not individual effort. Lots could be said of this, but I say take an interest in your business and take an interest in your city. Some say keep out of politics, but I think it is the duty of every business man to take an interest in the government of his country, for with good government you get good business.

You do not have to talk politics in business hours. Close at six. We all close at six in Nelson, except on Saturdays, and close on Wednesday afternoons in the summer time. I see no reason why we should not close in the winter one half day. This prevents making Sunday a day of recreation. Some say the day of the small dealer is past. If you think this you will pass out of business, but do not think it. Sell as much as you can for cash, but I find that it is not always convenient for my customers to pay cash owing to the monthly system of wage payment.

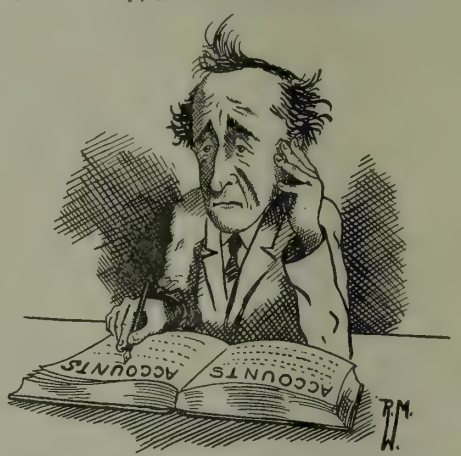
"Joy cometh in the morning,
And in the evening too;
If you buy his groceries,
You will be Joyful too."

ONE BUYS FLOUR FOR ALL.

Trade in Orillia on Good Terms With One Another.

Co-operation is buying is evidenced in an especial way in the case of flour among the grocers of Orillia, Ont. T. B. Cramp, one of the leading grocers of that town, buys a car load of flour at a time. He has too much for his own use, so divides it up among the other grocers, they allowing him the cost price, plus a margain of 10 cents a bag for what they buy.

No doubt this plan of buying has already been tried in other places, and where there is a good understanding among the grocers the plan has much to commend it, so far as flour is concerned. There is a saving all round in the cost of the flour through buying in large quantities and in the expense of freighting.



There are two flour mills in Orillia, one of them owned by Vick's grocery and bakery concern, and the local brands have, of course, a good call. They sell to the grocers and in some cases sell to farmers, but both mills prefer selling through the trade. When they do sell direct they charge the grocery trade's retail price, in this way protecting the trade and making for a good feeling all round.

Actual Instances Where Clerks Go Astray

A Dealer Who Never Learned How to Control Debts—Case Where Clerk Gave Overweight to the Purchaser—His Employer Had Not Impressed the Point of Correct Weight.

The object of the reference to the clerk question lies in the desire to impress upon retail salesmen the necessity of fitting themselves for the openings that are going to be presented some time when they are least expecting them. Initiative is required and perseverance.

Memory recalls the story of a New Brunswick grocer who has made a success of his business. When a young man he decided to study the art of reading character, a power that is invaluable in any walk of life. Many times he fonnd this unusual ability an aid in deciding when to give credit, when to believe tales of "woe" and in other instances. This is not mentioned with a view to urging clerks to give some time to this study, but as an illustration of the desire they should have for improving themselves, no matter what method they may adopt.

Could Not Control Collection.

The idea that the grocery business is merely the handing out of goods asked for is no longer admitted. Ploughmen and boilermakers may think so, but when their savings are spent in the "game" they thought so easy, the realization of their mistake comes too late. The writer knows a grocer whose delivery wagons seemed to be always on the road. He sold a great deal of goods but he could not secure control of collections. To-day he is worrying himself with the question of establishing a cash business only. The elevation of the grocery business of the coming generation to a higher plane depends upon the education of the clerks of to-day, and therefore depends upon the efforts of the grocers in the cities, towns and villages from one end of the country to the other.

This question is so important to the grocer himself that it is a wonder it does not receive more attention. How many employers stop from the daily grind to point out the value of co-operation, even though the clerks know that in united efforts the best results are obtained? How many ask for suggestions from the clerks or enquire about any difficulties the clerk may be having? It is leaving the clerk to his own resources that is the bane of the latter's advancement.

Where the Buyer Gained.

One clerk the writer knows who but a few years ago used to disdain returning to a bin or drawer a quantity of goods that remained in his scoop or measure, unless the latter was nearly full. In parcelling up sugar if the last scoopful happened to contain more than the exact weight, and if the measure were about half full, the purchaser received that much more than she paid for.

It was the same with currants and raisins, rice and all down the list. With cheese, and meats and other articles served in that manner, the same thing happened. This clerk actually cost his employer far more than he was worth. But he was only a young boy just out of school and did not realize what an ounce lost here and there meant in a day's work. His employer told him prices, gave him an apron and told him to go ahead, but the grocer did not know that he himself was going behind.

It would have been so easy to have explained by a few figures the necessity of giving a customer what he pays for and no more.

Good Buying Handicapped.

This same grocer used to advertise that he had bought "right" and undoubtedly he had at times made purchases at the right time, but here was one of his clerks who was certainly not selling right. A part of the profit secured in extensive buying was lost unnecessarily through the grocer's sin of omission; he had omitted to impress upon his apprentice clerk the significance of what the latter deemed insignificant.

TEACH THE BOY.

When the boy starts in with you, teach him the things that he should learn. Get him interested and anxious to learn. Show him how to properly wrap and tie a parcel, to keep the counter and scales clean, to always keep busy at something, whether it is the arranging of a shelf or a counter display. Teach him to be saving of paper and of twine. In short, teach him to make your interests his own.

A Window Trim Minus Selling Power

More Than a Dozen Articles Distributed Bearing Little or No Relation to One Another—Observed in Suburb of Large City—Six Important Points to be Considered in Dressing a Window—Space Useless Unless it Sells Goods or Creates a Good-Will.

IS THIS WINDOW DISPLAY ?

Ginger-snaps, laundry soap, fancy biscuits, corn flakes, ornamental brooches, wheat cereal, pork and beans, corsets, hat-pins, more fancy biscuits, men's socks, leather mitts, baby's dolls, cups and saucers, buttons, sweaters and a Union Jack all in one window.

The artist who dressed this fine window was loyal, if nothing else. Possibly we should have referred to the Union Jack first, but it happened to be the last item observed.

This display was not made in any newly-settled district either, where some laborer out of work "set up shop" to keep the wolf from the door. It was shown on the main street of a suburb of one of Canada's largest cities.

What was the merchant's occupation anyway ? A look beyond the window was just as confusing. The shelves, counters, barrels and boxes, shared space with the biscuits, buttons, pickles and feminine paraphernalia. There was no system whatever attempted, the floor being crowded with all sorts of containers separated by zigzig aisles.

Prospects are Poor.

And this practically in the midst of a great, busy, bustling city, where merchants are supposed to know better ! Such a display is not likely to attract much attention apart from a window critic. It was almost useless as a business getter, particularly as it was located among stores carrying these goods exclusively, and where the windows were not all a conglomeration of articles.

The outstanding feature in every good window is its power to not simply attract, but to hold the gaze of the passerby who is a probable purchaser. Unless the window artist can provide something to HOLD attention, the window is useless. Once this has been accomplished, it remains for his ingenuity to present the goods displayed in such a tempting manner that they will be bought.

The initial part of this article demonstrates how not to dress a window. No display that shows a number of articles that bear no relation to one another is considered good for the business.

Basis of a Good Window.

What then are the fundamental principles underlying a positive selling display ?

They might be enumerated as follows :

1. The Goods to be Displayed.—In considering what you want to put into the window, take into consideration the season, the timeliness of the display, the quality of the goods you have for sale and the margin of profit. Turkeys shown in July will not attract the same attention as if shown prior to Christmas, and soft drinks at Christmas time in place of July, would be equally poor policy. Goods of inferior quality or even those whose quality you are not in a position to recommend, through lack of knowledge, should never go into the window. Never get behind an article that you cannot stake your reputation upon, even if margin of profit is alluring. If, however, you have two similar articles, and you are sure they are equal in quality, the one with the better margin is the one to display.

Planning the Background.

General Plan.—Once the goods are selected, what sort of display will show them to the best advantage ? Displaying for instance, maple syrup and sugar, a sugar-camp in the woods in miniature suggests itself as a background. If you want to display dried fruits for the Christmas season, remember to have a show card or two calling attention to housewife's plum pudding and Christmas cake. Canned fruit suggests a neat pile of wholesome raw material, etc. Think out your plan first.

Have Window Suggest Something.

3. Association of Articles.—Bacon and eggs go well together ; fresh fruit and sugar ; all the ingredients of a Christmas cake ; poultry and cranberry ; meats and fish of all kinds and meat sauces ; all varieties of utensils necessary for housecleaning, with cleansing powders and liquids, etc. This association of articles, provided there are not too many, tells a story which every purchaser appreciates.

4. Cleanliness.—Every window should be spotlessly clean, if the maximum results are to be obtained. To this end every dealer will find it profitable to instal a floor in the window of clean, planed, matched lumber, or tiling. This can easily be kept free from dirt.

Value of the Showcard.

5. Show Cards and Price Tickets.—Some windows may possibly be better without price tickets, but show cards are indispensable. Every good dealer realizes the importance of his word-of-mouth suggestion to his customers. The show card does the same work, only it lacks the follow up power of the dealer should first reading not prove strong enough to convince the probable purchaser. There is no window that will not be the better of a neatly written, convincing, but inoffensive show card.

Price tickets in most cases are effective. Their use is generally to be commended in a district where dwell middle classes and laborers. In a district where trade is of a very high class, they may not be such a big factor, as price is not such a consideration there.

Last But Not Least.

6. Attractiveness.—Although attractiveness is named last, it is one of the most important selling factors in a window. Few windows can be thronged with a motley supply of goods and attract much attention. On the other hand, a display consisting of one or a few articles, can be easily made attractive, and if it draws the people, it will nine times in ten sell the goods, providing cleanliness, appearance, and the dealer's recommendation goes with them. Make the display a thing of beauty and stop the public. If you can do this, the remainder is easy.

Motion in the window should be included under this heading, but the artist should be careful that the gaze of the passerby must not concentrate upon the thing in motion, unless it bears some direct relation to the goods displayed. A railway company showing a small moving train is good display, but the same train in a grocery window will be ineffective as a positive selling force, unless it be used to bring out some point in connection with the goods. It might, of course, get the public talking about Jno. Jones' store, but as a direct seller it must be placed in a low class.

Summary of Good Points.

To revert to the inspiration of this article. The window in question was not attractive ; it had no show cards or price tickets; there was no association of articles—unless it were the laundry soap and socks; no study whatever was made upon the background or general plan, and it is safe to say that the dealer did not know what goods he intended showing until he had finished throwing them in.

The window can be made one of the best assets of any dealer. Merchants in country, village, town and city stores, have proven this. Then is there any reason under the sun, why all the advantage possible is not taken of them?

Dress the window according to sane, sound principles. Make it speak out to the passing public, and reap from it the profits that lie within its power to bestow.

Your Xmas Window Should Tell a Story

This Sort of Display Holds Attention More so Than Something Novel Without Logic—For Instance, Tell the Story of Plum Pudding—Examples of Good Selling and Inferior Displays—Olive, Coffee, Sugar and Syrup Plans Suggested.

By Victor Lauriston.

"ISN'T that a queer notion—wasting a whole big window just to show nothing else but those olives?"

That remark, voiced the other day on Carisford's main street, was followed by other comment, some of it explanatory.

"Jackson does get up some queer window displays, doesn't he? Just think of it—nothing but olives! And there wasn't much to the window—I studied it all out. He put eight wooden basins in the window, and covered the whole thing with cheese cloth, and then put bottles of olives in the basin—half a dozen bottles in each basin, and each basin a different kind. I never imagined there were so many different kinds of olives."

"Say, what are they for, anyway?"

"What—olives? Well, I donno—something like pickles, I guess. Reckon I'll drop in and buy a bottle just to find out."

Well—when you get down to hard cold fact, was that a waste of window space?

Jackson's grocery in Carisford does get up some odd window displays. But, as in this instance, they are displays that invariably attract attention, arouse curiosity and stimulate sales—which, after all, is the object of all window display.

Story Told in Every Window.

For Jackson wasn't satisfied to make his window a mere shelf, upon which to shove goods for the time being in order to get them out of his way. Rather, he was inclined to reverse the process—to make every shelf serve as a window, and therefore a help in making sales. As for his windows, each one of them was designed to tell a story. Furthermore, it must be a new story every time—and interesting.

That sounds difficult, but it is far from being as difficult as it sounds. Making the window tell a story doesn't necessitate anything elaborate—in windows, as in fiction, the simpler and more direct the story, the stronger its appeal to the person whose eyes rest upon it.

What constitutes a window-story? Well take the olive window as an example. Jackson showed olives with pimento, ripe olives, Spanish olives, French olives, olives done in this way and olives done in that—a complete short story of the final product of the olive industry. It told the passerby something of the importance and possibilities of olives—and, helped out by show cards and price tickets, led to the logical climax of inducing him to purchase.

A Coffee Display.

Another such story was told recently in the Jackson window on Main street, Carisford. It was a story of coffee. Jackson showed coffee in bags—unroasted coffee, Java roasted but unground, Mocha roasted but unground. In little dishes were samples of various blends of ground coffee. There was coffee, ground, sealed in air-tight tins. In one corner was the electric coffee cutter, with, nearby, a show card telling in a dozen words or so the advantages of steel cut coffee over ordinary ground coffee, and the added advantages of having it freshly roasted and freshly cut. That was a story of coffee from the unroasted bean to the ground product. With a larger window or more time for preparing the display, Jackson could have given pictures of the coffee fields, of the various phases of coffee harvesting, of its shipment; and a table could have been set with an electric percolator and cups of the finished beverage to be sampled by all comers. That would have expanded the coffee short story into a coffee novelette, but still carried out the story idea.

Something New Always Noted.

"There are lots of stories—thousands of them—but there's always a place for the story whose appeal is fresh and new." Those words of a magazine editor with reference to magazine fiction fit the art of window display just as closely. And, inferentially, they tell why it is that so many window displays fail to justify the elaborate efforts spent upon them.

The first great essential in the window display is, that it attract the attention of the man or woman in the street. It shouldn't be just a sort of temporary accommodation for this or that line of goods; it is a story, an advertisement, with reference to those goods. And the quality that best attracts attention—but let me quote a regular, safe-and-sane business friend of mine.

"What's the use of putting a lot of care and attention on a window display," Smithers mourned to me last spring. "Here I've spent hours and hours putting together an Easter window that's a dream of beauty. And across there Jones just put a pine box with half a dozen white rabbits in his window—and six people stop to look at those rabbits for one that takes a good, interested look at my display."

Therein lay the whole secret. Smithers put together a conventional, elaborate display. Jones tossed in a few rabbits in a common pine hutch. The value of any display is measured, not by the work put upon it, but by the effect it produces. Smithers' window was conventional. People in the street had seen the same sort of Easter window, year in and year out. Those rabbits were something novel—in a window. Therefore they attracted attention. The remedy was for Smithers to inject something of the rabbit quality into his display. If he had exploded a cannon cracker in the centre of his display, and put up a card, "Competition all shot to Smithereens," he'd have done the trick.

Logic Behind Interest.

But that doesn't mean that Smithers' display was the poorer business getter of the two. Where twenty-four people paused to look at the rabbits, four saw the Smithers' display, but the logic of the Smithers' window may have convinced three out of that four, while the lack of logic behind the other window may have repelled all but two of the twenty-four. It's one thing to secure attention in the first place, and another thing to hold it. To secure attention you must have novelty. To hold attention you must have logic—the logic that leads the interest of the passerby right up to the purchasing point.

A year or two ago the hardware stores throughout Ontario suffered an epidemic of "millinery windows." Ingenious hardwaremen manipulated stovepipes, pans, pots, brooms and other articles in such fashion as to burlesque the freak hats shown in the millinery openings. These displays were clever and ingenious, no doubt of that. They caused many a laugh. But were they business-getters?

"Say, that's great, isn't it?" one spectator would chuckle to another. Then, having had their laugh, they'd saunter on, and probably buy their nails later in the hardware store that was most convenient. Such displays caught the eye; but they failed to hold the interest right up to the buying point. Behind the millinery burlesque there was usually no argument with reference to any particular line of goods. The display led the passerby to talk about the story, which was a good thing from a business point of view; but there was in most of these displays practically nothing to induce him to walk right in and make perhaps his first purchase at that store. And, when it comes down to tacks and nails, or, for that matter, to flour and sugar, one actual new customer is worth a dozen people who talk about the store and then buy somewhere else.

There's a difference in window displays just as between well and poorly told stories. Take a pickle window, for instance. You've probably seen scores of pickle displays. "Bill," says Smithers to one of his clerks, "fix up a pickle window"—and Bill gets down about 40 bottles of pickles, and ranges those bottles in regular rows. First he puts a mustard pickle, then a sweet pickle, then a common, garden, every-day mixed pickle. And so on, till he has two or three regular rows of them, all as neat as a new pin. But what do they tell the passerby. Merely that pickles are for sale in Smithers' grocer, which is something he knows anyway. The platoon of bottles stares stupidly at the passerby, and the passerby, having seen that sort of pickle display time and again, doesn't even stop to reciprocate by staring stupidly at the platoon of bottles.

Well Studied Pickle Window.

Jones, on the contrary, had a clerk with a few vagrant ideas about window display that he had picked up by reading the trade papers and studying other windows and thinking things out for himself. Jones' clerk took practically the same groundwork—the window flooring, and behind that a ledge or shelf just a little higher, the whole covered with white cheese-cloth. On the front terrace he arranged four groups of pickle bottles—half a dozen bottles of sweet pickles grouped together, and half a dozen bottles of mustard pickles grouped together, and half a dozen bottles of a high grade English pickle, and half a dozen of the common mixed pickle. And on the upper terrace he grouped (each kind by itself) five more of another brand.

In a central position was a basin of the ordinary cucumbers in brine. Attached to each group was a neat card bearing a catchy phrase that hit off the especial virtue of that particular variety, each card climaxing with the price. Jones' clerk, taking practically the same groundwork and practically the same pickles, by putting emphasis on contrast, made an effective display. His window wasn't a gem but it appealed to nearly a dozen different tastes. It could hardly fail to strike and strike hard, a responsive chord in every passer-by who was at all interested in pickles. Jones' clerk helped the pickle-interested to choose and select, instead of making it difficult to do so.

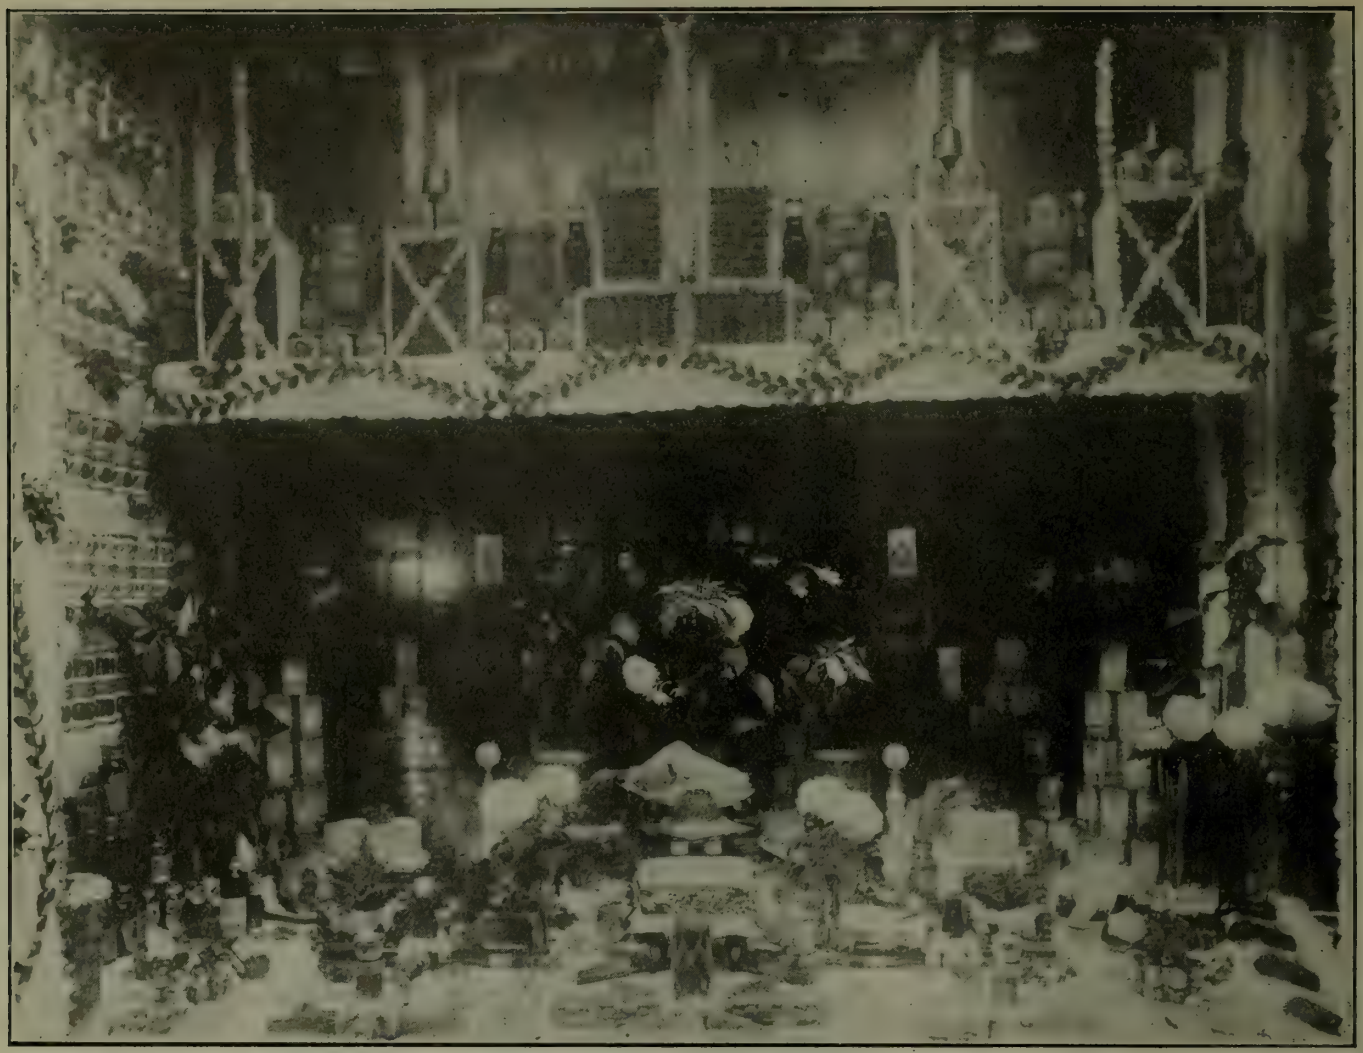
Therein lies the difference between the window-story poorly told and the window-story well told.

Then old, every-day lines can be treated in a new way. The coffee window is an instance. It treats coffee from a new view point, and incidentally reminds the passer-by that Jackson makes a speciality of coffee. Such a window is convincing evidence that Jackson knows more about coffee than can be learned just by selling the ground product in sealed cans, or in paper bags.

Sugar and Syrup Displays.

Another such window could be made of sugars and syrups. Take granulated sugar, raw sugar, loaf sugar, brown sugar (in its various grades); molasses, maple syrup, corn syrup, honey if you like. A window showing the whole range of sugars and syrups is an interesting thing, even though sugar itself is a common place. And a show card attached to each sample displayed, noting that this quality of sugar is just the thing for preserving, that taffy pulling is a jolly evening enjoyment, and that this especial syrup is just the thing for pancakes—such cards follow out the logic and lure the man or woman in the street more than a step nearer to the purchasing point.

A window need not be devoted to one article alone; but it should have one central idea, and every article shown and every word on every show card, should directly relate to and help out that central idea. Nothing kills the effect of a window so much as a discordant note. A pile of package teas in one corner of the sugar window would do much to spoil its effect.



Ingredients of Xmas Pudding.

Thus, a Christmas pudding window early in the Christmas season—the earlier the better—would prove interesting. Show all the ingredients—raisins, currants, peel of various kinds, flour, nuts, sugar. Group in that window everything you sell that goes into the making of Christmas pudding—not excepting eggs, if the recipe calls for them. Give prices of each, and emphasize the quality. Paste upon other cards neatly typewritten or printed, recipes for Christmas pudding—give three or four of the best recipes you can find. And on your most prominent card emphasize this fact, that Christmas pudding is the better for being made well ahead of time, and kept for a few weeks. Thus you build up a logical-window-story, which leads the eye-witness from the vague, general idea of Christmas pudding right along to the climax of purchasing the ingredients at once.

Substitutes for Butter.

The window can tell stories of new things, making those stories applicable to the moment. Thus, at the time of a butter famine some years ago, Jackson, previously referred to, made up a display composed entirely of substitutes for butter—peanut butter, banana butter, butterine, cream cheese, ordinary cheese and a lot of other lines, many of them novelties, that in one way or another would take the place of actual butter. That window, being a timely novelty, not merely effected quite a few direct sales, but helped to introduce several new lines convincingly to the customer.

Dozens of new lines can thus be effectually brought before the public through the medium of the window display. But it isn't enough just to shove the articles into the window and leave them there. Help them out with show cards, price cards, and in every possible way, and tell the people in the street, not merely that they're there, but what they are and what they're there for.

Make the Christmas Window Sell the Goods

While It Should Be Attractive, See That Its Beauty Is Not Overdone—Nothing Should Detract From the Goods to be Sold—Three Christmas Displays and Their Chief Features.

With Christmas less than two months in the distance, dealers must soon begin to think about that important silent salesman—the Christmas display window.

There are a few points to be taken into consideration in arranging any display, Christmas or otherwise. Be sure your window is going to be attractive; see that it is clean and contains goods you are anxious to sell; display nothing but goods the quality of which you thoroughly understand; know that you are going to get a fair profit on them, turnover considered, and see that your window is actually the silent salesman it is intended for.

Attractiveness and selling power are the most important of the lot, since they are relative conditions, whereas, one can be reasonably sure of securing the others. What one probable customer might consider attractive, another wouldn't; or what would bring one into the store to purchase, would not appeal to another. The aim of the dealer, therefore, should be to arrange a display that will arouse the greatest number of passersby to purchase goods displayed.

The Christmas window must not be simply a pretty picture. Attractiveness is all very well, but unless it sells the goods it availeth little. Attractiveness and selling power combined tend to get the maximum results.

A British Columbia Display.

On this and succeeding page are shown three examples of good Christmas window displays. Dixi H. Ross & Co., of Victoria, B.C., are now well known to the Canadian trade as artistic window trimmers. Their windows always bear that delicate touch that only the handiwork of the artist can give them and, therefore, at first glance command attention by reason of their beauty.

Often it is said, the pretty window is not a good seller. However, in the case of Dixi H. Ross & Co., we can safely say we have a combination of attractiveness and high selling value. While there are some floral decorations, yet they do not detract from the goods shown, but rather tend to make the goods show up to better advantage.

A Two Storey Window.

A glance at the illustration, shows that the window is divided into two sections—an upper and a lower story. On the top shelf are four attractive boxes of dried fruits, two on either side of four boxes of figs. Interspersed among these, are preserved and canned fruits, which in original colors would give an exceedingly fine appearance to the upper section of the display.

To the centre and rear of the lower shelf, in front of a bouquet of flowers, is placed the indispensable Christmas turkey on a platter. In front of the turkey is the next prominent portion of the greatest of all meals. This is the plum pudding.

Figs and confectionery in glass are prominent among the other articles in the window. On the outskirts may be seen canned goods, biscuits, etc.

Confectionery Well Shown.

For a comparatively small centre, Bracebridge, Ont., produces some fine window displays. The one shown here is a Christmas trim with special attention given to confectionery. It was a motion window, in which boxes of confectionery revolved about a floral display. A bunch of grapes hung to the end of each box, so that when in motion this display would naturally attract much attention. The attractive open boxes of chocolate look quite tempting, and must have made a number of actual sales.

Nuts, figs, dates, wines, etc., systematically arrayed constitute the floor. Santa Claus overlooking all, tends to further the Christmas idea. Sometimes the Santa Claus idea is overdone. It takes up so much of the window that nothing else is seen, but such a criticism can scarcely be made in this case.

The dealer should bear in mind that he makes a display with the intention of selling goods, and not simply to attract.

Dried Fruits Hold Sway.

While different in many respects to those already mentioned, the Bruce & Sanderson, Toronto, window is worthy of attention. Christmas goods are certainly shown and in a very neat system. It must have taken great pains to plan and work out the design.

The floor is composed of dates, figs, raisins, etc., in packages, nuts of all kinds, peels and extracts. The illustration itself shows how these were arranged. Large open boxes of figs, boxes of peel, packages of raisins, support a shelf of wines.

This window contains several price-tickets, but there is a deplorable lack of display cards in all three. Now that the Edwards' course in card writing is running in The Grocer, we shall expect to see an abundance of these window cards, neatly printed, a year hence. While in some localities price tickets may not be appropriate, yet there is no window that would be the worse of a show card or two.

Editorial Note.—The points noted in the above article should be taken into consideration in planning this year's displays prior to Christmas. Remember too, The Grocer's window dressing competition, announced elsewhere in this issue, and decide now to become a participant.

WINDOW SHOULD ALWAYS TALK.

A window undressed for any period means a considerable loss to the store; the amount of such loss depending on the location of the store, and its usual power in making sales. To avoid any more delay than possible, it is best to have everything prepared as far as possible, before commencing to remove the old trim. In this way the time that the window is out of commission as a selling agent is reduced to a minimum.

There are stores which make a specialty of one line on a certain day with a special price. They will possibly have a window display with the price attached. At the end of the day, when the special price has come to an end, they have to draw the blind, and the window during the evening is doing no work at all.

In such cases it would be profitable to arrange for a change of the window display late in the day, showing the line or lines that are going to be featured the next day.

Well Arranged Dried Fruit and Nut Display Shown by Bruce & Sanderson, Toronto.

Methods for Increasing Syrup Trade

A Good Season and a Good Year for the Sale of Syrups—Not Only Pleasant to the Taste, But Has High Food Value—Prominence Should be Given to It in All Departments.

When baby sticks his finger in the syrup and then with a thrill of pleasure licks the "treacle" off; when Jonny emerges from the pantry with his face and clothes besmeared with the sugary liquid, then are we brought to a realization of how agreeable to the taste that article called syrup is.

This is probably the best season for the sale of syrup and molasses and grocers should ponder over the possibilities in the sale of these lines.

A Seller the Year Round.

There used to be a time in the grocery trade when dealers believed that the only time they could sell syrups and molasses was in the middle of winter. That idea is, however, a thing of the past, and the best grocers not only keep it on the shelves but push it's sale at all seasons. It is without doubt an all-the-year-round seller.

Has High Food Value.

Syrup, as the grocer does, or at least should, know, is not so largely used for the reason that it is pleasant to the taste. It possesses a relatively high food value for is it not kindred to sugar, and is not sugar considered an excellent and nutritious food? Whether it is maple or corn syrup, the user is assured that he is consuming a highly nutritious food. Then the price is comparatively reasonable and within the reach of all. It can be transported easily, a fact which increases its use in the mining and lumbering camps.

How shall we proceed to secure the best results? Prominence is, of course, the keynote and should be carried out in counter and window display, advertising and personal talks. It helps, of course, if it is displayed in conjunction with associated lines, but a window devoted to syrup and molasses alone will attract attention and create sales. Show cards pointing out its good points could be used to good advantage.

Direct Selling Forces to It.

It is a good plan to give emphasis to syrups and molasses in all departments at once. Select a certain week, exhibit it in the window, boom it in your advertising and talk it to customers. Results should be gratifying.

Last winter a dealer in a Nova Scotian town known to the writer helped his syrup sales by a neat counter display showing the various lines, while syrup and molasses were shown in bottles so that customers could pass upon its quality.

Newfoundland Dealers' Daily Reminder

Leaflet with Printed List of Articles on One Side and Order Blank on Other Sent Out—These Suggest to Prospective Customer Articles That May Have Been Forgotten—Assists in Selling Goods Above Actual Demand.

The dealers' customers are always open to suggestion. They need reminders and need them frequently, else they are not sold goods they would readily purchase if attention were called to them.

Every dealer realizes this point and aims, or should aim, to increase his selling power by suggestion, a reminder, gentle persuasion, or whatever you wish to call it. By doing so, he becomes a better salesman, has more confidence in himself, and increases sales and profits.

Many are the methods used to perform this work, but the more important include personal talks, show cards, newspaper advertising and circulars.

List of Goods as Reminder.

From St. John's, Newfoundland, comes a good suggestion that will be of interest to the grocer. It was originated by Mr. Pike, of Steer Brothers, and is plainly described by the accompanying illustrations.

With all parcels that leave the store, a leaflet is enclosed printed on both sides. On one side, is given a lengthy list of articles, alphabetically arranged in five columns. Frequently a customer running her eye down a column will hit upon something to which her attention has not been called, or which she has forgotten when giving her grocery order.

Figure 2 represents the other side of the leaflet, where blanks are left for the writing of the order. There are also blanks for the date, when goods are wanted, customer's name and address, so that no error may occur if order is sent in by mail.

Brings Extra Business.

This reminder is the means of getting extra business, and has proven its worth to Mr. Pike. It helps out particularly in busy times, when a salesman has not the opportunity to suggest goods to customers about which they have not inquired. It is this extra business, secured over and above actual demand, that builds up the annual turnover and gross profits.

Such a table should be particularly valuable for suggesting Christmas goods, for during the next couple of months dealers will be fairly busy attending to the actual, everyday demands of customers.

A library voting contest is being conducted on northern Yonge Street, Toronto.

Lesson 7--Complete Course in Cardwriting

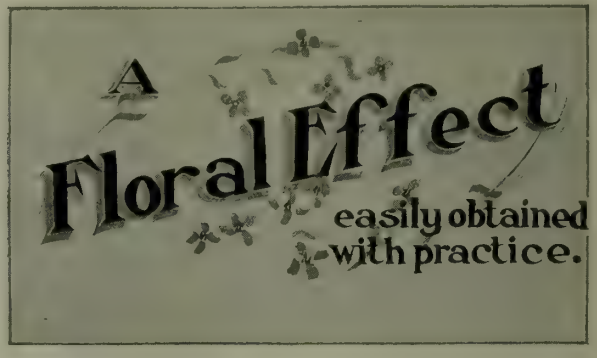
The Edwards Short-Cut System—Demonstrating the Lower Case of the Capitals in the Preceding Lesson on Brush Stroke Roman.

By J. C. Edwards. Copyright, Canada, 1911.

MUCH has been said in favor of the brush stroke Roman lettering by card-writers. This style of show card letter can be executed very quickly and a large amount of legibility can be obtained. The accompanying plate shows the lower case or small letters which are allied with the letters of last lesson—the brush stroke Roman capitals. If you refer to the previous lesson (No. 6) you will notice the card made exclusively with Roman capitals is not so readable and neat as the card accompanying this lesson which is made with capitals and lower case letters of the same style of lettering.

There is one very important point to learn in writing the Roman, and that is the great care required in putting the spurs on the letters. This either makes or mars the letter, for the beauty rests entirely on the evenness of the spurs.

Keep in mind the absolute necessity of holding the brush properly as illustrated in the picture shown in the left hand corner of the lesson plate. Another important point to observe in Roman lettering is the fact that much greater speed can be attained by making the whole word or line of letters before adding the spurs and moreover, a much neater and more symmetrical effect can be obtained. The hand is steadier and produces better and truer spurs where it has quite a number to make all at one time, instead of adding the spurs to each letter as you go along.



The idea in writing brush stroke Roman is to produce neat cards quickly and this is accomplished more readily when the capitals and lower case letters are used together as shown in the main line of the card "Floral Effect."

The strokes of this letter will be recognized as being the strokes that appear in the first alphabet that appeared —brush stroke block. This, one might say, is rather singular but you will find that if you have been successful with the first and have practiced every stroke and become quite familiar with each and every one, that you are on "easy street" during the balance of the lessons, whether they be for pen or brush. Your attention was drawn to this fact in the first lesson and is one of the features that the Edwards' shortcut system embodies. Of course, there are many new strokes shown in this lesson that have not been used before in former lessons.

In executing the Roman letters, the position of the brush in the hand never varies except in a few instances, and the secret of success lies in the rigid adherence to this rule. The exception is the letter "S."

The hand turns in this case to give the full breadth of the middle stroke which is necessary and could not be done if hand and brush were held in the same position as in the execution of even the top and bottom strokes of the same letter.

There are only a few minor points in this plate which will not be perfectly clear to the student, but upon close study of the strokes, these can be overcome.

Card showing application of the brush stroke Roman.

The most important is the finishing of such letters as "a," "c," "f," "r," and "s." It will be noticed that the finish is not unlike an attached "comma" and if you turn back to plate No. 2, you will find that the strokes for the comma are given along with the strokes which form a "period." Practice this part of the letter and you need have no trouble in getting it properly. The shading we recommend for this style of letter is the left hand lower shade—the same as shown in plate No. 1.

The decoration of the card here shown is simple and yet quite effective. It can be carried out in colors or in shade of grey. It serves as a relief and takes the bareness off the card without destroying the legibility. The same brush, No. 7 or No. 6 red sable flat in albata, was used to make this card throughout.

When making the stems of the flowers allow the hand to run lightly on the finger as shown in the corner illustration of the plate, holding the brush in such a manner that the edge rests very lightly on the card. Do it quickly, practice it often and don't be afraid to try. If you go at it slowly, you will get it very uneven and also get amateurish-looking curves. For lining the card, hold your brush as indicated in the accompanying illustration, letting the fingers rest lightly but firmly on the "T" square and keeping the brush even always. Do not move your hand but move the whole arm.

If further particulars are required regarding brushes, outfits, etc., write to the author, J. C. Edwards, care MacLean Publishing Co., Toronto, or to this paper.

Everlasting Problem of Profit Figuring

Which Should It Be, Cost or Selling Profit?—Question Again Dealt With By Well-Known Merchant Writer—Task of the Deliveryman—Laws in Respect to Peddlers Not Enforced.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

Misunderstanding About Figuring Margins.

Some time ago F. C. Williams, Ridgeville, Ont., discussed several points about the retail business very instructively, but he seemed to be under the impression that, in computing margins on the Selling Price, a man might slight cost. He says, for instance: "I firmly believe a merchant should figure his stock on hand at cost price instead of selling price. In all things he should aim not to deceive himself or make himself think his profits are larger than is actually the case. If anything he should under-rate rather than over-rate."

Don't Underrate Cost.

That is surely and most emphatically prime wisdom. In fact, no man can even begin to compute his margins until he has ascertained his cost. He cannot possibly be too particular or careful about this; and, just as it is wise for him to under-rate his possessions, so is it only good business to be liberal in figuring his costs. For instance, I buy coffee at a delivered price and all I am supposed to provide in addition is the drayage, which is handled on contract at 50c a ton, or 2½c per 100. But I add ¼c a pound to my invoice cost to be on the safe side.

He goes on to say that we may always take liabilities at their full face value, for we may be sure that we shall have to pay all bills in full, but that stock on hand should not only be inventoried at present replacement cost but that everything of doubtful value should be wiped out. That is also sound. It is the only true way to arrive at a conservative idea of where we stand.

Inventory Season Coming.

Every word of this is logical business sense, and it is all especially apposite at this time because we shall be taking inventories soon, so the more alive we are to the right way to do it, the better and more secure we shall be. But nothing in all this in any way contravenes the soundness of computing margins on the Selling End. In fact, the very merchant who is logical and orderly enough in his mind to work his business down to a strictly safe basis is the same man who will immediately see that my method of computing margins is in line with his other ideas.

Deliveryman Taking Orders.

One merchant says his deliveryman makes a practice of getting "Return Orders" when making deliveries. Customers often forget one or two items which may not be ordered for several days, but with this wide-awake boy asking for additional orders, "which will be promptly filled," the lady does not have to plan things systematically or do any thinking at all; hence a lot of additional business is secured.

An Age of Specialties.

I do not want any of that in mine. I want my boys to get the goods distributed as rapidly as possible and get back to the store for another trip; otherwise I would never get done nor would my trade get their goods. This is an age of specialists and the more we specialize in our help, the better service will we get and give, and the more truly will we operate economically.

Here and there we find a "jewel" of a man on whom we can depend to make time, using every motion to advantage; but these are far between. The average deliveryman is already plentifully supplied with "reasons why" he does not get back in time for more work, and I do not want to give him any more good excuses.

The Deliveryman's Place.

This does not mean that any man is to refuse another order or be uncivil. It simply means that the deliveryman is there to distribute goods. If he does that he will justify his employment, earn his money, and in the long run build up more business for us than he might ever do through combining soliciting with his other work.

Gasolene.

The automobile has developed such a demand for gasolene, that some grocers who have had little or no trade in that line are pushing its sale. For my part I hope for the speedy arrival of the day when gasolene will be considered as foreign to the stock suitable to a grocery store as boots and shoes. Groceries began with everything—almost any old junk—in fact, "gross-erie;" but to-day groceries are primarily foods, accompanied with such household goods as can be dealt in without injuring the foods. Gasolene does not belong in the up-to-date grocery store. It will not be handled in Johnson's after a date less than one year in the future.

Peddlers and Canvassers for Outside Houses.

Periodically we hear a wail from some quarter: "What can we do to get rid of peddlers and canvassers who take orders for fly-by-night houses on the representation that their goods are high grade, comply with pure food laws, etc.?"

Laws Not Enforced.

I am informed that there are now on the statute books of almost every section and in the ordinances of towns and villages laws and regulations sufficient to give us all the legal ammunition we need to make these people take out licenses which will put them on a par with local taxpayers. Those laws, if enforced, would go far toward wiping out the peddler and would help a lot with the other fellows; but no law was ever much good if allowed to lie dormant in perpetual hybernation, as is the case with so many good laws.

Something like active, interested participation in the work of the local grocers' associations everywhere would result in the enforcement of these regulations. If we do not like the way some things are going, it is up to us, personally, to get out and hustle amoung our neighbors to dig these things up and make use of them.

Know You Have Good Goods.

Meantime, very strict attention to our own "fences" will help some. If we keep our stores clean, orderly, properly stocked with goods that are really good—and which we KNOW are good—we shall not feel the presure of the peddlers or the transient canvassers very much.

But that of itself is not quite enough. After knowing about our goods ourselves, we must take pains to see that others know about them too. We may have a lot of light, but if all our wires run down cellar, we shall not illuminate the world very much. We must use our windows, and interior displays with neat price signs; and we must use the newspapers or, if your locality can better be served that way, circulars or letters. But whatever we do, we must get our good things prominently before our own people. We have all the opportunity there is to do this; we have too lavish a supply of opportunity which we do not use, otherwise those outside fellows would not have the cinch they find when they come among us. It is our own fault mostly, if they "get away" with anything in particular.

Something About Cinnamon.

By the way, speaking of KNOWING that goods are right: Do you know that ordinary Canton Cinnamon, in the stick, costs around 6c a pound in first hands.

and that fine Saigon Cinnamon, also in the stick, is worth around 45c in first hands? If these two products are powdered, they will both be pure cinnamon, both will comply with every food law on the statute books; but do you imagine that they will both be equally satisfying to the discriminating consumer? Maybe you better think and study out some of these things when you feel coming over you the disposition to cry out about some special form of "competition."

And, also by the way, you may note that grocers who do study along those lines are usually so busy taking care of their highly profitable trade that peddlers and canvassers do not bother them much, though they are also the kind of men that do their full duty at the polls and as citizens generally to promote the general good.

Confucius' Little Thinklets.

Appropos of nothing in particular, the following Confucian bits of wisdom seem suitable for closing this talk:

1. He that knows not and knows not that he knows not, is a Fool—shun him.
2. He that knows not and knows that he knows not, is Simple—teach him.
3. He that knows and knows not that he knows, is Asleep—wake him.
4. He that knows and knows that he knows, is Wise—follow him.

CREAM CHEESE FOR CHILDREN.

An authority on cream cheese says that "it is an excellent thing to give the children now and again. It makes a most welcome change from butter or jam, and is very nourishing and digestible.

"It should be eaten alone, not with butter, and the children should be encouraged to help themselves liberally to salt with it."

POINTERS FOR CONSIDERATION.

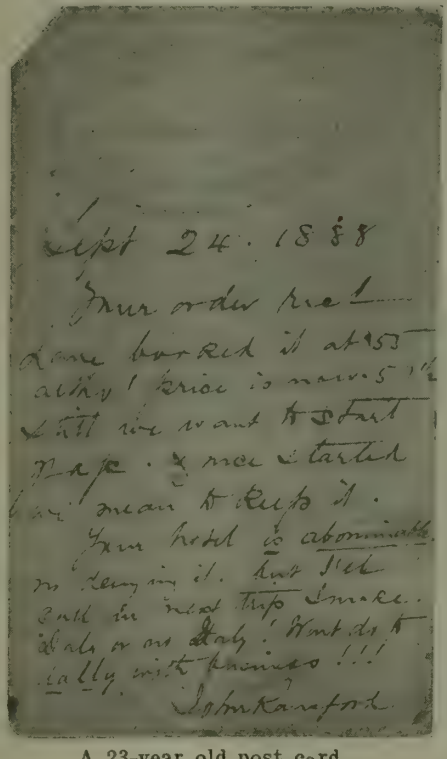
A merchant must take pains in his buying if he would secure a good profit.

When you can't make the sale without stretching the truth let the sale go.

If you have trouble in remembering the things you ought to remember, train and cultivate your memory.

The employe who asks no questions will gain mighty little information. The employer who is bothered if he has to answer questions is not deserving of ambitious clerks.

Reports from western New York say the output of evaporated apples this year will be fully 50 per cent. larger than in the best season they ever had. Canada, it is believed, will have some for export.



Value of Good Service Well Illustrated

Story of How Salt Manufacturer Held Customer's Trade for 23 Years—Reason Why Leaks Out at Manufacturers' Dinner, Shownig Importance of Proper Service — Competitors as Friends.

John Ransford arrived in this country many years ago from England, and became financially interested in the salt industry at Clinton, Ont.

About the same time C. C. L. Wilson, a Scotchman, settled at Ingersoll, to pack hogs for the British market.

Mr. Ransford needed customers, and it was not long until he found Mr. Wilson. He paid several visits to Ingersoll, and finally got Mr. Wilson interested in the products of the Stapleton Salt Works. A few days after his last visit in 1888, just over 23 years ago, Mr. Ransford received his first order from Mr. Wilson. From that day and without any interruption, and in spite of all competition, Mr. Ransford has held that business.

Service Held the Business.

At the annual dinner of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association a short time ago, Mr. Ransford and Mr. Wilson sat opposite each other at the table. Mr. Wilson opened his pocket book and out of it produced a postal card from Mr. Ransford, accepting the first order and presenting it to the latter. In the conversation that followed Mr. Wilson stated that it had been his policy to stick loyally to firms who had given him good service and who had always shown themselves to be absolutely reliable; and Mr. Ransford said that his policy had been to give the very best service possible and to endeavor to do at all times more than he had ever promised.

It happened that Mr. Ransford's great rival, E. G. Henderson, the manager of the Windsor Salt Works, was seated on Mr. Wilson's right, and he remarked that now he understood why, although he and Mr. Wilson were great friends, he could never sell him a pound of salt.

Business Rivals as Friends.

There are two lessons for the young business man from this experience that are well worth heeding. One is the importance of giving a good service to your customers, and the other that you can be on friendly terms with your competitors. A representative of The Grocer who has attended gatherings of manufacturers and business men for many years has noticed that these two men, Messrs. Ransford and Henderson, are almost invariably together. They are deadly rivals in business and chums in private life.

The accompanying card shows that Mr. Ransford was somewhat of a humorist. He is still quite as bad, for during the meeting of the Manufacturers' Association referred to, he took up a subscription for a wedding present for the retiring president, W. H. Rowley, of the E. B. Eddy Co. He approached Mr. Rowley with a sheet filled with names and said; "I am taking up a subscription for a worthy cause, I would like you to give me a subscription." "What is it for?" Mr. Rowley asked. "Never mind what it is for," he answered. "What do you want?" Mr. Rowley asked. "$25." Mr. Rowley put his hand in his pocket, and paid over the $25 with a sigh.

NEW BROOM FACTORY.

Essex grown broom corn will, it is understood, be largely used in the new broom factory to be established here by Alfred Farnsworth, who recently returned to Ridgetown from the Canadian West. Mr. Farnsworth has secured the Hunter building, on Erie St. north, and has purchased the machinery from the Comber factory, which will be transferred to the Ridgetown building in time to start manufacturing operations in November. Both brooms and brushes will be manufactured.

Country Town Dealer and His Methods

Fall and Winter Always Harvest Seasons For Him—Trade Conditions Around Barrie and Orillia—Special Features in The Businesses of Merchants In These Towns—Much Being Done on Large Scale.

Fall, and in fact winter trading generally, cuts a wider swath in a country merchant's business than does trading at any other time in the year. This is but natural. Dealing direct with the farming community the country merchant be he grocer or other tradesman meets his customers more frequently in the fall when the farmer is disposing of his produce and preparing to lay up his store of supplies.

For the reason that it is swallowed up more or less in the general fall trade the Christmas season in the smaller centres has not been made the feature it is in the cities and larger commercial towns of the country. But times are changing, and with the closer settling of the country districts and the opening up of the rural sections by railways bringing the farm and the town closer together there is a growing demand for what have been regarded as distinctively Christmas groceries by the farmer and his wife.

Interest is Extending.

And thus we see the country merchant and the grocer in the smaller towns taking more interest in the prices and quotations of dried fruits, peels, and the other lines of Christmas goods than ever before, because the farmer and his family are now looking on these grocery lines more in the nature of seasonable necessities than luxuries.

Just as an example. Barrie and Orillia are two Ontario towns which while not new centres are just now reaching out after enlarged territory. Both are caterers for the summer tourist trade, in which they have met with success, but in the fall and winter have been content with their local and nearby country trade, which, by the way, is not inconsiderable.

At the present time trading with the farming community is at its best, and while the farmers are bringing in their apples and produce they are also buying groceries and provisions. The relations between farmer and trader are decidedly cordial. Barrie has a splendid market; Orillia a nominal one. In the one town the grocers buy largely on the market; in the other the farmers sell direct to the stores. The results are satisfactory in both cases, for in both this farmers' trade is catered to. Payment is made in cash or goods, whichever the farmer wishes, though often when cash is asked a slight discount is made. Butter worth 22 cents a pound in groceries is paid for at the rate of 20 cents in cash.

What Becomes of Produce.

Butter, eggs, poultry and apples are the produce lines coming mostly to the grocers of these towns and these are packed and shipped to a variety of points—wherever the price happens to be best. They are favored in this regard for demand is free, and comes from both consumers and shipping agencies. One day it is to Montreal for shipment to Europe; again it is to a Winnipeg concern for distribution in the great West; and another time it is sent to a customer in Goderich, or Kingston, or perhaps Toronto.

And just here is where the Barrie and Orillia merchant gets even with the large department houses in Toronto. The catalogues sent out from these large stores may bring some northern business to the department stores, but the grocers in the northern towns sell poultry, eggs and butter right under the noses of these big stores in Toronto.

Extensive Poultry Trade.

James Vair & Co., of Barrie, ship around five or six barrels of poultry a week to customers of theirs, and much larger quantities of butter and eggs. In apples alone they have shipped to Winnipeg and the West some 10,000 barrels—sufficient to fill 127 cars. They have an egg and butter storage department, candling their own eggs as they come in.

But this is practically what all the grocers and general merchants are doing in that north country, particularly in those two towns. Thos. Mulcahy, Chris. Moore & Co., T. B. Cramp, J. J. Hatley, and Vick's Grocery, all in Orillia, are doing this, with some particular feature emphasized in each case.

The Dominion Government sends out a refrigerator car from Orillia every Monday for the convenience of those shippers sending produce to Montreal and abroad, and practically all of them avail themselves of this convenience. In summer much of the butter received by these grocers comes from the farm in crocks of varying weights, but in winter most of it is received in pound prints, for it is no easy matter to cut cold bulk butter. The prints are convenient in size for handling and for making up box and case shipments, and the winter weather keeps the butter in sound condition. For these reasons the grocers prefer receiving their butter in prints in winter.

Most of the butter and eggs are shipped to Montreal in summer, the receivers there being ready at all times to take quantities large and small, and there is not the spasmodic demand that sometimes obtains from buyers in other sections of Canada; but in winter when a slight delay in receipts does not make a great difference, or an order from a faraway point is under consideration, the weather outside is sometimes conducive to making shipments to other Canadian points—of course if prices are right. Mulcahy's send lots of butter north and west in winter in various sized consignments, they being certain that if any stock remains on hand at the end of the week it can be sent out on Monday on the Government car to Montreal.

Their Own Storage Plants.

But often it pays to keep the stock of butter and eggs, and the grocers are prepared for this eventuality, by having up-to-date storages and cooling plants. Mulcahy's have a separate building devoted to this purpose, with distinct compartments for eggs and butter, so have Moore & Co., and also Vick's Grocery. J. J. Hatley has a refrigerating plant, a cooling plant and a separate storage not only for their produce lines, but for their fish, meats, and stocked groceries.

T. B. Cramp while dealing in these produce lines makes a specialty of buying apples for shipment; distributing in return salt to the farmers, and to the trade, and bringing in standard brands of flour in car lots, which he divides up with his fellow grocers.

Great Summer Resort Trade.

A reference was made to the north country trade, which to Orillia, at least, means a great deal, not only in the future, but in the present. In summer the grocers of the town have the whole Muskoka Lake region to play on, as well as the smaller and less well-known resorts closer at hand; and all the year round there is the immense region between Orillia and North Bay, and the greater territory beyond in the Cobalt mining district right up to Cochrane. Orillia grocers sell in every part of this region. They ship especially heavy groceries, vegetables, meats, bread and cakes. This is a year-round selling ground, while the Lake region is catered to only in summer.

Fair Profit and Quick Turnover.

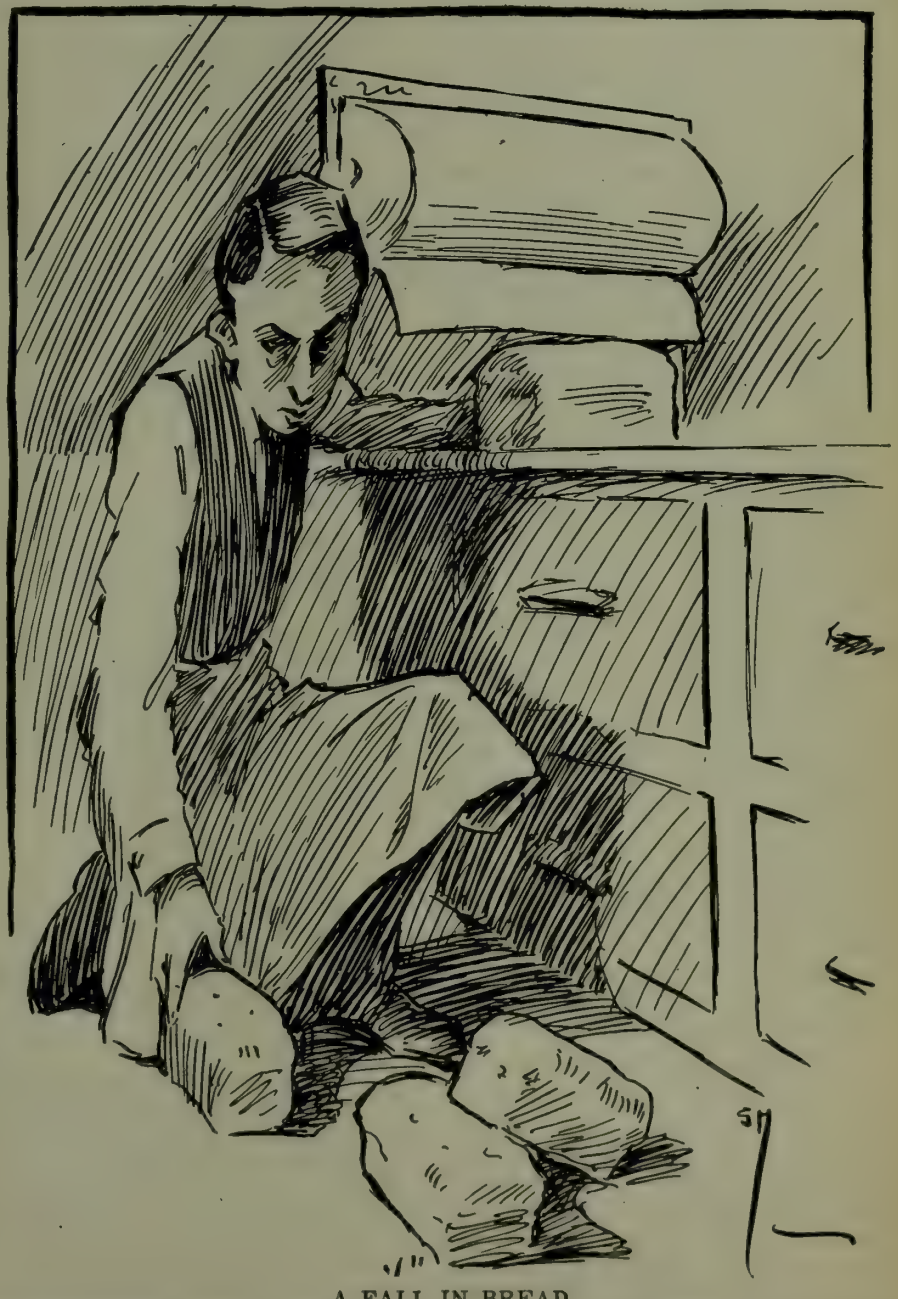
But coming back to the strictly holiday groceries and the means whereby the grocers strive to induce greater and better trading. J. J. Hatley, himself a butcher, has in A. E. Hawkins an expert manager of his grocery department, and this department is one of the well-known grocery stores in Orillia. Mr. Hawkins has been in charge for fourteen years, and he knows the business and the needs of his territory and his customers from a to z. He believes in a fair profit on all lines, and a quick turnover of stock. He thinks that a profit of 10 per cent. on goods and a turning over of stock ten times in the year is more profitable than a turning over of the stock but five times at double ten per cent.

He is absolutely opposed to price cutting and does not take much stock in selling even one line at cost or below to induce trade.

Mr. Hatley buys pretty largely of the lines that are staple and which he believes will sell well; carries fruits when in season; all kinds of vegetables the year round, the potato cellar alone is capable of taking care of 600 bags of tubers; confectionery, which used to be a summer line for tourists is now a staple one with a growing Christmas demands; makes a specialty of fish; and handles all fresh and salt meats, having his own packing house and curing plant.

Dried Fruits at Opening Prices.

Every year he buys larger quantities of dried fruits and peels for Christmas selling. As a rule his manager thinks buying at the first opening price is better than delaying, for quotations are apt to increase with the advancing season, though last year was an exception to this. In buying dried fruits he would rather take double the quantity of evaporated apricots than peaches (or vice versa) if the first named article happened to be quoted at less than the former, for he has found that the demand runs to the lower priced article in the majority of cases.



Quality First; Price After.

Thos. Mulcahy caters to local, farm and export trade. They do a general store business, but groceries is a decidedly important department. They are already preparing for Christmas trade, and when that season is over contemplate overhauling the department and improving it to meet increased business. Teefy Mulcahy, the manager, states that the store motto is "Quality first and price after." He is preparing his catalogue for fall, Christmas and winter trading, which is circulated all over the adjoining counties, almost to Barrie on the south, to Beaverton on the other side of the lake, and to the Muskoka lakes on the north. This or a similar catalogue he mails to the residents of all the townships within those boundaries four times a year. And it pays too, he says, judging from results—his reasoning when inaugurating this catalogue being that if it is good for department stores in the large centres it should also be good for the farmer's store in the market town.

Using the Newspaper.

Chris Moore & Co., are also general merchants with a special grocery department. They cater particularly to farm trade, exchanging goods for produce lines, depending on newspaper advertising for publicity; and Vick's grocery has a bakery and confectionery department—in fact it is perhaps the biggest bakery in that section of Ontario, supplying the whole Muskoka and northern region from Barrie to Cobalt.

All of the Orillia grocers are enthusiastic about their fall and winter trade prospects, and are anticipating the Christmas season this year somewhat in the nature of an experiment—an experiment, however, which they feel will be successful.

A FALL IN BREAD.

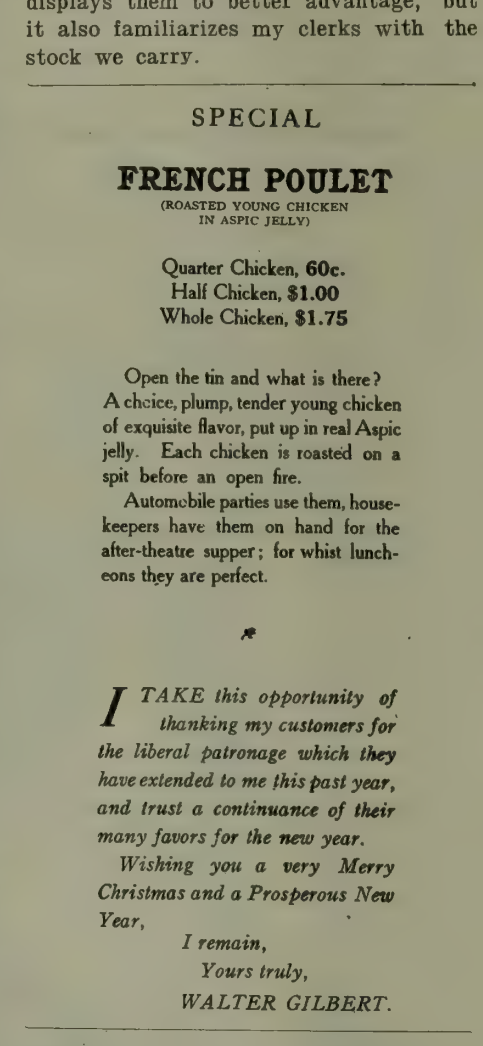
Wrapping bread which a clerk has allowed to fall on floor before a customer, is not good policy.

Salesmanship Illustrated in N.B. Store

Methods of St. John Dealer to Interest Customers—Makes Frequent Changes of Scenery—Bringing Goods to the Front—How He Obtains Co-operation of Clerks to Move Out Certain Lines of Goods.

There is an atmosphere of briskness and activity coupled with neatness about Gilbert's Grocery, corner of Princess and Charlotte streets, St. John, New Brunswick, which immediately on entering makes a direct appeal to the fancy of the customer, and seems to impress her with the idea that "Here is a good place to buy." The grocery store is roomy and attractive, and has been considerably enlarged since being taken over some seven years ago by Walter Gilbert, the present owner, who is still a young man, with up-to-date ideas of doing business, and who gives great promise of still further expansion, from his modern methods which spell success.

Changes Store Management.



When a representative of The Grocer called upon him last week, he was busy with what he styled his "fall housecleaning," though in reality, he explained, he performed a somewhat similar obligation about three or four times a year. By this, Mr. Gilbert said, he meant that he changed the appearance of his store in an inexpensive manner, using the same fixtures, counters, etc., but shifting them and his silent salesmen and showcases, in addition to his goods, about in such a manner, that a customer would really think it was a different store, when glancing at the arrangement of the interior.

"I always endeavor," Mr. Gilbert said, "to have all my goods in season, and for this purpose, every little while I take account, or stock as it is called, of what goods I have on hand, and then I push them to the front, in order that my wares may not become unsalable, and also that I may really know what I have on hand. It is wonderful how goods will pile up on one, if he does not be careful to keep track of what is coming in. I always keep quite a stock of goods in reserve and if you were to look into my cellar now you would see there quite as much of the different lines as are displayed about the store.

Jams, Soups and Canned Goods.

"As you see for yourself this afternoon, I am having my clerks rearrange the appearance of the store by changing the various lines from their usual positions. For instance, on a portion of one side of the shop, in the shelves, there, I am having all my lines of preserves brought forward, while on the other side, my soups, canned goods, of all kinds may be seen.

"My show cases in which I keep chocolates and confectioneries, I also change about, and instead of having those two silent salesmen on that side, they will be removed to another position. In other various ways I change the interior appearance of the store, and I find that in shifting my goods about, it not only displays them to better advantage, but it also familiarizes my clerks with the stock we carry.

How Canned Goods Sales are Made.

"Now, every fall, of course, like other grocers, I purchase a large stock of canned goods. But I do not believe in keeping them too long on hand. When I got my supply a few days ago, I had one of my clerks 'phone to my customers informing them we had a choice lot of canned goods and were willing to sell reasonably, and do you know, that in a very short time in one afternoon, we had orders for sixty-five cases of canned goods. Thus, to my mind, this pushing of reliable goods is better than keeping them in the warehouse or cellar until you dispose of them slowly."

Mr. Gilbert does not believe in the custom of some merchants of buying large quantities of vegetables in the fall, that is barrels of potatoes, turnips, carrots, etc. He does not think it profitable except in a few cases. When he considers the time needed, the help and other expenses, he says, he is content with merely buying a few barrels of one special brand of potatoes, and selling in quantities of a bushel or peck to some customers who have been getting them from him for years.

As the winter approaches, he makes particular effort to see that his store is comfortably heated, both for the benefit of his customers and his clerks, for the latter he thinks will co-operate with him in his business interests more readily when their place of work is warm and comfortable.

Good Example of Selling Power.

As regards the clerks assisting him in this way, he instanced several lines of goods in which he had met with success. "I take a number of these articles, for example," he said, holding to view some tempting looking bottled preserves, "and I say to my clerks, 'Now, I want you to sell these this week, I guess we can do it, can't we?' And then the power of suggestion at once enters into the business and few customers leave the store without taking with them from the counter on which some have been conveniently placed, a bottle or two of these preserves, or whatever other article I decide to "push."

Mr. Gilbert is of the opinion that he does more advertising than any other grocer in St. John, and he was just in the midst of a eulogy on the benefits of publicity when he was called upon to sign a check for a page he had taken in the city telephone directory. He did so with good grace, as he is a firm believer in the power of advertising, and what is more important, "keeping at it." It is the persistency of the grocer in advertising which in the long run must bring him results and that is why Mr. Gilbert does so much of it.

Has Seven Show Windows.

There are seven good sized windows in Gilbert's grocery, three on one street and four on another, and each of these helps in "boosting" certain lines of goods, for by frequent changing of the window displays, and by making them attractive at all seasons of the year, the "good work goes on."

"Yes, at Christmas time, I go after as much trade as I can possibly get," said Mr. Gilbert on being questioned in this regard. "But my motto is to be 'after it at all times.' However, at this season of the year, I have several hundred copies of a circular printed telling of the articles essential to the enjoyment of the happy season, which may be purchased reasonably at my store. These circulars I send out to all of my customers, and to many other prospective customers. From one customer alone, last Christmas, when I sent out these posters, I received an order which paid the cost of getting them out.

"And one of the first paragraphs to be presented to the customer on looking over the circular is expressive of thanks for the patronage of the past year, and also extending the best wishes of the season.

"I do not wish to be severe upon the calendar publishing companies, but I must say that I have little faith in the delivery of calendars at this season. I have done it in the past, but I do not know that I have gained anything by it. So far as I can see, presenting calendars only has a tendency to 'make good friends with the cook,' but other than that, I don't see where they are very beneficial in the grocery business."

Mr. Gilbert's practical ideas of doing business have brought him success, as is apparent on making an inspection of his store with all its up-to-date equipments, and modern lines of goods, and there seems no doubt but that the coming Christmas trade will be profitable for him.

Motor and Horse Delivery Cost

Figures Supplied by Dealers Who Are Now Operating An Automobile Delivery —The Advertising Value of the Motor—Quicker Service Supplied to Customers.

The use of the automobile in delivery seems to be steadily gaining ground with Canadian grocers. The fact that numerous grocers are turning to this method of delivery would seem to imply that.

The change so far has been slow in Canada but those dealers who have adopted this system seem to be well satisfied with it both in regard to the service and the cost of maintenance. It is only after careful consideration that the change comes for it means a considerable outlay, the initial cost seems a big item while dealers are not as well acquainted with the cost of running an automobile as with horse delivery.

Double Horse Work.

"We consider," said the manager of a Toronto retail firm "that an automobile can do more work than two horses. In fact, our change from horses to automobiles proves it.

"An as advertising medium to the grocer using it," he continued, "it is valuable. It is also an advertisement by reason of the fact that it gives prompt delivery. That is as good an advertisement as any store can ask for."

The firm in question has two automobile delivery cars. They formerly had six horses delivering, but now they have only one which they use in the immediate neighborhood.

They figure that the cost of repairs, gasoline, etc., for each machine costs $25 per month. They have their own garage. The same drivers manage the cars as formerly drove the wagons. Their cars cost $1,300 each.

Comparison of Costs.

Here is how the two methods compare in cost :

Original Cost.

5 horses and wagons, $350	$1,750
2 cars at $1,300	2,600
Maintenance, wagons, etc., per week :
5 drivers at $10.00	$50.00
5 horses, upkeep $3.50	17.50
	$67.50

Maintenance automobile per week :
2 drivers @ $10	$20.00
Repairs, gasoline, etc., 2 cars	12.00

Wagon delivery, $3,510 ; auto delivery, $1,664. Difference, $1,846.

The development of any business calls for the development of its facilities. In the city, the automobile allows the store to reach out much farther for its trade. In the country towns it enables the dealer to establish a rural service that may be made to increase the business. It makes speed possible in the delivery of orders. Those who have already installed this system claim that it will do more work than a horse or in some cases, two horses.

Handy Table of Comparisons.

Herewith is a table compiled by a firm manufacturing commercial delivery cars and shows the total monthly expenses of horse and motor delivery as given by a number of users of these cars. These are accurate figures supplied by merchants who have changed from horse to motor delivery. The cost of maintenance includes the wages of drivers :—

†Wages not included in this report.

One grocer in speaking of his car, a hard tire one with covered top which presents an attractive appearance and helps in advertising the store declared that it is the promptness in delivery that counts and the accommodation which it affords customers. "It can go twice the distance," he says in the same time as a horse or more. If an order is waiting, you send it out and what does it mean ? Nothing but a little gasoline. With a horse you are always waiting to send everything in that direction at once and save the horse, so that the delivery is not satisfactory."

Selling Methods of a Toronto Dealer

Wm. C. Miller, President of T. R. G. A., Tells of Methods of Conducting Fall Winter and Christmas Trade—Many Sidelines Handled Around Christmas—Believes Proper Display of Wonderful Value in Making Sales—Improvement Brought About by Remodelling Store Front.

Wm. C. Miller, President of The Toronto Retail Grocers' Association, conducts a store on Yonge St., the principal thoroughfare of the "Queen City," and his methods of looking after the fall, Christmas and winter trade, will undoubtedly be of interest to grocers from coast to coast. That his business is on the increase, is evidenced by the fact that he has recently enlarged his establishment at 632 Yonge St. He is not slow to adopt new methods that will increase sales or facilitate the work in connection with the store.

Makes Plans Well Ahead.

To get the best results from any particular season, Mr. Miller says, that some planning ahead is essential. Not alone is this necessary in the selling, but also in the buying. In this regard, he purchases his supplies of dried fruits, canned goods, jams, and similar lines to be delivered on arrival. He gauges the amount of his purchases by the quantity he sold the year before. Of course, in this, some judgment has to be used, and prices during both years considered. For instance, if a line is higher than usual, he buys a little more cautiously than he otherwise would.

Better Choice in Early Buying.

His Christmas goods are bought early in the year, when he has a better choice, and is also sure of getting the goods in plenty of time. Besides the immediate sales, he believes that novelties help in the decoration of the store and give it a Christmas appearance. He handles crackers, bonbons, cossacks, Christmas stockings, bells, and other novelties. He believes that all these associated lines are within the scope of the grocer, and besides a good margin reaped, it facilitates shopping for the customer, and this is something at which the grocer should aim. Of course, there are those lines such as grapes, apples, nuts, table raisins, shelled nuts, and other table requirements to which he gives due prominence at this time.

Christmas Cake a Side Line.

Around Christmas there are many side lines which Mr. Miller carries to good advantage. For instance, the week preceding Christmas, he sells Christmas cakes as well as short cake, bearing the season's greetings on the wrapper. He also goes into the poultry business to supply all the wants of his customers. He does not buy a big stock ahead, unless he is certain he is getting them at a price that will allow him to compete satisfactorily with the regular dealers in this line.

Christmas trees is another side line which he makes sell well. The farmers bring them in and he stores them at the back of the store, putting one or two in a prominent place for sales purposes. This line yields a handsome profit and does not interfere with the regular business, as trees are easily sold and delivered.

No Calendars Given Away.

"No, I don't give away calendars at Christmas time," states Mr. Miller, "because I don't think they are appreciated. Instead, I send customers something out of stock, such as a bottle of wine, or a cake. When you give something like that with a Christmas greeting card attached, they appreciate it. I often have some customers call at the store or ring me up on the phone and thank me for my gift, which is never done in a case of many other free novelties.

"It costs more to do this, but it helps to bind a customer to the store, and results are fully in proportion to the amount expended.

Store Appearance Helps Sales.

"Proper decoration of the store to give it an attractive appearance is half the battle," said he, reverting to Christmas trade. "I try to give the store that appearance that puts the Christmas spirit into customers. I use large and small extension Christmas bells, evergreens, holly, mistletoe, as well as Christmas trees in trimming the window.

When Christmas Goods Are Shown.

"Preceding and around Christmas, it is necessary to have a series of window displays, and judgment has to be used to show certain lines, when they will create the largest sales. A few weeks before Christmas, I specialize on raisins, currants, peels, molasses, spices, and all the other lines used in preparing the Christmas cooking.

"Then we have to get ready for the Christmas gifts, and my window shows besides the novelties, such lines as tea in fancy caddies, biscuits in fancy tins, shortbread, Christmas cake, and poultry. If the weather is favorable, I hang a few poultry outside, but if too cold, I display them in the window, as when frozen they lose in weight."

Nuts and Confectionery Time.

When the day draws near, Mr. Miller finds it expedient to give special prominence to nuts, confectionery, oranges, apples, grapes, and kindred lines. Cranberries is also another line, while all during the holiday season, oysters can be sold easily.

"In trimming the window, I put oranges, grapes and apples in fancy baskets, which show them up better. I have a reserve stock from which orders can be filled, so that the window does not have to be disturbed when once arranged. During Christmas week, I always mark the goods in my window in plain figures. It is a season when people are trying to make a dollar go as far as possible and price is always a consideration. When the rush is on it greatly facilitates serving customers when they are acquainted with the price."

He does not believe in giving up just as soon as Christmas is past. He finds a good many people celebrate New Year, so he gives just as much attention to the window and store display as before. A good opportunity is presented to clear off any left-over gifts, as many people wish to reciprocate gifts received. He buys so that he will have as little left as possible, but if he finds that he will have an over-supply of anything, he marks the price down to clear it out. Staples such as dried fruits, are not given so much attention until after the New Year when he goes back to the ordinary lines. If, as the winter draws to a close, he finds any line sticking, he makes a special effort to sell while it is yet seasonable.

How He Gets Some Good Trade.

In a city like Toronto, unlike a small town, more judgment has to be used in advertising, or a good deal will go to waste. Mr. Miller, however, at intervals takes a space in the weekly paper covering his district, while dodgers are occasionally used. His best advertisements however, are his show windows, which are always kept attractively trimmed. He can trace many of his best customers to a chance sale through the medium of his window. The window attracted them and good service retained them.

Then, Mr. Miller, carries an ad. on all the paper bags he sends out, which helps to keep his name before the public. In this ad., the name is outstanding while the phone and street numbers are prominent. At the bottom, is the inscription, "the store that aids economists." He believes that this ad. helps somewhat..

Displays in the store are changed frequently, so that goods are presented to customers in a different manner on each visit. Quite often, Mr. Miller spends an evening in removing all goods from a certain section, dusts them and re-arranges, so that the stock looks bright and fresh.. Spare time is spent in packaging staple lines. Previous to Christmas, he has a large quantity of nuts, raisins, sugar, peels, and similar lines all ready in different weights, so that customers may be served with greater rapidity during the rush period.

Arrangement of Stock.

Mr. Miller has his stock arranged attractively, and in such a manner as to facilitate work and the location of goods. On one side he carries nothing but canned goods, while the other is given over to glass goods. At the rear is found his different package goods. Bulk goods, such as sugar are convenient to the scales.

He is not in favor of a steady use of price cards, believing that they detract in some cases from the attractiveness of the goods. However, when he has special counter displays, or is introducing a new line, show and price cards are used.

STORE PHILOSOPHY.

If you are going to make any difference in the treatment of different classes of customers, make it in favor of the humbler class. They are the more sensitive.

There are many ways of giving your customers bargains without selling goods at a loss. Better look them up.

Every merchant needs all his advertising space for his own use, without giving any of it up to exploiting his competitors by knocking them either directly or indirectly.

If you can make your customers think you are saving them money, whether you are or not, you will hold them fast.

One plan that is better than buying more goods than you need so as to get quantity discounts, is buying less quantity and more variety.

Store Front Remodelled.

He believes that proper display is the life of trade. It was with this in view that he recently had his store as well as his store front remodelled. The improvement is shown in the two accompanying photographs, one before the change, the other after. It demonstrates what an improvement is possible in the windows. The amount expended returns a good dividend in increased business.

The value of his present window as a display medium is self-evident. It consists of a double platform, the main display being about three feet above the sidewalk, while the space underneath serves as a silent salesman, thus just about doubling the value of the window as a means of selling goods.

You may think you use lots of show cards, but there are a dozen places around the store where another would make sales. Look it up !

Attractive show cards are desirable, but don't make them so pretty that people think they are pictures and forget what they say.

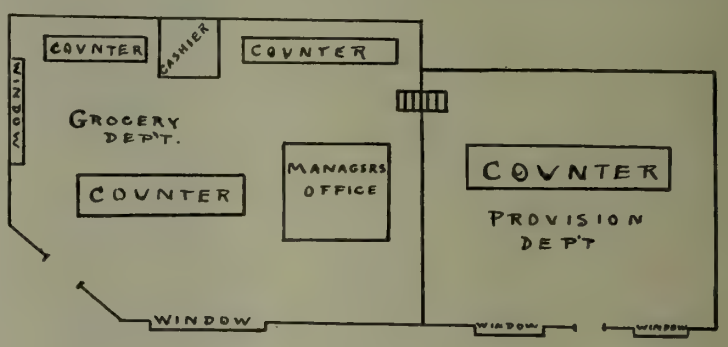
Methods of Receiving Cash Lose Money

Systems of Three Dealers Analyzed Showing How They are Being Cheated—Course of Some Sales' Slips From Provision Counter Which Should Go To Cashier—Cash Register and Cash Carrier Two Better Methods Submitted.



By Frank D. Smith.

The grocer assumes his customers are honest, and he is safe in so considering the majority of them. But the writer has conversed with so many of the trade who have recounted stories of petty stealing that it is not a good policy to take for granted the honesty of the "dear public" in general.

When a customer buys at a counter and pays a clerk who sends the slip and change to the cashier via a cash carrier, or gives a cash register receipt, there is little chance of a leakage in the arrangements; but it is not ever store that boasts of a system as perfect as this. By referring to three concrete examples it can be best illustrated how the unscrupulous customer can take advantage of a grocer who is not aware of weak links in his store arrangement.

Store No. 1.—Note Relation of Provision Dept. to Cashier's Desk. System of Taking in Cash Permits of Thefts on Part of Customers.

Store No. 3.—Similarly Laid Out Store to that of Store No. 1, Presenting Some Opportunities.

A Slipshod Method.

Grocer number one is an Ontario grocer east of Toronto. He has devoted one corner of his store to provisions. It is enclosed in glass and is certainly a compact and neat department.

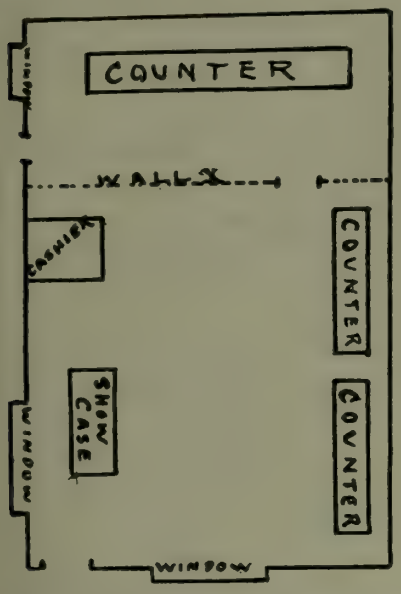
By reference to the plan shown herewith it will be seen that just outside this department was the bookkeeper's cage. A customer was supposed to receive a slip from the provision salesman and hand it over to the cashier with the necessary sum of money. At times, however, the salesman, who was trusted absolutely by his employer, took the money himself and put a slip for the amount on a file. At the end of the day he would turn in his slips and his cash. It was a very slipshod method and there was no regular plan followed. One day the customer might have to pay at the office, the next in the provision department. As stated above, the salesman was trusted and the chances are he was worthy of this confidence.

Edge Away Without Paying.

But when the money was to be paid at the office there was a grand chance for the customer to walk away with the cash instead of paying it. On Saturday nights, on "pay day" nights and on occasions when there was a rush around the cashier's cage, it was a very simple matter to put the slip for ham or sausage in one's pocket, glance over the goods on an adjacent counter and gradually edge away. Some people have such colossal nerve they will attempt anything in this respect, while others who might be dishonest are afraid of the consequences.

But the fact remains that there were people who played this game and the proprietor when he caught them in the act did not accuse them, but pretended not to have noticed. Thus, he kept their trade, which was a questionable asset and the cashier and the provision salesman were told to watch such and such a one. But the weakness still remained, and it is a question whether it is not in the same condition to-day as it was two years ago, when the writer visited that town last.

Much Trust Placed in Clerk.



The story of grocer number two is somewhat similar. He is located in a town in Eastern Ontario. His provision department was entirely separated from the store proper, and only a small door afforded means of communication. Thus the clerk in charge of the meat department had to be trusted a great deal. Customers would be given a slip for the cashier, would enter the front of the store and—well the honest women paid and the others bought something "in the way of groceries," which it will be seen the grocer helped to pay for. This proprietor was trusting his customers and had been duped so often he had become extremely cynical. First it was a dishonest clerk, then it was a realization that some of his customers were cheating him, and the thought that he was powerless to prevent it under that method was a source of great annoyance. People sometimes came in through the provision shop door to enter the store and really did not purchase anything but groceries. Others, however, worked several games. Sometimes the parcel of meat was deposited in a handbag, and in the store this customer apparently had simply passed through the provision department without buying anything. Others even stooped to bringing their own slips. During a busy hour it is next to impossible to watch people and the average grocer, as stated above, assumes his customers to be honest.

Montreal Dealer Also Losing.

Then comes Grocer No. 3. He is located in Montreal and is doing a good business Likewise he has a provision department. You can enter by two doors, one through the meat shop, the other through the main shop door. Coming through the meat shop you mount three or four steps and you are in the main part of the place.

When you purchase meat you receive a check which you are supposed to give the cashier, her cage being in the main store and about three yards from the door that connects the two departments.

How is the cashier to know who buys meat or not, if a parcel is hidden securely in a capacious pocket or bag? The parcel can be carried even into the main store; the customer looks over this counter or that, stops a clerk a moment about some goods and in a few moments the grocer has been "touched," to use a slang phrase, for the customer is on his way home delighted he or she has saved thirty or forty cents. A block away he tears up the slip and the tiny pieces are scattered to the winds.

Are All Busy Men.

Just a concluding word about these three grocers. They are real living dealers, and each one of them has talked with a representative of The Canadian Grocer. No. 1 is a subscriber to this paper, but does not read it as carefully as he should. He is always busy, is generally worrying about getting in some of his credit, and frequently issues a bargain sheet to his customers. No. 2 has been a subscriber to The Grocer. He, likewise, was too busy, and yet he was losing money every day in more ways than one. No 3, in Montreal, says he has not the time to read The Grocer. He has hardly time to look around. He is making money but not as much as he thinks. A man who sells a great deal of goods is generally puffed up with his "success." He is making a noise in the trade, at least he thinks he is. A little more watchfulness over the inner working of the store methods would be a decided financial gain to many a grocer. Take nothing for granted in dealing with a certain portion of the public. Trustfulness is a sentiment that is heroic, but in these columns time after time it has been pointed out that business leaks should be guarded against. It is one of the first essentials to a secure and sound business. For what doth it profit a man to sell goods if he know not what it costs him?

Importance of Proper Delivery Service

Good Service Essential to Holding Trade—How Merchant With Good Delivery Secured Competitor's Trade—Systematic Method of Large City Dealer.

Delivery service is an important factor in getting and holding trade. Merchants are truly realizing that their patronage depends to a great extent upon the quality of service which is afforded to customers.

Just how much their trade is dependent on their service varies with location and character of trade. The high class trade demand a higher degree of service and are generally willing to pay for it.

On opposite corners in a residential section of a city two grocery stores opened. As far as the appearance of these stores were concerned there was no material difference. The quality of the goods carried by both was good. One purchased a handsome delivery wagon, an attractive horse, took particular care in the selection of a driver and gave special attention to delivery service that it might be the best possible.

The other purchased a second-hand delivery wagon, far from attractive; his horse had no particular features of handsomeness, was not carefully groomed, while he gave little attention to getting the goods delivered on time. He seemed to think that as long as customers left orders it made no particular difference when they received their goods.

Better Service Got the Trade.

Comment is hardly necessary as to the outcome. The merchant who gave adequate delivery service gradually gathered in the majority of customers.

In an Ontario town a grocer known to the writer decided his customers were expecting him to cater to them altogether too much by looking for goods to be delivered every day and at all times during the day. He believed customers should be educated to carry their own goods or to order their bulk goods far enough ahead so that immediate delivery would not be necessary. He did not attempt to lessen the number of deliveries each day, but swung to an extreme view on the question and decided he would only deliver every other day. "People ought to be able to order a day ahead anyway," he declared.

A Blow to the Business.

What happened to his trade demonstrates that the public demand an efficient delivery service. Soon his business began to fall off, some of his staunchest friends ordered goods elsewhere and he was forced to return to the old method.

However, he was a business man, and finding that customers demanded a good service, began to plan a method by which he could supply it, but which could be operated with the least cost. In other words, he introduced system into his delivery. When an order was taken the customer was asked when she wished it delivered. All the orders for a certain section were held until the last moment so that the same ground would not have to be covered more than once unless absolutely necessary. One horse was able to do the work. He is now noted in that town for good delivery service, and it is operated with the minimum cost and labor.

Drivers Get Certain Sections.

A large city retail grocer who has seven delivery outfits uses system as much as possible. As far as workable each man is given a certain section, so that he becomes thoroughly acquainted with it, and is able to work more speedily.

"We try to maintain systematic delivery," said the manager, "but there is such a thing as carrying it to an extreme with bad results. It is a thing that cannot always be strictly adhered to, and please all customers. I give my delivery men to understand this, otherwise they would feel I was imposing on them by asking them to deliver at other than the set hours or on their appointed route."

Good delivery service is certainly appreciated by customers and binds them more closely to the store.

WHERE MAIL ORDERS THRIVE.

Whose fault is it if your clerks do not know enough about the goods to sell them? The mail order houses thrive best in the section where local business men are dead ones.

The merchant would do well to consider the advisability of cleaning up the surroundings of his store before the snow comes. When the blanket disappears in the spring, it will present a much better appearance.

Store Plan Conforming to Requirements

Barrie, Ont., General Store Designed to Meet Positive, Well-Thought Out Needs—Special Apartment for Goods for Delivery, So That Drivers Do Not Have to Walk Through Store—Room for Incoming Freight—Butter and Egg Storage—How Offices are Arranged.

Why cannot the interior architecture of the grocery store be made to conform to the requirements of the business? Judging by the shipping departments of most grocery stores they are at best only some kind of a makeshift arrangement whereby the baskets of goods intended for delivery are apt to be scattered all about the least used floor space awaiting sending out to customers, with the danger of being kicked over unwittingly by any person entering the store, or smelt over by some customer's dog.

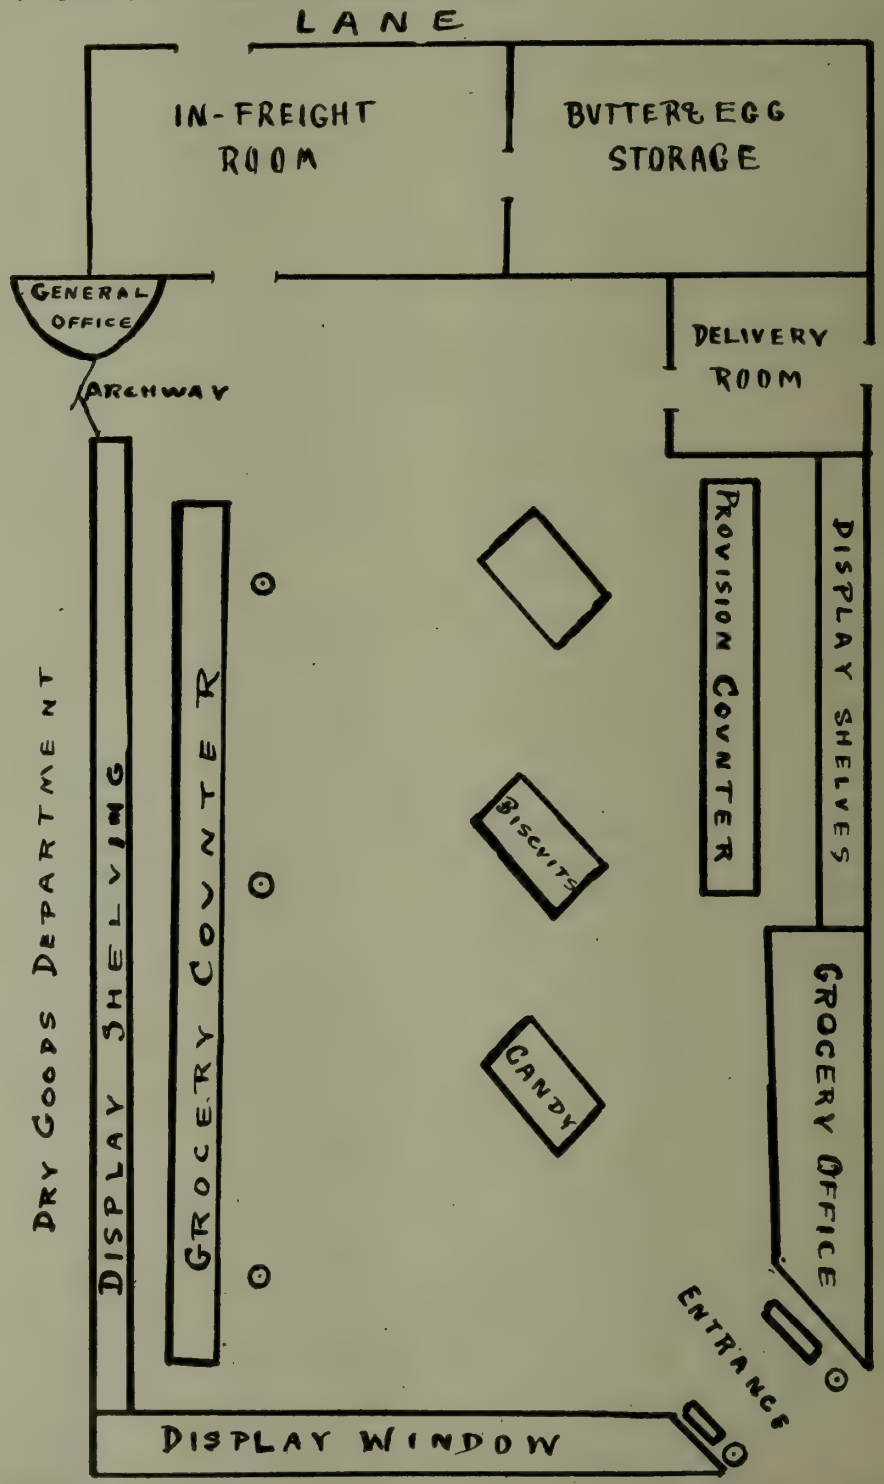
Delivery System in Barrie Store.

There is, however, no reason why this condition should long prevail. James Vair & Co., Barrie, Ont., have overcome this inconvenience by having a separate room with separate entrance through which the driver enters to get his delivery baskets and boxes and load his wagon, without at all causing confusion, interrupting the regular routine of business or interfering with the comfort of customers entering the store to purchase goods or inspect wanted grocery articles.

The Display Facilities.

Seasonable fruits are displayed in front of the store and the windows are given over to alternate displays from the various departments. A wide entrance from the main street leads into the store, on each side of which is displayed the special offerings for that particular day. The left hand side of the store is given over to grocery lines proper, and beyond the cash desk on the right is the provision and cereal department.

This front part of the store is at all times free from delivery baskets, empty boxes and debris of all kinds, the counters, even, being cleared, except for the scales, wrapping paper and bag equipment necessary for serving customers and packing up goods. When a customer has made a purchase payment is made at the cash desk.



How Delivery Parcels are Handled.

Orders for delivery, whether received at the counter or over the 'phone, are filled at the back of the store in a section set apart for this purpose, and as soon as ready are placed in a basket and set in the delivery room, thus indicating they are ready for the wagon when it comes round.

This delivery room is a partitioned off corner at the back of the store containing about 144 square feet. The partition is mostly of glass, thus affording light from the side windows to flood the store almost as well as if no partition were there. The partition, too, serves as a check to the gusty weather outside, especially in winter when drafts are liable to make things unpleasant if not unhealthy in the store.

A door off the side street gives entrance to this delivery room for the use of the driver exclusively. When he enters the delivery room he knows that all the boxes and baskets there are for distribution, so he sorts his route and takes out his goods accordingly.

A laneway at the back of the store is used when goods are received into stock. There is a separate entrance from this lane into the stockroom, which is entirely shut off from the rest of the store.

Special Efforts to Attract Xmas Trade

Buying Dried Fruit—How It is Displayed—Showing Oranges and Apples—Business Done in Xmas Novelties—Attention to Confectionery Department—Fish Department Carefully Looked After.

CENTRALLY located in one of the best residential sections of Toronto, two doors from the corner of Bloor and Yonge, stands one of the largest retail grocery establishments in the Queen City. It is the store of R. Higgins & Son, an example of what can be accomplished in the grocery trade by proper methods and careful management. Like most of our successful business houses in Canada, it has evolved from a modest beginning and is the result of twenty-five years' strict adherence to business principles, backed by genuine endeavor. For a quarter of a century this firm has been expanding, gradually winning the confidence of a larger number of patrons and necessarily adding to the store in order to care for their wants.

Had Small Beginning.

The growth of this business from a small beginning to its present large proportions is just another proof to Canadian dealers of what may be accomplished in their appointed trade. Only a year ago a spacious meat department was added. The firm has a staff of twenty-five or more employes, and seven delivery wagons are necessary.

Fifty Per Cent. Phone Orders.

It has been the endeavor of the firm since the beginning to give the best goods and service possible and it has been this endeavor that has gathered about them some of the best customers the city has to offer. A fact that is worthy of note is that over fifty per cent. of their trade is done over the telephone, demonstrating the wonderful advance in this method of doing business in recent years. The firm does not send men out to solicit orders, but at times they solicit by phone when they have something special to offer. They have a long range of display windows which are of great value in attracting purchasers. With the business at its present proportions special attention must be given to each department, but this F. C. Higgins maintains should be aimed at by every grocer, no matter how small his busines may be.

Preparing for Xmas Trade.

The store has a considerable trade in dried fruits, the larger portion of which are purchased in the fall in good time for the Christmas trade. They fill up pretty well then the Christmas and winter requirements, using the amount sold the year before as an index to their purchases. There is at times one line which on account of price or some other basis will especially appeal to them. When they arrive they are stored in a cool portion of the cellar until required.

They believe that the best time to push a line is when the public is most likely to want them. Therefore there are certain portions of the season when they are given special prominence.

All dried fruits are displayed under glass in a sanitary manner. Sometimes they are shown in a display case, while the box with the glass top is used considerably for this purpose. If they find, as the season of demand is coming to a close, that some line is sticking, they reduce the price and clear it out. "The first loss is the best," they maintain. They find that there is little demand for table raisins, figs and kindred lines after the cold weather, and try to clear them out before then. This store does not feature nuts during the Christmas season only, as many stores do, but displays them all the year round.

Buy Apples as Needed.

A display arrangement whereby one box may be placed above another is used in showing oranges and apples. Besides showing them up well, it saves space. A large quantity of apples is sold, but Mr. Higgins does not believe in storing large quantities in the fall. "I find it wiser to buy as we need them, and pay a little more if necessary. Consumers generally follow the same plan. The city people do not go in for buying large quantities at a time. Of course when we can purchase some good line at a reasonable price, we do so."

Their fruit trade during the winter months consists principally of oranges, grapefruit, bananas and apples. In none of these lines, do they buy ahead, but for actual needs only. There is no wisdom, they claim, in loading up in fruit even if the price does look attractive. Fresh vegetables are handled all the year round, being a good trade attractor.

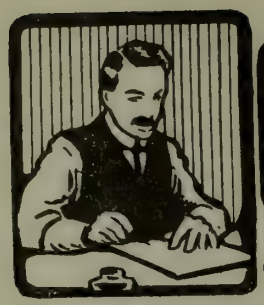
Christmas Novelties.

Christmas is a big season with this firm and special efforts are put forth at this time. "We handle considerable quantities of Christmas novelties," said Mr. Higgins, "but profits are somewhat uncertain, being cut into sometimes by the carry over. In order to make a good display a quantity such as will generally leave a surplus has to be bought. Once the day is past, it is little use pushing this line, and any left over have to be carried for another year."

They handle Christmas crackers, tree decorations, fancy candles and novelties. Green wreathing and Christmas trees are also carried, but they find they only pay when handled in quantities, and with a fair measure of profit to allow for depreciation and possibility of waste.

Handles Confectionery.

"We handle both bulk and package confectionery. In handling bulk goods care should be taken not to give overweight. If a person asks for 10 cents worth of 50-cent chocolates, he will not get a bulky package. The quantity is so small that the salesman is inclined to give overweight. But it is just like tossing coppers into the scale for in 50-cent lines every extra chocolate means a cent given away.



"As we are situated here and having to compete with the stores that handle only confectionery and are open at nights, we do not altogether specialize on this line. The big profit in the confectionery trade is in selling the expensive packages, such as the young man buys for his lady friend. There is no doubt that in the smaller towns where there are no high grade confectionery stores, the grocer could specialize on this line to good advantage." However, in spite of the big competition, the Higgins store does an appreciable trade in confectionery. A good-sized silent salesman is devoted to this line and each individual kind well displayed.

The Fish Department.

Fish is one of the store's big departments and special attention is given to this line, particularly during the fall, Xmas and winter seasons.

"I was forced to handle fish in self-defence," said Mr. Higgins, "just the same as grocers are required to do with many lines. Their competitors handle some line and in order to hold customers firmly they find it necessary to do so also. It is true that the more lines a merchant handles and does so in such a manner as to appeal, the less chance there is of customers going elsewhere to purchase."

The fish department is situated immediately to the side of one of the main entrances. The counter runs parallel to the window so that the man in charge has easy access to the fish shown in the window. This window is used for displaying fish all the time except in the middle of summer. All fish are sent out cleaned and ready for cooking. The fish are shown on porcelain platters presenting a cleanly appearance. Special emphasis is given to this department in their advertising. Fresh fish are the chief lines sold, the trade in salted lines being comparatively small in the cities.

Why Town Grocers Do Not Advertise

Their Objections as Related by Newspaper Advertising Solicitor—Do All the People Know Them, Their Goods and the Prices?—Writer Says Not—Public Must be Convinced by Argument or Experiment, and Former Includes Advertising—The Cost in Small Town Paper.

By R. J. Fry.

To the smaller dealers in towns throughout the Dominion the question of advertising in the local press is often a difficult problem.

Does advertising in small grocery businesses pay? There are scores of grocers who will answer promptly that it does not. But there are always two sides to a case. And on general principles advertising always pays and pays handsomely provided you have the right sort of articles to sell and do your advertising in the proper way.

Objections to Advertising.

But consider for a moment the objections to advertising. Why do the smaller grocers not use newspaper space more freely? The writer recently solicited for advertising in a typical Canadian town of 3,000, where scarcely any of the grocers advertised. There are two weekly papers in the place, each a good medium for reaching the people of the town, which is rapidly growing, and of the rich and prosperous country surrounding it.

When questioned as to why they did not advertise a half dozen or more grocers gave the same story—the people of the town knew them, were familiar with the goods they had to sell, kept in touch with current prices and purchased all they desired without any newspaper solicitation. Under these circumstances advertising, it was claimed, would be merely a waste of money.

Contentions Made Realities.

So much for the side of the non-advertisers. But are their arguments sound and true? Did all the people of the town know them; were the people familiar with their goods; did they know the prices, and did they buy to the extent of their capacity? Unquestionably the contentions were erroneous in every instance. And therein is the essential value of advertising—it alone can convert contentions into realities and make facts out of theories.

How can all the people of even a small town know all the merchants? Population is continuously a changing quantity. As old residents depart, with a loss of custom to one merchant, new ones arrive, with an increased patronage for another, who secures them by some means of attraction—a neat store, effective display, personality, solicitation, advertising.

There's magic in repetition. The man who advertises consistently and persistently, if he is doing nothing else, is establishing a reputation for himself in the public mind—he is known and rated among men and buyers and sooner or later will get his returns. What's in a name? Everything if its reputation is reliable, and the fact is made known. The value is in the public knowing.

End Justifies the Means.

Do all people in a town know the qualities and prices of goods and purchase freely without solicitation? The merchant who imagines they do has yet a wide field of development before him if he will but take advantage of it.

Its fundamentally quality that sells goods. Their are but two ways of convincing people of the merits of any given article—by argument and by experiment. The latter way is the more satisfactory but people will not try a new thing without persuasion. You must argue first—in the newspapers and in your own store in displaying your goods—and the experiments will follow. The result and outcome will be conviction which ensures sales and profits.

Again, prices are a variable quantity and the merchant who would hold his business must be alive to the fact that the public is keenly interested in prevailing prices. Advertising is the best medium of presenting them.

The Power of Suggestion.

At times reductions can be made in clearing out lines, strong impressions being possible under such circumstances by judicious advertising. And finally, suggestion is a powerful factor in life and business. It is possibly most potent in its influence in the realm of salesmanship. If persons are to be induced to purchase beyond their mere requirements—if good salesmanship is to assert itself—advertising must be a vital factor in the campaign, for through it will be generated the power to attract and unite and inspire.

Cost in Weekly Paper.

Yes, advertising pays, if properly conducted; losses are impossible even in the small town. In the town to which reference has been made space was available at 12 or 14 cents per inch per week in either of the local newspapers. Fifty cents a week would secure an ad., which if changed every week, would keep a grocer's name before an ever-changing population, preach quality and prices in his goods, and enlarge his sales materially through seasonable suggestions. The cost would be so trifling that a single extra sale per week would meet it, while the enlistment by publicity of ten or twelve good customers as a direct result of such advertising might mean an increase of $1500 or $2000 in a year in genuine new business. Such is quite within the range of possibility in addition to stimulating regular patrons to larger purchases.

And yet some grocers wonder whether advertising at 50 cents a week in small towns pays?

The Features of Well Written Ad.Copy

Not Enough Importance Given to Form and Subject Matter, Says Critic—Fitness, Size, Uniformity, Intricacy, Symmetry and Variety, The Principles to Consider—Samples of Canadian Retail Advertisements and How Improvements Might be Made.

By A. H. Mackay.

It is strange how few grocers give thought to the value and importance of form and subject matter in their newspaper advertising, for unless they do their advertising cannot help but fall short of what they expected. In retail advertising it should be kept in mind that the value of an ad. is reckoned by the amount of goods it will sell.

The question is, then, how can an ad. be made to sell? and the answer is, inject selling talk into the ad. and arrange your advertising over his doubting mind must be complete before your written message will clinch matters and draw the bargain to a close. If it acts thus then it has passed what would seem to be the supreme test in advertising.

The assembling of the copy, clever though that copy be, is not all that is to be considered—there is also the psychology of form. It is admitted by all, and rightly so, that certain forms appeal more readily to the eye than others.

Two Good Reasons Why
You Should Buy Your Groceries at This Store.

1. Because you are sure of getting quality groceries that are strictly fresh.

2. Because for the same quality groceries you pay less here than at any other place.

The Supreme Test.

To make a man agree with your view of a subject costs him nothing in the coin of the realm, but to make him buy five dollars' worth of your goods costs him five real dollars in cold, hard cash. The average man being prone to stop when going ahead means spending real money, it is evident that the conquest of

Since the possibilities of your printer may be limited you must of necessity confine yourself to the elementary forms of beauty such as are within reach of all.

Principle of Fitness.

To begin with there are certain principles or laws which one should become familiar with before attempting to arrange the form of an ad. The first of these may be termed "fitness" and concerns the size of your ad. It stipulates that it should be large enough to avoid the appearance of being skimped, and yet not bulky enough to denote extravagant waste. There must be due proportion. If you are introducing a new brand of goods through the medium of your ad. you must give that fact more than ordinary prominence. In like manner less important statements should be given less space.

The Size of the Ad.

The second principle might be called "quantity"; for much as one disparages undue extravagance in space, it cannot be denied that we are sometimes deeply impressed by the magnitude of things. A large building or a huge ship command our attention; so also will a half page or a full page ad. sometimes receive more attention than the subject matter deserves.

The third principle is "uniformity". For instance, the various articles placed uniformly on your shelves are much more pleasing than they would be were they strewn about haphazard. The same applies to the layout of your ad.

Intricacy and Symmetry.

The fourth principle is "intricacy." An active mind seeks employment. The love of pursuit seems to be implanted in human nature, consequently the eye often delights in following the ins and outs of a design no matter what form it may take; and any combination of lines which will lead the eye a chase, is assured of at least that much attention.

The fifth principle is "symmetry." Have you ever noticed how you shrink from anything that shows signs of toppling? A wagon with only three wheels would appear to you as ridiculous, as would a row-boat with only one oar. To be brief there must be completeness or at least a counterbalance.

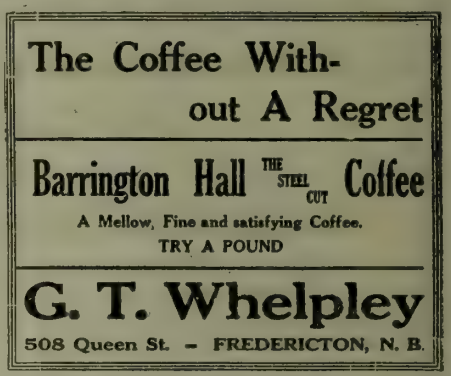
Variety a Virtue.

And the last and perhaps most important of all principles is "variety"—the spice of life. Without variety our lives would indeed be dull, and so would our advertising.

Some Criticisms.

Herewith are given a few examples of the advertising placed by grocers in their local papers. These ads. have been selected indiscriminately from different parts of Canada.

The first, that of the Bell Trading Co. of Nelson, B.C., is a one-column panel ad. Part of the subject matter has been cut out for the purpose of making the illustration. The ad. is an unusual type but it certainly has fitness. There is no attempt to crowd the words nor yet is there any noticeable waste. In the subheadings and paragraphs there is an attempt to be uniform. The unusual shape serves for intricacy, while the heavy style of type at the beginning and the end denote symmetry and balance. The numerous articles mentioned together with the prices and terse remarks serve to give it added interest. It might be improved if a little more descriptive matter were introduced at the beginning of each subject heading.



Printer Gets Censured.

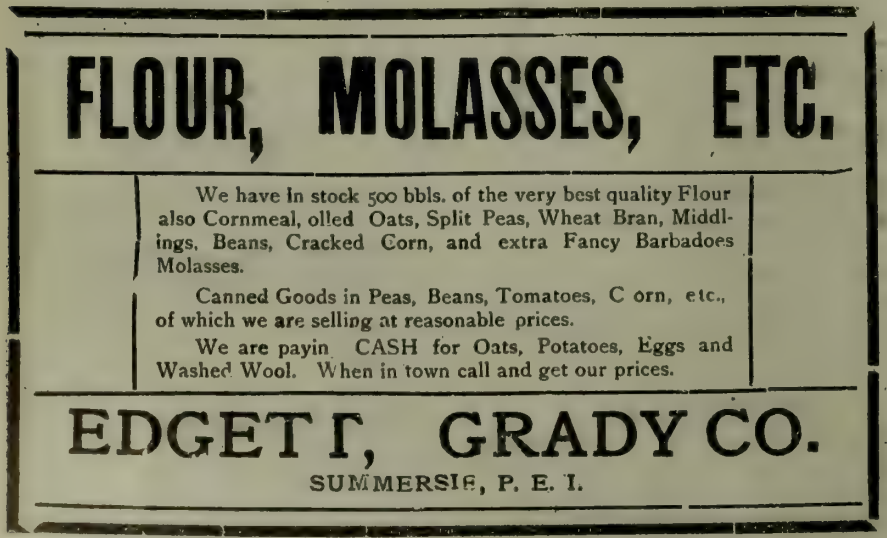
From a typographical standpoint the ad. of Edgett, Grady Co. ranks poor. The border is badly connected, the word "molasses" is somewhat distorted and the spelling and spotting of several words is faulty. The layout idea is good, though the wording is a plain business statement that cannot be expected to get many immediate results. No prices are quoted and no attempt is made to induce people to buy.

A Lack of Balance.

G. T. Whelpley's ad. is fit enough—that is the space is sufficient to say quite a deal about Barrington Hall Coffee—though with regard to uniformity it hardly fills the bill. The principles of quantity and intricacy do not apply. There is practically no symmetry and it has violated the law of variety. The whole ad. needs to be re-arranged. As it stands it is a business card advertising Mr. Whelpley, when he wishes to advertise "Barrington Hall" Coffee. The cut-off rules should be eliminated; the first phrase should be in one line and the merchant's name should correspond with it in size. A great detal could be said about the quality and price of the coffee, for there are in the ad. some striking descriptive phrases.

Again in the ad. of Miles' Cash Stores there is no attempt made to induce people to buy. There is a too liberal amount of white space. Had the various groups of words been arranged in a symmetrical form there would be more pleasure given to the eye, and this could be added to by an apt illustration, or an appropriate motto, or some descriptive matter about the goods in the superfluous white space. The proofreading, too, is shaky.

New Brunswick Advertisement Which Might Have Been Improved On.

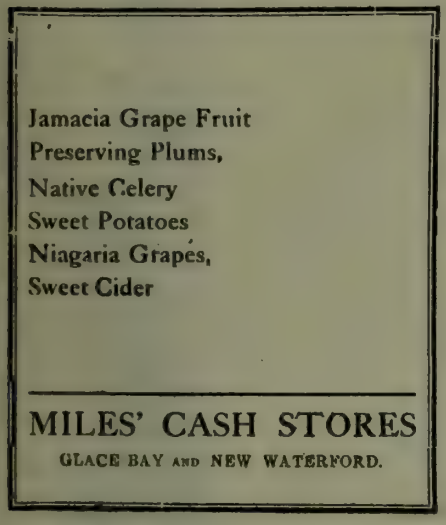


Design Well Thought Out.

The last ad., that of Geo. McCullough & Co., Stoughton, Sask., has evidently been designed and thought out beforehand. It is much in advance of what is usually found in the average country weekly. It might be improved typographically, but no doubt the limitations of a small printing office have much to do with type arrangement. It does, however, contain the elements of good advertising copy.

Opinions of Western Ad. Writer.

Since the above was written B. McLean, who looks after the advertising for McCullough & Co., has sent us expression of his opinion on the subject of advertising. Mr. McLean says:—



"I think it always pays to be honest in advertising. State what you have to sell in a clear, concise manner, and tell why people should buy it. Always use short, strong words familiar to everyone and I think you will find better results will be obtained.

Example of Too Many Typographical Errors. A Prince Edward Island Newspaper Ad.

"Every merchant should advertise articles of good quality. To advertise bad or indifferent goods is not good business and is certain to injure the firm. For instance, if oranges are advertised as "large, juicy and delicious" and a customer comes in and finds them nothing out of the ordinary in size or flavor two people are going to be disappointed—the merchant is going to lose a sale and the confidence of that customer is going to be lost in not getting exactly what was advertised. Honesty is the best policy in advertising as in everything else.

"I think advertising is absolutely essential to the upbuilding of any business, and that far more attention should be paid to it than the majority of merchants are giving it. If an article is advertised, and as a result a demand created for that article, advertising produces value because sales are made, profits increased and competition lessened.

"There are a number of merchants who look upon advertising as an expense, but I think money spent in advertising is an investment just as much as if put into buildings or real-estate, and that good advertising will bring back splendid returns on the amount invested.

"Another way that advertising is valuable is that it should convince people what they want to buy before they come into a store, and in this way one clerk is able to wait on more customers and his sales are more quickly accomplished."

McDowell Bros., of Dunnville, Ont., have realized the necessity of keeping up-to-date, not only in their methods, but have also equipped their store, after giving it a general overhauling, with some of the latest improved fixtures.

Got Results in Buy-at-Home Campaign

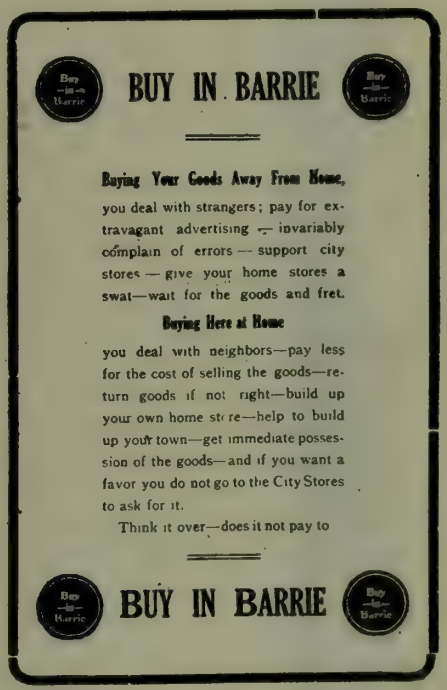
The merchants of Barrie, to induce home trading, struck upon the idea of advertising that fact in a campaign of education through their newspapers. While the idea is not entirely new there are certain features about it which are somewhat novel. The merchants (one in each line of business) contracted with "The Saturday Morning," a local paper, to use the whole back page of the weekly issue for six months to advertise their goods in such a way that comparison could be made in quality and price with the offerings of catalogue houses and stores in the larger centres.

Reasons for Buying at Home.



A "Buy in Barrie" letter, giving reasons why townspeople should patronize their own merchants instead of buying away from home, occupied the centre of the page and around this letter were grouped the advertisements of the town merchants, giving sample lists of their range of goods and prices.

The wording of the letter was changed weekly, and the reasons why purchasers should patronize their own home stores were put in short, sharp, crisp sentences. Some of the reasons may be read in the accompanying sample letter. Each of the advertisers occupied the same positions always, the advertising matter being changed weekly.

There was thus a uniformity to the appearance of the page.

Brought Noticeable Results.

In this way the page soon became a looked-for feature with a distinct news value, which, of course, added to the worth of the advertising. Gren. Caldwell, who represented the grocery trade in this department, stated that it was a splendid advertising feature, bringing business not only to his own store, but inducing a better and more loyal feeling between the Barrie purchasers and the Barrie merchants on strictly business grounds.

EARLY CLOSING QUESTION IN ST. JOHN, N.B.

Dealers Generally Endorse It, Although Police Magistrate Has Condemned By-law—Former Opponents Now Favor Practice.

Practically all organized opposition to the early closing movement in St. John, N.B., has ceased, and although the by-law governing the matter was condemned by the police magistrate, yet the spirit of the law has been quite generally observed throughout the summer by the shop keepers. They are not compelled under the interpretation of the law by the police magistrate, to close their doors at 7 o'clock, the time mentioned in the ordinance, but the great majority of grocers and other dealers, do so, thus giving themselves and their clerks a longer respite from labor than if a later hour were agreed upon.

M. E. Grass, grocer, of Germain St., who has been one of the leaders in the movement for early closing, says that many of those dealers who actively opposed the enactment, and gave money to the fight to defeat the passage of the bill, are now in favor of early closing, as they have found that their business interests are not affected. Even after the by-law was declared ultra vires by the court they kept their stores closed. He hinted at action by the Early Closing Association in the near future to have the passage of an act by the provincial legislature, authorizing the police to close the shops in the evenings.

The clerks of the city are almost unanimous in approving of the early closing, and there would probably be strenuous opposition on their part if asked to return to the system of closing "any time before ten."

Handling Confectionery -- First Prize Essay

By ARTHUR R. MARTIN
St. John's, Newfoundland

Should a grocery dealer handle confectionery? Well, this depends; if he is a live man in business for what he can make out of it, and is desirous of increasing his profits, then he should certainly handle confectionery.

I know of no line of goods which command such a ready sale and yields such a good all-round profit as this does. Candies properly handled, should bring in from 15 p.c. to 30 or 35 p.c. profit.

Must Know the Goods.

But, of course, a man must watch himself carefully—he must know the goods he is selling. If this be impossible, if he has never paid attention to this branch of his grocery business, and has not the time to attend to it personally, let him engage a capable assistant who has a thorough knowledge of confectionery—its varieties, makes, qualities and its prices. Or let him select one of his staff who has a pretty good general knowledge, one who is quick with ideas, neat, methohical and tidy. Place this clerk in full control of the confectionery branch, let him attend solely to it, and if the goods handled are of the right kind and prices right, before long he will begin to reap the benefit of good profits, quick returns.

Quality Should Supersede.

There are various things to consider. Let quality, not quantity, be the first thought. If you sell a line of chocolates that pleases—however small or large the sale may be—you can count on many a customer coming again.

Care should be taken in the selection of confectionery of all grades. Should you wish to carry goods of different grades see that each is of the best quality and purest ingredients. I do not mean to say that only the most expensive lines should be handled; but if you have the choice of several articles retailing at the same price, choose the best of that class. It is of utmost importance that the candy you retail at 15c or 20c per lb. be the best obtainable at that price, as it is for the 70c lb. candy to be the best of its line.

The Whole Truth.

Beware, too, of recommending or stating goods to be of better quality than they really are. For instance: You sell a 30c candy recommending it to be worth 40c; if it be not so, nine out of every ten of your customers will quickly notice the difference, and as far as your store is concerned it will probably be "never no more" with them. Besides, if the candy is really worth 40c, there is no earthly reason why you should not sell at 40c.

Where Cleanliness Comes In.

Remembering the old saying, "cleanliness is next to godliness," see that everything in connection with your confectionery trade be kept scrupulously clean. See that your attendant is cleanly and nattily attired, and have all loose candies taken up with a "scoop" or candy shovel, not with the fingers. Nothing offends a particular—and often a not very particular—customer so much as to see confectionery handled with the naked hand. Besides being distasteful to the sight, it is not safe from a sanitary or hygienic point of view.

All goods, either loose candies or the dainty fancy packages so dear to women's hearts, should be under glass — either on the shelf or in showcases and "silent salesmen." This keeps them practically, if not wholly, free from dust and prevents them becoming damp. Dampness will quickly spoil any pure sugar candies and high-grade confectionery.

Selling Loose Candy.

For the dealer's own good it would be better did he not sell loose candies in too small quantities. I know of one firm here who will not sell less than a half-pound loose, although selling packages of ⅛ or ¼ lb. Others, again, do not handle loose confectionery of any kind, declaring that in selling in small lots there is so much "breakage" of weight that they derive little or no profit from the transaction. This, of course, depends upon the weighing. If carefully done there is no reason why one should lose profit; but oftentimes when selling lots less than a half or a quarter pound the quantity seems so small for the money that one is constrained to put in a few sweets extra. This must be carefully guarded against. For it not only swallows up all profit, but the next time a customer comes he expects to get the same amount for the same money, and you frequently have to give it else lose his custom. Needless to say a customer of this kind is not worth having.

Using One's Selling Power.

Ingenuity and attractiveness of display are big selling factors. I would advise all dealers to devote a certain part of shelving to confectionery — especially package goods—having the shelves made dust proof and damp proof by sliding or hinged glass doors. This should be in a prominent part of the shop, and in front of it "silent salesmen" and convenient showcases for loose candies. Both the shelves and showcases can, with a little trouble, be so artistically arranged as not only to immediately catch the eye, but also to give an air of distinction and attractiveness to the whole store. You have no idea till you have fitted one up how "catchy" and fetching a well-arranged confectionery case looks.

Neatly printed or brush work price cards, telling the different varieties and rices of the candies might be placed here and there to great advantage.

Always a Fresh Stock.

An all important thing to see to is that your stock of confectionery be always fresh. It will please your customers to have goods they can rely upon and with this end in view you would obtain better results by carrying a varied stock sufficient for a few weeks, than by laying in a big stock which would take months to sell. Better buy in small quantities even if the cost is a little higher, for what you lose by spoilage in the other case would more than off-set the slight difference in profit.

An occasional window display would help increase your sales. But care should also be taken here to avoid the dust, dampness and sun. Choose, if possible, a window into which the sun does not shine, or failing this, one which can be protected from the sun's rays. If your windows are not closed at the back by doors, glass or otherwise—display your goods in showcases placed in the window. Of course package goods might be placed in the open window, but it is always safer to keep them under cover.

Give Attention to Paper Bag.

Always, when selling, have loose candies put into bags made of good, clean, strong paper. A good idea is to have some small cardboard boxes made with a ribbon handle, suitable for holding half-pound or pound purchases. These may bear your business name and a suitable advertisement. The cost is trifling and the convenience and neatness are a source of pleasure to many people.

The Best Seasons.

There are certain seasons when there is bound to be a large increase in the daily candy sales—Christmas, New Year, Easter and others. Experience will teach you the requirements of each and you will generally want to lay in a larger stock than usual, particularly of choice goods. A small advertisement at such times—and indeed at any time—will bring good results, especially if you feature certain popular lines at popular prices.

To give a resume of what has already been said :—

I.—Keep your goods free from dust, dampness and sun.

II.—Have everything in connection with handling spotlessly clean.

III.—Let quality be of the best and prices in keeping with the quality.

IV.—Know your goods; if necessary read them up so as to be able to talk intelligently about them.

V.—Keep your stock fresh and new.

VI.—Watch the weigh and keep your goods constantly before the public.

A confectionery display attracts the passerby who, if well pleased, will come again and may eventually become a regular customer. By far the largest part of the sales is cash, the turnover is quick and the profit good. Surely this is sufficient inducement for any dealer to handle confectionery ! If not, there must be something wrong with his make-up, and the sooner he gives up business and retires the better it will be for everyone.

Handling Confectionery--Second Prize Article

By ALLISTER R. McLEOD
Sydney, Cape Breton

It is the ambition of every live up-to-date grocer to make as much money out of his business as possible. Consequently he is always on the alert watching for methods and schemes by which he can extend his business and make it more profitable. Owing to the fact that the profits in the retail grocery business are being yearly weighed down, and the fact that it now costs the grocer so much more to conduct business than in former years, it is necessary for him to branch out and handle other lines in which larger profits are made.

That is why the majority of grocers to-day, who are the up-to-date ones, carry a nice line of confectionery, which pays handsome profits. From my experience I would say that the grocer who to-day neglects confectionery along with his grocery stock is neglecting one of the best paying propositions in his business.

It Needs Attention.

But, of course, as with any other line of merchandise, the confectionery department has to be given careful attention. The day has passed, and I think gone forever, when a grocer's stock of confectionery consists of a few pails of bulk goods and the cheaper grade of chocolates, and when there was no demand for the higher priced goods.

The customer who to-day purchases confectionery demands the same high standard of quality he receives in groceries. People have at last got acquainted with the fact that cheap groceries are dear at any price, being injurious to the health.

Advises Modern Fixtures.

As I mentioned before, the grocer who wishes to successfully conduct a confectionery department has, as in other branches of his business, got to devise methods and plans to make it a paying proposition. To do this many up-to-date grocers have gone to considerable expense in having this department fixed in an attractive manner by installing expensive and up-to-date fixtures, and it is here where a good many grocers "fall down flat." They realize there is good profit in confectionery. But not having the means of making a display, and lacking the courage to invest a few dollars in fixtures and display cases, which would in a very short time pay for themselves, they give the idea up. They rest content with handling a few lines which they have hid under their counters, or displayed on their shelves, where they are exposed to dust, sun and heat, flies and germs of all kinds.

No wonder these grocers sometimes sit back and complain about business being dull, or no money to be made in certain lines of goods, or wonder how it is their brother grocers across the street are doing such a large business.

Make Success Sure.

From my experience in handling confectionery, that goes back over the past ten years with some of the best firms in Nova Scotia, I would advise any grocer who intends going into this line, to go into it with a determination to make it a success. Don't be afraid to spend a little cash, when starting. As the old saying goes, "Never venture, never win."

There is perhaps no better season than at present.

The Christmas trade will be on in a few weeks, and this Holiday season affords an excellent opportunity to make some money, as everybody wants candy at Christmas. By starting in now the grocer has lots of time before the Christmas rush to get this department in good running order, and providing he stock a good class of goods, at right prices, he can made a nice extra profit.

Confectionery should be attractively displayed. The dealer should also do a little advertising.

Silent Salesmen Valuable.

There is no better way or means of display than the use of one or two nice "silent salesman" display cases. This necessitates the outlay of a little money, but in a short time will pay for themselves in increased sales, and at the same time give the store an up-to-date attractive, inviting appearance.

Buy Often and Light.

The next question, and a very important one, is the purchasing of stock. To this part of the business the grocer should give his most careful attention. In getting the right class of goods, and in buying in right quantities, and especially during the summer season, attention should be given. The better plan is to order only a small quantity and order often, rather than in large lots, and run the risk of having the goods spoil on your hands. In any case, I would advise ordering only a month's supply at once.

Always keep your goods up to the same high standard, and you will always have satisfied customers. Remember, the quality of the goods is remembered long after the price is forgotten.

Patronize Best Manufacturers.

The better plan is to avoid handling the product of too many different firms. Stick to the firms who produce the class of goods that give entire satisfaction to your trade, even if you have to pay more for them. In this way you can generally depend on having satisfied customers, and in a great many cases, by buying all your goods from two or three different manufacturers, there are times when one can get many advantages in the matter of prices, terms, etc.

On receiving goods, see that they are opened up, and checked off carefully. Mistakes are liable to happen with the best of firms, and in packing the goods shortages are liable to occur, and where there is, perhaps, a shortage of a box of high-grade goods, it cuts the profit down considerably. To avoid losing anything, check carefully, so that you will get all that is coming to you. It is customary now with a good many firms to supply glass trays for holding different lines of confectionery, and it is as well to have these, even if it is necessary to purchase them. They afford a better means of display, and, where the more expensive "cut glass" trays are used, it gives the display a rich appearance.

Using Camel Hair Brush.

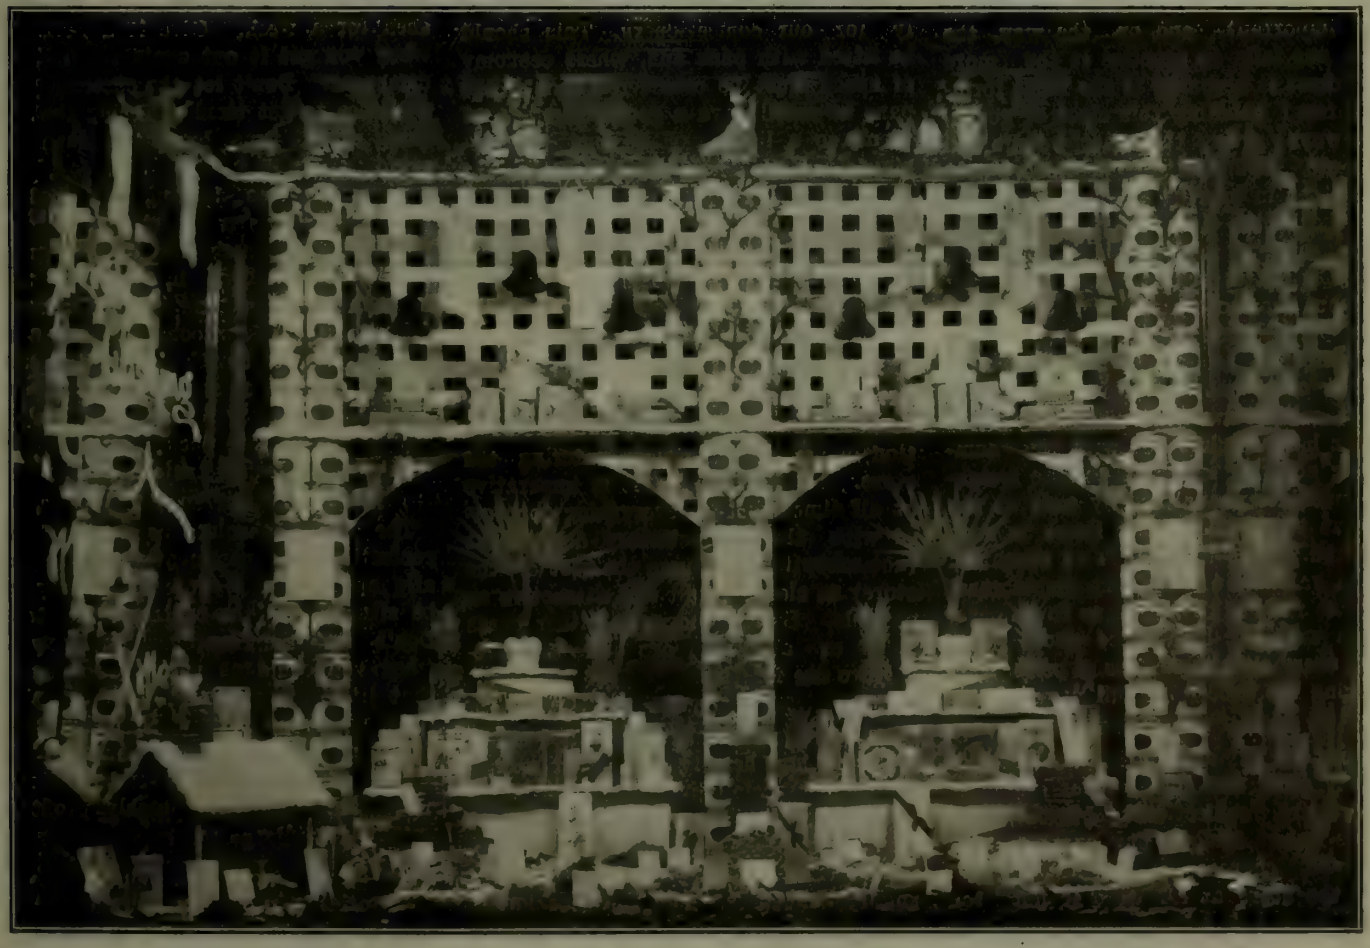
Although it requires a great deal of time, still it is a good idea to have each chocolate brushed or wiped off, that you use for display, giving them a much better appearance. A small camel hair brush can be purchased at a trifling cost, which will serve the purpose.

After display is neatly arranged in "silent salesman," have a few small price tickets printed, arranged on the trays in a position that will not mar or spoil to the effect of your display, but at the same time bring about the desired result.

Do not sell from display case, but from surplus stock, which should be stored in a cool dry place. A portion of store should be set out for this stock. Keep chocolates free from air; the air as well as heat has its effect upon this class of goods.

Scoops Versus Fingers.

Great care should be exercised in handling these goods to the customer. Nothing is more disgusting to the average customer, than to see a clerk picking out chocolates with his fingers. This is a practice which should not be tolerated in any store. At an outlay of a dollar or so, a grocer can purchase a number of scoops suitable for this purpose.



The higher priced goods should never be put in a paper bag where a customer purchases half pound or more, or any reasonable quantity. This should be placed in an attractively gotten up carton, which can be purchased at a reasonable cost in any large quantity. This method insures the customers of her goods being kept from getting "mussed," as is the case with chocolates when put in a paper bag. At the same time it offers an opportunity of doing a little advertising, as an ad. can be printed on the carton.

Small Ad. Brought Results.

I know of a case where a package of chocolates had been purchased at a store where I was formerly employed, and sent to a friend in the country some miles distant. Our firm's name and line of merchandise was neatly printed on the bottom of the carton, along with the following little ad.:—

Quality Groceries and Confectionery, "Our Motto," "Then Prices."

The family to whom the package had been sent, did not know there was such a firm in existence, but at this particular time they required their annual supply of groceries. They were in the habit of mailing their cash orders to one of our competitors down the street, who was not just giving them entire satisfaction. Seeing our name on the package, and noticing we handled groceries, they decided to give us a trial. We received a $25 order, and now they are regular cash customers.

Handling Confectionery--Third Prize Article

By CHAS. J. SNIDER
Brantford, Ont.

How often we come across the grocer who, no matter how large or how small his business, says he can't be bothered with confectionery; that it is out of his line or that he has no room for it, but who really never took the time to figure it out and get down to plain facts.

Now in the first place in answer to the question of why every grocer should handle confectionery (or anything else for that matter), the most important consideration is profit. Is there a living profit in confectionery? I should say yes, decidedly, if properly handled. The grocer to-day considers himself amply repaid with a profit of 25 per cent. Suppose then if we tell him he can add an extra 10 per cent. or 15 per cent. to that, and in many instances in the confectionery trade easily double it, would he then say there is no money in confectionery? I think not.

Weighing Correctly.

Well then considering the question of profit settled the next thing I would call important, and by the way, the more one fails to practise it the more important it becomes, is the habit formed through handling this class of goods, of always giving the exact weight and no more. In handling confectionery sold by weight in nearly every instance we find the better class lines, even though commanding a higher price, are invariably the better sellers, and not only that but the more profitable.

My point then is this,—in handling confectionery, to get the maximum profit out of it one cannot be too careful about correct weight. This may seem rather hard at first but with the computing scale or other up-to-date weighing machines so universally used at the present time, this little knack is soon acquired. This in itself is an education and a valuable one for the simple reason that the clerk who learns to be careful in weighing high-priced goods will do it every time regardless of price, thus ensuring the grocer his full profit.

It Attracts New Customers.

Those of us already handling confectionery often find some of our best customers are "confectionery customers"—people who seldom buy anything else and who, chances are, wouldn't come near the store at all were it not for this. It is safe to say that before long these customers see on our shelves or counters some little thing they require, and often we find them buying more and more until soon we have them on our grocery list,—customers gained solely by coming to the store in the first place for their little luxuries.

The Young Man Buys.

Then there is the young man who drops in for a cigar or his particular brand of tobacco. Before he leaves the store we have the satisfaction of seeing tucked down in his pocket a package of something tempting for his "lady-love," and last but not least is our regular grocery customer who, once in a while takes a notion for a few candies and find that they can satisfy their cravings without going "across the street."

So much for that; now for the best methods of handling confectionery to produce the maximum turn-over, profit and good-will. The care or expense required in handling this important commodity is by no means great. In the first place we have a good show case or silent salesman which we reserve entirely for our confectionery. This should be fitted with pans and, where economy of space must be considered though the pans be small have a goodly number of them, so a little variety may be displayed. A pan holding from three to five pounds is quite satisfactory. Of course the more room you can spare for display the greater will be your sales as confectionery like everything else well displayed is half sold.

Showcase Near Entrance.

The show case should be placed near the entrance or in as prominent a place as possible so as to attract the attention of the customer upon entering the store. Needless to say it is imperative at all times to keep everything connected with the confectionery department (not excepting of course the rest of the store) as clean, bright and attractive as possible. Small scoops in either brass nickle or aluminum are quite satisfactory to use for this.

Hints on Buying.

In buying confectionery it is not necessary to buy heavily and by no means advisable especially of course in warm weather. Until the grocer knows just what class of goods appeals to his particular trade it is always best to buy in small quantities, but when he knows just what he can sell, he should always make sure that he has plenty of each line to carry him over until the next call of the confectionery traveler, because nothing hurts trade more than continually being "just out" of any staple line. I have already mentioned the absolute necessity of exercising care in weighing. Too much cannot be said about this and if we bear it in mind we will find it will help us in more ways than one.

Pays the Higher Price.

Another word about buying. Here is a practise I have seen "kill" more than one promising confectionery corner in the grocery store. In buying goods of any kind where quality counts I always find it good policy to pay a cent or two more a pound or a dozen for an article and know your customer will come back for more even though your profit may not be quite as large as it would be on a slightly inferior article; for after all the satisfied customer is the grocer's best advertisement.

If you find a certain line doesn't sell as quickly as it might, put it on the shelf for a week. Give it a rest and when you get it out again it will soon disappear. Don't let the customer have a chance to get tired of seeing the same thing every time he comes into the store.

The Christmas season, now fast approaching, offers a splendid opportunity in the confectionery line. Every grocer at this season lays in his little stock of oranges, nuts and other Christmas delicacies, and how could he better finish this off than with a tempting little display of candies any where from the cheap mixed candy for the "kiddies" to the more elaborate package that appeals to the most refined taste?

Keep Customer in Your Store.

The almost absolute necessity of the confectionery department should especially apply to the grocer who may not be situated in the centre of the town. Don't let the customer go elsewhere when you could as well as not supply that little want and remember these little wants soon grow to be irrestible habits so that the candy counter in the grocery store soon becomes an indispensable and above all highly profitable proposition.

Success of Western Pioneer Merchant

Ontario Man Who Went West in 1874, and Who From Small Store Has Built Up Large Business in Moose Jaw—Staff Has Increased From One Boy Assistant to Fifty Employes.

T. W. Robinson, founder of T. W. Robinson departmental store in Moose Jaw, Sask., is an old Ontario boy who has made good in the West.

The future of this portion of Canada was still an unknown quantity, when he decided to throw his energy and vim in that direction. The development of the West is indeed well known and it may truly be said that Mr. Robinson has kept well up with this advancement. From experience he knows much about the trials and tribulations of the Western pioneer merchant, which he has gleaned in the development of his business from shack size to that of a large, modern departmentized store.

Worked in Winnipeg.

Newmarket was the birth-place of Mr. Robinson and it was in 1874 that he first turned his steps westward. His first position was with Stobart Sons & Co., general merchants of Winnipeg, where he remained six years, and then served one year with the Robinson & Co. store.

The spring of 1883 found him on his way to success. With W. H. Rumsey also a Newmarket man, as partner, he opened a store in Moose Jaw. The building in which they commenced was one storey and a half high and 20 by 30 ft., the upper portion of the building serving as a residence.

A Small Construction Camp.

In those days, Moose Jaw was only what the C. P. R. construction camp made it. The railway passenger service only extended as far as Regina, but the railway force had moved forward to Moose Jaw. In the surrounding country there were only twenty or thirty settlers. The railway employes, numbering about 300, were good customers, and while they remained, there was a fair amount of business in dry goods and groceries for Robinson & Rumsey, and also for their opposition, a man named Wellington.

The railway camp remained until 1885, in which year also Robinson & Rumsey sold out and returned to Winnipeg. Mr. Robinson was there a week when he heard that Wellington had failed. He immediately turned around, took over the Wellington stock from the creditors and sold it. Settlers were then beginning to come into the country, and he determined to remain in Moose Jaw.

Enlarge The Store.

Following the Red River rebellion in 1885, times were very hard. "Settlers were steadily pouring in, however," states Mr. Robinson, "and conditions gradually improved. In 1889 we doubled the capacity of our store, making it 60 feet instead of 30 feet. In 1893, we bought the next lot south and built a store of solid brick, 27 x 80 ft. with two storeys and a basement."

It was in 1903 that the present firm was formed with T. W. Robinson as president; W. F. McBean, formerly of Forest, Ont., as secretary-treasurer and manager; and Arthur Lowe and D. H. Thompson as directors. Mr. Thompson has since retired. These three men had all been with Mr. Robinson from 6 to 9 years previous.

Since then there have been other enlargements. They have several departments and groceries is by no means the least important. The floor space of the original store was 600 square feet, while the present is more than 20,000 square feet, showing the big expansion.

Encourages Young Men.

Mr. Robinson believes in encouraging the young men whom he gathers about him. This is evident by the partnership opportunities which he extended to those who had given him faithful service, and of which they immediately took advantage. In the rapid development of the West, the ambitious young man is eager for business in which he has personal interest. Mr. Robinson immediately recognized this fact, and a loyal, enthusiastic, efficient organization is the result.

Not only does this firm use the Moose Jaw papers for advertising purposes, but a price list is thoroughly distributed over the field every six months. Thus the Robinson Co. are as constantly represented in the homes of the people as are the distant mail order houses and the plan has done much to educate and hold the local and district trade.

Hardy & Buchanan's Fine Store in Winnipeg, Man.

Canadian Dealer Not a Slot Machine

Typical Case of Winnipeg Grocer, Illustrating the Power of The Retailer to Sell Goods in Which He Has Become Interested—Gets After Business—Doesn't Wait for Demand—Some of His Methods.

"What is our motto, did you say? Why, The Store of Plenty, Good Things to Eat—and hobby? Always Something New! and we endeavor to live up to them."

Such were the words of W. P. Buchanan, junior member and general manager of Hardy & Buchanan, one of the oldest established firms in Winnipeg.

And truly this firm appears to be living up to its motto, for the store is bright, clean and attractive and everything businesslike.

Went West From London and Ottawa.

The success of this firm has been in keeping with the development of Winnipeg and the West. Coming West from London, Ontario, where he had been engaged in the grocery business, Mr. Hardy established a business at the corner of Notre Dame and Isabella streets in 1883, where he gradually built up one of the largest family businesses in the city.

Twenty years ago W. P. Buchanan came west from Ottawa, Ont., a mere lad, and started his career as a clerk for Mr. Hardy. His capabilities soon became apparent to his employer, and in 1896 he was taken in as junior partner. With the development of Winnipeg, however, business increased and the store was being continually enlarged to accommodate the trade, until the fall of 1898 a branch was opened on Market street.

Business continued to develop and another branch in 1903 was started in Fort Rouge, which was at that time fast settling as a residential district. A few years later, however, Mr. Hardy's health broke down and he was forced to retire from active business. This disaster resulted in the sale of the downtown stores and the concentration of Mr. Buchanan's energies to the Fort Rouge store, which required all his time. To one who has not lived in a growing city such rapid development and settlement may seem amazing, and to some extent it certainly is.

In building the first section of his present store in Fort Rouge, 7 years ago, Mr. Buchanan was forced to cut down trees to lay the foundation, and to-day this section is looked on as an old settled district where the streets are paved and cars have been running for years.

Extensions Necessary.

Since building in 1903 the store has been enlarged three times, the latest addition being only last fall, when an adjacent store was taken in, until it now possesses capacity enough to handle one of the largest retail businesses in the city. Seventeen helpers are required, viz.: Five drivers, one bookkeeper, warehouseman and ten clerks, who are kept on the move, as well as a boy to carry out short orders in basket.

Follows Up Residential Trade.

Upon looking at the splendid fixtures and displays, one naturally thought the firm must own the premises, but such is not the case. "No," said Mr. Buchanan, when asked, "we do not own these premises; as I cater to a family trade you can readily understand that I have to follow the residential districts. If they move I move. I believe in a growing city like Winnipeg that the best policy is to rent store space."

"Well," said Mr. Buchanan, referring to the building up of his trade, "as I stated before, our motto is the store of plenty, and good things to eat, and hobby, 'Something new.' and I endeavor to live up to them.

Always Looking for New Lines.

"We are continually on the lookout for new and attractive lines, and are thereby always increasing our stock.

"Towards this end I take a trip south and east every winter to the principal cities such as Chicago, Boston, New York, Montreal and Toronto, to pick up new ideas as well as lines. If I see a line that I think would sell, I secure a sample and try it. If it goes I order more.

"But there is no use securing new lines if you don't advertise them. By this I do not mean newspaper advertising altogether, but make large window displays, changing the display regularly once a week. In fact, certain clerks look after the windows and are continually trying new designs. We never use price placards in our windows, as we can't find time to write them, but I believe the practice is a good one, and will sell the goods. I have found that it always pays to display yonr lines to the best advantage.

Four Phones Busy.

"Do I advertise my goods only by window displays, did you say? Why no, this would not be enough. I don't use the papers, but I make it a point to let our customers know what we have. We do a large telephone business. We have four 'phones which are kept busy most of the day, and night when a holiday comes along. All or any of the clerks take orders, and if a new line has just been introduced he mentions it to the customer. Many of our customers will ring up and ask for a certain clerk each day. This, I think, is a good plan, and we encourage it, as the clerk gets to know exactly what that particular customer likes, consequently, if something is introduced which might take this customer's fancy, he rings her up and notifies her about it. Customers like this interest taken in them, and they invariably order, and come back again. Each clerk puts up his own orders so that there can be no possible mistake, and if any it can be located immediately.

Interior Displays.

"I think interior displays are also advisable, such as silent showcases, silent refrigerators and delicatessen counters where cooked meat, ham and bacon are displayed. We always carry a large stock of all kinds of imported goods, especially United States, as we have a large American trade, and they seem to prefer these goods.

"A good example of this is seen in Jones' Dairy Farm Sausages. Three years ago I paid Mr. Jones a visit at Ft. Atkinson, Wis., and made him an agreement to handle his line exclusively in Manitoba. When I received the first shipment I telephoned some of my American customers and told them I had this line for sale. Orders immediately began to pour in. Our customers told their friends and I secured many new and good customers amongst Americans by this move. Then again, to further introduce this line, Mr. Jones had a model of his farm made for me in New York, for use in window displays. This model can be lit up with electricity, and when different colored bulbs are used a good effect can be obtained. This is used in the winter, as these sausages and bacon are only manufactured in the winter.

"But new lines are no good unless advertised or displayed so that they would sell. If a particular line seems hard to sell, keep moving it around the store, and sooner or later it will go. "Keep the lines moving in every way is a good system to always follow."

"How do you go about to increase your fall or Christmas trade? Mr. Buchanan was asked.

Keep Store Fixtures Clean.

"Well," was the answer, "I don't do anything special or out of the ordinary. At Christmas we decorate, and keep on displaying our lines, of course, showing those which are more appropriate to the season. Good display windows and show cases, always scrupulously clean, will do the trick. If a new customer comes in, give him satisfaction, and he will like your cleanliness and come again.

"Seventeen Ounce to Pound" Store Closes

Did Not Last Long in Montreal—Also Gave 13 to the Dozen and Cent With Each Purchase of Canned Goods, Etc.—A Jobber's Opinion.

The "17 oz. to the pound" grocery opened a short time ago in Montreal is no more. Like the oft-quoted Arab's tent it quietly disappeared, in striking contrast to its official opening, considerable newspaper advertising having been used to inform the consuming public that this new grocery enterprise offered a golden opportunity to save money practically with every purchase. Seventeen ounces, the people were told, was this firm's offer as against the other grocers' sixteen, and the word "dozen" was effaced, for the "baker's dozen"—thirteen. In addition, one cent was given with every article of canned or bottled goods.

The "17-oz. pound" grocers certainly invited the public to a pleasing store where modern ideas in the grocery business abounded. Their stock was new, and it was displayed to advantage. In this respect many of the stores of the city might have profitably taken a hint. The windows were always attractive and the store was well lighted throughout. But the people did not vie with each other in an endeavor to leave their money with the new firm and "the golden opportunity" was regarded rather lightly.

As one jobber remarked, "The people on this side of the line lack the United States sentiment towards stores of this kind." It may meet with approval among our neighbors to the south, but if this store's experience is to be taken as an example it is safe to say that Canadians prefer their own staid and regular method of doing business. It is not known just exactly why this store was unsuccessful, but the fact remains that a clothier is now in possession and one can hardly realize that the transformation was so precipitate and complete.

USING WHITE WRAPPING PAPER.

The use of light white paper in wrapping many groceries impresses customers when they observe its purpose. The writer has recently been in a number of good stores, and noticed the rather frequent use of this kind of paper. In the ordinary store, articles like lard are first covered with a thin paper, which is somewhat proof against grease.

The paper referred to is almost the same. It was used to wrap fresh sausages, new figs, dates, and some other articles that were inclined to be oily or moist. With the usual paper outside of this, the parcel reaches the customer in a neat, clean condition, the outer paper showing no marks of where the oil or moisture might have come through. After all, it is in these little points that the real class of a store is often noticed most.

Lethbridge, Alta., expects to secure a vinegar industry. Geo. Kellar, Spokane, has been there looking over the ground.

J. Wagstaffe, Wagstaffe, Limited, Hamilton, has gone to the Pacific Coast on a pleasure trip.

Operating Two Stores in One City

Kingston Dealer Caters to Residential District With One and Laboring Class District With the Other—Both Classes Would Not Deal at One Store, He Claims—Much of Buying for Both Is Jointly Done.

An old saying declares that it is not wise to put too many eggs into one basket. Some have disputed the statement, saying that the large deposit may safely be made if the basket is then carefully guarded. This seems to have little to do with the grocery trade, yet it has, since the two courses are being followed in business every day.

Is it wiser to have one large store, or to have two or more smaller ones? Is it better to sell all the eggs from the one large basket or from two smaller baskets? Which course is likely to result in the profitable disposal of the greater number of eggs?

As in all other questions there are many factors which would have to be considered before a correct answer could be given. The individual grocers will know of these factors, better possibly than the writer, it will be proper, therefore, to set forth in this article only one side of the question—the contention held by John Gilbert, of Kingston, Ont., that it is more profitable to operate two stores than one store which would be as large as the two combined. Mr. Gilbert does not lay this down as a rule which would apply everywhere. But he does say that it is so for him, in Kingston.

The Case of Expense.

The expense of operating two stores in different parts of the city are greater than those which would be incurred in running one store as large as the two. This, Mr. Gilbert states frankly. But that is only one side of the question. It is not so much what he spends but what he makes for the expenditure which interests every business man, and Mr. Gilbert has found that the returns from his two stores are enough greater than the greater expense to make his policy seem entirely wise.

In groceries, more than any other class of trade, business is done with a neighborhood. It is the woman living two or three streets over who sends her child in with an order a few minutes before six o'clock. It is the man who passes the store in the morning who brings in a daily order. And so, by increasing the number of stores, the number of neighborhoods from which business is naturally drawn is increased.

Location of the Two Stores.

In Mr. Gilbert's case, one store, a fine one, is situated in the heart of a residental district. There trade is secured from the best of Kingston's citizens. The other store—less fine but still a thoroughly up-to-date place of business—is located in an entirely different section. There live laboring men and their families. It is these from whom trade is secured.

Now, through advertising, people of the better class might be—and as a matter of fact are—brought to Mr. Gilbert's principal store from all parts of the city. But no amount of advertising would be likely to induce many of the laboring people to do their buying there. They would not go to that locality. The housewife in a working man's home has not much time to devote to shopping. She sends out, or goes herself, to the nearest shop.

So, this second store of Mr. Gilbert's catches a class of trade that he would in all likelihood, otherwise miss. In other places this might not prove to be the case, for it might not be possible to get two neighborhoods so different, but in Kingston the doubling of stores has proved a good move.

The buying for the two establishments is of course looked after from the larger place of business. Some lines are carried by both places, but there are others which suit one store and not the other. Mr. Gilbert knows of these, and in fixing every order has one or other store in view.

In both shops an effective and cheap form of advertising is adopted—not to the exclusion of newspaper advertising—but as a supplement to it.

Potato Nailed to Blackboard.

A good supply of potatoes is secured for instance. A black board is taken outside the door. One of the finest potatoes is impailed with a nail and fastened on this; and underneath is written the kind and price of the potatoes. It is surprising how such a device interests passers-by and regular customers. It puts the potato before people and they buy.

In the preserving season a sealing wax was being sold. This, Mr. Gilbert advertised in the papers. But he did not not stop there. Outside his window he showed some jars, sealed up with the wax. The object lesson brought exceedingly satisfactory results, as object lessons practically always do.

How an Ad. Sold Cider.

Another good advertising move made by Mr. Gilbert was during a recent typhoid scare. The water, rightly or wrongly, was blamed for the spread of the malady; and taking advantage of this, Mr. Gilbert advertised cider. "It is considered unsafe by many to drink water," he stated through the paper. "Drink some of the fine new cider we can supply."

That ad. brought the briskest business in the apple juice which Mr. Gilbert had experienced in years.

Possibilities in Pushing the Sale of Macaroni

Macaroni, vermicelli and spaghetti are seasonable groceries worthy of special attention now that the cold weather is practically here. Considering macaroni alone, for there is but little difference between the three articles, there are a number of reasons why the grocer should interest himself in it. In the first place it is wholesome and nutritious, and everybody likes it. It offers no trouble to the housewife in its preparation. It is cheap and should be easily sold to those who have not been using it. It can be safely recommended to customers of all classes, and lastly, but by no means least, consider the profit to be obtained by large sales of macaroni.

Demand is Growing.

The fact is that in the past the majority of people have eaten macaroni only when they dined at hotels and restaurants but for some reason they did not bring it into their own homes. Of late, macaroni is finding its way into more and more grocery stores and naturally the trade are putting their selling powers behind it with the result that it is becoming better known among consumers. This is the usual method by which a good strong business is built up. The writer recently passed an east end Montreal store in one of the windows of which was an attractive display of macaroni and vermicelli.

Much can be done with these articles if they are handled in the proper manner. It is hardly necessary to say that soups have a special appeal to people during the frosty and cold weather. Now, although macaroni has many uses it is best known from the fact that it is mostly used in soups and should therefore find a place for itself in the fall and winter campaign.

Sherbrooke Dealer's Xmas Preparations

Arrange Displays That Attract Trade — How They Gauge Their Buying—Fish Department Separate From Groceries — Handle Poultry Extensively.

Bray Bros., Sherbrooke, Que., grocers, will soon begin to give their store that appearance suggesting Christmas. When the new dried fruits, nuts, peel, etc., have arrived, their customers will receive more than one reminder. To a representative of The Grocer, one of the members of the firm stated that a window display with interior arrangements are the principle methods by which the seasonable goods are advertised. Of course with telephone customers, suggestion has to be depended upon for the most part. Women begin shortly to purchase these goods and it is not a difficult matter to get rid of them.

As various grocers have stated, they employ their ordinary but none the less effective methods with the majority of the season's goods. Those that are in most demand are brought forward and by many different methods are made conspicuous. But first position, especially in interior arrangements, is given to lines that need a little extra effort to sell.

About Buying.

Mr. Bray in buying his fall and Christmas supplies bases estimate principally on the business done in the previous year. If one line had sold particularly well there was a good reason for buying a little more of that for the coming year, while articles that proved slow are cut down in quantity. Experience seems to be the best guide in these matters. When one finds himself in the middle of January with a stock that may linger too long on his shelves his best opportunity for selling has gone. The average opinion is that it is best to have but a small carry-over after the rush. This means that the grocer has obtained a good price for his goods, he does not need to hold special sales, and he can generally buy for future requirements at favorable figures.

Of course, he must be guided by market conditions. If the tendency is upward, it is best to provide for a rise and vice versa. The grocer may make his usual purchases in the early summer but should watch the markets in the fall in order to obtain a fair idea of what way they are going to move and to protect himself for whatever contingency arises.

A Fish Department.

Bray Bros., have an extensive fish trade. They have regular customers for fresh fish the year round and with the beginning of the cooler weather add haddies, bloaters, kippers, cod and such lines Mr. Bray expressed the opinion that this is a legitimate and profitable line for the grocer. The principal demand for fresh fish is on Friday and arrangements are made for express delivery on Thursday. Bray Bros., have a refrigerator for fish alone. It is kept in the cellar where the fish receives whatever preparations are necessary for delivery as soon as they arrive. The firm has regular customers and the trade is therefore guaranteed. Mr. Bray stated that very seldom, indeed, was there trouble over the quality of the fish. The large dealers are eager to satisfy their customers, the retailers, realizing that their business is bound to be affected by delivering inferior stock. In the example mentioned above the fish is kept apart from the groceries with practically no extra trouble. The main thing is the refrigerator and cleanliness in the handling of goods and in the care of the articles used thereby.

There is always a good demand for the prepared fish, oysters, lobsters, etc., especialty during the fall and winter seasons.

Handle Poultry, Too.

With the first frost there is the beginning of the poultry trade, which reaches its height during the last two weeks of December and the first of January, and is more or less in evidence throughout the rest of the season. Bray Bros. used to import the most of their supplies from the west but as the price advanced they gradually secured their poultry from the Eastern Townships. Arrangements are made beforehand in order to be sure of at least a certain amount of stock.

On the whole, the fall and Christmas business receives considerable attention from Bray Bros., who are now well into the first round of the work.

GROCERY STORE THAT NEVER CLOSES

A Non-Closing Plan Being Tried Out by a Missouri Grocer— Can Buy Goods at Any Hour.

A non-closing grocery store has been opened by Ira L. Daley at St. Joseph, Mo., in direct opposition to the early closing movement which is gaining popularity throughout the world.

The "all-night" grocery store was opened in May of this year. There are no telephones in the store and no delivery wagons on the route. Sales made during the day are to transients and cut prices are the attraction.

After regular business hours, the "open all night" feature is the head line and brings a certain amount of trade that would go to other stores operating during daylight hours. Every sale is for cash.

Located Close to Theatre.

Considerable trade, the proprietor reports is transacted up to midnight. The store is located in a theatre district, and to theatre-goers it suggests food to be taken home for a post-theatre lunch. From midnight until three o'clock there is little demand for groceries. After that time the worker who begins his labors early, comes in for supplies for his breakfast and the lunch that he carries with him.

"Such a store as mine," admitted Mr. Daley, "might not succeed were it not in an unusually good location.

Gets Waiting Street Car Crowds.

"It is also at a street car transfer point and being open at all hours people make it a waiting room. We welcome them for I know by experience they seldom pass out, without making a purchase.

"Even if they do not buy anything while waiting for the cars, we have gained something; these people will have become familiar with the store, and will sooner or later become customers. That is one reason why a location is an important factor in an all night store."

Is there a demand for an all night grocery store in any large city? Will it become popular? Is it profitable?

FOR CARE OF FLOUR.

The lack of air and light is bad for men, says a writer, and equally so for flour. That is why the flour storehouse ought to be of good dimensions, preferably with a high ceiling and well lighted and ventilated.

It is best that the flour storehouse contain nothing but flour. It should be particularly free from odorous substances, because the flour readily absorbs the odors to the detriment of its quality.

It is preferable not to store offals or bran in the flour warehouse. Offals are frequently infested with "mites" which easily get into the flour. Cleanliness should be the inflexible rule in flour warehouses.

Handsome Interior of Quebec Store

Relation of an Attractive Interior to Business Done—The Particular Customer Prefers to Purchase From a Sanitary Looking Establishment—Some Features of Importance.

The attractive grocery establishment has come to stay.

Scores of successful grocers have built up big businesses merely on the first essential of neatness and cleanliness and after that, good service.

So much by way of general argument as to the importance of interior arrangement and display. What now of the detail and application?

Fine Quebec Store.

As an instance, take the splendid grocery establishment of Elzear Turcotte, of Quebec City. Views of the store are presented herewith. A study of them cannot but prove of interest and profit to all grocers.

First impressions, whether or not the best, are certainly lasting. On entering this store one is immediately struck with the splendid light from the wide windows by day and gas and electric by night. The windows, of course, are also utilized for attractive displays. The excellent light, combined with a light sanitary metal ceiling, which is also somewhat of a reflector, and the hardwood floors, make a most attractive outline within which the general detail of store furnishings, may be worked to advantage.

Display of Canned and Bottled Goods.

In the one illustration it will be noted that excellent use has been made of canned and bottled goods in the way of display. The bottled goods are on the spacious shelves extending the full length of the store, while the canned lines are arranged in the form of a pyramid in front of the counter.

Cases are utilized to good effect with extracts and small bottles. On top of each are soda boxes tastefully displayed, while along the shelves an occasional sign relieves the uniformity. The counter, spotlessly clean, and the stools in front, are also catchy features.

Not less attractive is the other illustration. The shelves, with bottled, package and tin goods, surmounted by the canned goods, present the same neat appearance. The light from the window shows the case goods admirably, both in front and in the rear of the counter. The bottled lines make a striking effect. The desk wicket with the cash register neatly centred, adds dignity and lends a truly business aspect to the entire scene. What is shown of the walls gives the appearance of artistic taste and simplicity in general treatment.

The Heating System.

And one more item, lest it might be overlooked or forgotten if not reserved till the conclusion. Note the heating system, as may be determined by a glance at the radiator. A hot water-heating system! How many grocery stores have one? There are no evidences of old stoves and coal scuttles or wood-boxes in this establishment. Modern methods prevail throughout. The hot water system of heating is, indeed, ideal for any grocery store.

Do these methods and fittings cost money? Of course they do. But the point is they make money, too.

In years past any sort of a corner store would do for the grocery business.

To-day, however, conditions have changed and the grocery must be numbered among the most attractive of the modern stores.

Did you ever think that people—the ordinary run of people anywhere—are more particular in purchasing what they eat than in the selection of anything else?

Therein is the key-note of success for the modern grocer. By a fine store and a neat display he can readily impress people, impress them so forcibly that instinctively they will be drawn to his store and give him their custom.

Management of a Grocery Department

Views of a Manager in Western Canadian City—Peculiarities of Buying—A Gamble in Many Cases—Bottled Goods An Important Item in the West—Methods of Order Taking—Assigning Duties For Each Clerk.

By Leonard L. Stephens, Regina.
Mgr. Grocery Dept. Regina Trading Co.

The buying for a grocery department to-day is practically a gamble. Canned goods must be ordered before the 31st of May to get the 2½ per cent. discount on opening prices; but as far as this year's prices are concerned we find that we are on the winning side, not only in canned goods, but on cheese, salmon and a number of other articles.

Importance of Bottled Goods.

One of the chief items in a grocery stock in Western Canada is bottled goods. These are so many and varied that a manager must know the class of trade he is catering to, and also see that the clerks are familiar with that trade as well as the goods. It requires a good deal of tact to be a good grocery salesman.

When a customer asks for a certain line of goods she has been using perhaps five thousand miles away, it is up to the dealer if he is ever alive to the business to do his best to procure it. But if there is only likely to be a limited sale for that article he should buy a limited quanitity. There is no necessity in buying a gross of any line if a dozen of the same article will last for three months. They not only depreciate in value, but the interest on the money in nearly every case will more than cover the extra charge on small quantities.

The management of the grocery department needs a good deal of tact and forethought. To get each clerk adapted to his work is the most important matter to be dealt with. Nothing can be done without a system. Each clerk takes a share in the keeping of stock, in attending to the fixtures, bins, or whatever part is allotted to him; and any stock not in place can be located at any time, by the manager knowing what each clerk is expected to do.

Telephone orders are most important and it requires the best man in the store to attend to these.

Errors made in filling orders should be attended to personally by the manager.

How Orders are Taken.

The order counter system works well in our grocery department. All orders taken by the clerks are entered with the time and number of the clerk and then are checked and transferred to the order counter; from there they go to the delivery room, where we have regular hours for delivery.

Post-Xmas Trade Changes from Years Ago

Not the Falling Off in Business After Festive Season There Used to Be, Say Eastern Ontario Men—Napanee and Brockville Dealers Express Their Opinions—Comparison of Business in December and January.

Have people's ideas of Christmas changed?

Ask the hardworking father of a family, struggling to get the money which will enable his wife to give all the presents she wants, and he will say that they should. Ask the grocer who supplies the Christmas board and he will say that they have.

Yes, Christmas customs like all other customs have altered with the years. The season is not now what it used to be, and grocers have to make different preparations from those which were necessary a decade or more ago.

Christmas is still a time of merry making. Still it is a time of feasting, but not of unaccustomed feastings. Once the Christmas season was like the seven years of plenty following the seven lean years. It was the time when everyone ate everything possible—varieties and quantities unknown during the rest of the year. But now that simple old custom has passed. People prepare for Christmas dinner, but only as they prepare for many special dinners. The meal has ceased to be a landmark.

A Season of Brisker Trade.

The grocers are the ones who notice the change. "Prepare for Christmas?" said one. "Why of course we prepare for Christmas. But you must remember that we only regard it now as a season when trade is a little brisker than ordinary. The delicacies sold at this time are in greater or less demand the year around. The day when business fell off alarmingly after the heavy Christmas buying has passed. Of course there is still a little slowness for a day or two, but it is short lived."

A. S. Kimmerly, of Napanee, Ont., is one of those who testifies to the change in the Christmas celebrations. "The season is not one for gorging now," he remarked. "It is a time when we can sell a few more delicacies than ordinarily; when we can sell goods for decorative purposes better than at other seasons; but it is a time when we can sell all the staples too. Our trade is heavy before the great holiday, but it is not followed by any great depression."

According to Mr. Kimmerly, the merchant may best guide his Christmas preparations by those which he made the year before. By the transactions he has carried on during the whole twelve months he can tell whether the demand is likely to be greater or less. If he has kept track properly he will know which articles he was short of the former season, and will thus be able to judge how much extra he had better buy.

Regarding new lines the grocery does not have to worry greatly. Through advertisements he is advised of these, and travelers call for his orders. "I have found that it is simply a case of deciding what I will need and then placing my orders," said Mr. Kimmerly.

January Compared to December.

As proof of the contention that it is not necessary for business to fall off after the Christmas season is over, might be quoted figures from an Eastern Ontario merchant's books. These show that in December, 1910, the business transacted amounted to $8,300, that in January, 1911, the business done was only $100 less, while in February the volume of business was over $10,000.

A part of this satisfactory condition must be attributed to the fact that the grocer carried on a grain business in connection with his store. The sales here were heavy after January, so that the total business transacted grew rather than diminished.

Such a line might not be good in cities, but in towns where there is a good farm trade, it might be profitably added if the conditions were favorable. The grocer, of course, would have to have considerable room at his disposal to take on such a branch. Also it would be only a source of loss and not of gain if so many others were in the field that competition would be strong.

As is the case when a merchant is considering the addition of any new line it is essential that great judgment should be exercised.

A Brockville Opinion.

Like Mr. Kimmerly, so William Rhodes of Brockville Ont., states that Christmas now does not make the difference in provision buying that it did in years gone by. Yet some lines, fruits, spices, candies, and similar goods, are still in great demand.

Special lines, Mr. Rhodes believes, are well worth carrying. They may not always bring a great profit but they do bring people to the store, and that means an ultimate profit. Special lines, moreover, may be used to make attractive window displays, and their use may be advocated in the advertisements.

Benefit From Advertising

Advertisements. That is a much argued point. There are grocers who contend that their lines cannot be advertised effectively. Mr. Rhodes is not one of these. "I believe in advertising," he said, "and do more about Christmas time than at any other season. In large cities, where a man gets all his trade from a certain section, advertising might not pay; but in a city like Brockville it is different. Men and women from all parts of the city deal with me. Farmers from the country round come in. I find the papers a good way to let them know of some specialties I am handling."

BREAD KEPT ON GLASS SHELVES.

A neat and clean method of handling bread is employed by N. Chartrand, a grocer on St. Antoine St., Montreal. On one side of his store there is what might be called a cupboard built into the wall. It is about six feet high, or a little more, two or two and half feet wide and about the same depth. It has a door with glass panels enabling the clerk or customer to examine the interior, without opening the door.

The best feature, however, are the glass shelves. They are of the same thickness as window glass and can be removed whenever desired. There are no cracks or crevices into which crumbs can drop and mildew. The walls of this cupboard are always kept clean and the glass shelves make the rest of the work a very easy matter indeed. Mr. Chartrand likes the idea, himself, and knows that it pleases his customers, too. He is also careful about bread remaining long in this display case. It is capacious and can accommodate quite a supply of the staff of life. He keeps it fresh and clean by always carrying only fresh bread, and in this respect he is simply carrying out the store principle that he has made his motto.

E. M. Trowern, of Toronto, secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, was in Chicago recently, where he addressed a meeting of retail merchants, representing two hundred thousand dealers in thirty-five States of the Union. The convention lasted three days and an association was formed along similar lines to the Canadian Retail Merchants' Association. Our neighbors to the south have never had a national institution until this, the "Federation of Retail Merchants," was formed.

M. J. Maloney, President of the Detroit Retail Grocers, was elected president of this newly organized body.

Store Cleaning Starts Off Fall Trade

First Consideration in Montreal Dealer's Preparation for Coming Season—Why This "House-Cleaning" Is Necessary—Effect of Bad Odors on Public's Opinion of a Grocery Store—Pushes Sale of Flour.

Off with the old and on with the new. N. Chartrand, a St. Antoine St., Montreal grocer, puts cleanliness first in his considerations of store management. When the representative of The Canadian Grocer called at the store a short time ago he found the first part of the fall painting done and was told that in a few days the work would be entirely completed.

The ceiling had received a new coat of immaculate white and other exposed parts of the interior showed signs of recent attention. A wash-woman was expected to give the floors a thorough cleansing. This was to be followed by the dusting of the shelves, biscuit boxes and the other goods in tins and bottles, and a final touch was to be given the interior to make sure that none of the dust had simply settled again, but that it had been removed.

Getting Ready for Fall Trade.

This, by the way, was Mr. Chartrand's method of preparing for his fall, Christmas, and winter trade. To the representative of The Grocer he gave his explanation of this care and cleanliness.

"During the summer" he said, "dust is bound to make its way into the store. You may go over the shelves regularly but there is bound to be an accumulation. Also, flies may have crawled in behind the boxes and bottles to die and there is certainly a need for a renovation of the store. During the summer the doors have been open and there has been fresh air a plenty. But it will soon be time now to keep the doors closed and you must have an agreeable, inviting air in the store, otherwise customers will not like it. You will understand that if the dust and flies of the summer are not removed and the interior not brightened and made pleasing it is almost certain that when the heat is turned on it will not be long until the presence of dust is noticed."

This then are the reasons for the cleanliness in the Chartrand store. The proprietor is a believer in the value of this care and attention and each season is inaugurated with a general house-cleaning.

Banish Bad Odors.

While on this subject, Mr. Chartrand voiced a few other opinions which will be upheld by the best grocers. One of these might be termed the general effect of bad odors within a store. It all arises from carelessness, said this grocer. An over-ripe apple here, a banana there, a sweet potato somewhere else, grapes, potatoes and so on. Saturday is always a busy day and it is a poor store that has not been upset by a day's activity. The grocer knows the picture of Saturday night about the time the blinds are being pulled down.

The doors are shut tightly, and the store is left in this condition until Monday morning. Mr. Chartrand claims that this is not as it should be. The people have brought in the dust of the street, and there is the litter following a busy day. There may not be an odious smell in the store but it is not sweet and wholesome. Goods that are at all likely to take up the store odors will certainly do so.

There is a certain fragrance about the air in a good clean grocery store that appeals to customers. It may be regarded as a guarantee of wholesomeness and cleanliness and it should be found in every establishment that makes any pretensions of quality and modernness.

Having renovated the store and made it brighter and more pleasing than ever, Mr. Chartrand brings out his fall and winter goods more prominently. In the centre he has had a purely summer display. It generally consisted of seasonable goods. These are removed now and the space devoted to dried fruits, such as currants, raisins, apricots, prunes, dried apples, dates and figs. The staff begin to put their selling efforts behind these new goods and business hums in the new season.

Flour Gets Attention.

Flour is another article that Mr. Chartrand gives special attention. He has always found new interest in flour as soon as the cooler weather sets in and naturally he leaves nothing undone to get his share of the trade. He makes a display in a conspicuous place and now and then puts in a window. To The Grocer he stated that the customer still bought a large quantity of flour especially during the time of the year now approaching. These several lines illustrate the general plan by which Mr. Chartrand begins his fall trade. "If you come back in about two weeks," he said, "you will find quite a change, I think. One must keep abreast of the times and it would never do not to anticipate the wants of our customers during the various seasons of the year."

WOULDN'T BE WITHOUT MEAT SLICER.

"If I did not have a meat slicer during the summer months," said J. Smith, a Montreal grocer, at the corner of Bernard and Clark streets, "I do not know what I should have done. Often there were four and five people at a time to be served, and I know that if I had to cut the meat in the old-fashioned way those customers would have grown weary of waiting, and might not have waited. Besides, when you are cutting boiled ham you can make clean cuts with the machine that would be almost impossible in the old way."

Mr. Smith is a modest grocer, doing a safe business, and he realizes that cleanly methods are always appreciated. "The meat cutter is sanitary and neat. You do not have to touch the meat with your hands, and the customer not only likes the manner in which the slices are made, but she can see for herself that everything about the cutting and handling is as she would have it."

Continuing Mr. Smith said: "Boiled ham is one of the features of the summer trade, and just about this time breakfast bacon becomes prominent. There is always a steady demand and considerable work to be done with a meat cutting machine throughout the whole year. Of course, you have to cut quite a bit of meat before you have paid for your machine. Mine cost $85, but in the long run it has paid for itself, and you are pleasing customers and making money for yourself, for the cutting machine prevents odds and ends of bacon and hams collecting."

Village and Catalogue Prices Compared

The Mail Order Question as It Stands in Havelock, Ont. — Prices of Local Grocers Below Those of the Toronto Mail Order Stores—Big Houses Using Few Low-Priced Lines as Baits—Ad. Used by One Dealer to Defend His Trade.

In Havelock, Ont., 100 miles east of Toronto, the merchants tell you they have had strong competition from the mail order houses. Investigation at the express and freight offices there shows that big Toronto houses are drawing considerable trade that rightly belongs to the merchants of Havelock.

However, there is one thing that the merchants there do claim, and that is, that the amount of mail order sales would be a great deal larger if they had not put forth some efforts to offset advances of these catalogue houses. They did not shout to the housetops that they were commencing a campaign against mail-order buying, but quietly, whenever opportunity presented itself, each merchant impressed upon a customer the fact that he could give just as good value, quality considered.

Thus, has much been done to overcome this drawback of the trade.

A Railway Centre.

Havelock is a railroad town; wages are received monthly, so that on pay day each month, the people have plenty of money with which to purchase from mail-order houses, if they are so inclined. It is well known that an extremely large volume of money flows into Havelock monthly, and the mail order houses, always alive to such facts, have seen that their catalogues are profusely distributed in the town. The prices in them look cheap, because they are able to pick out a few odd lines, which the mail order house have underpriced as baits.. The conclusion is that they are selling cheaply.

What Comparison of Prices Shows.

Merchants of Havelock, or of any other town have, however, an important lever, which if properly used, should put a complete stop to mail order buying. It is true, that taken straight through, quality considered, merchants of Havelock have the mail order houses beaten on prices. This is not mere hearsay, nor the idle boast of a dealer, but a statement founded on facts and figures secured by impartial investigation on the part of The Grocer.

The prices of a number of staple lines as listed in the catalogue of one of Toronto's big mail-order houses were secured. Dealers in Havelock were asked to give prices on the same goods of the same quality. The comparison is here given, and demonstrates beyond doubt that the good people of Havelock, although their intentions may be the best, are losing money by purchasing from the catalogue stores. Not alone are the home prices as a whole lower, but in comparisons, freight, draft exchange and postage, should be added to the mail order prices.

This is the strongest argument possible against mail-order buying. It is not necessary for the dealer to appeal only to the loyalty of citizens. Opportunity is open to appeal to their business instinct, and to show them in dollars and cents just why they should not send their money away from home.

Power of Good Advertisement.

One dealer in a small town discovered his prices were below that of catalogue houses. He drew up a comparison somewhat similar to the one here given. He used a full page in his local paper, heading it; "Some facts and figures concerning mail order competition." Then followed: "The practice of buying goods of mail-order houses is an expensive habit, and in the end is a money loser for those who practice it. Let us compare a few methods and prices. You are obliged to send them your money before you see what you are buying. You are obliged to buy from pictures and descriptions. You must pay the freight charges. In case goods do not suit, you have the goods and they have the money. It is a well recognized fact, that many people will accept goods of these catalogue houses without a murmur, which they would not accept of the local dealer at any price. For bait, they may sell you sugar and a few other articles for less money than they purchase them. But they must do more than make up on other articles. Their expenses are enormous. It costs them far more to sell a dollar's worth of goods than it does any average dealer. Few people realize that it costs one of these houses $350,000 a year to merely issue their catalogue, and this is surely added to the selling price of the goods."

Injuring Property Values.

"Not counting all these things—the fact that you are hurting the value of your own farm or property, when you hurt this town by diverting money; the fact that we take your produce and give you goods in exchange; the fact that you can get credit here when you haven't the ready cash, and can always bring goods back and exchange them when they are not satisfactory; in spite of all these facts, if you could get goods cheaper of the mail-order houses than of us, we would advise you to do it. But you can't do it. You have a catalogue that you can study in the evenings, and prices in it look cheap, because you have plenty of time to study them, and the description is written in fine language. But, if you take your catalogue and compare prices right through, and if we don't furnish you the same articles, quality considered, cheaper than the mail order house does, we will give them to you, and you won't be buying anything from a book description either. In support of our statement, we quote a few prices for comparison."

SPECIAL CONFECTIONERY DEPARTMENT.

In order to make the most of his opportunity to sell confectionery, fruit and nuts during the Christmas and New Year's season, R. C. Braund, Peterborough, Ont., prepares a special department for these goods, and engages a clerk to attend to it.

The first advantage is that confectionery is thus brought more forcibly than ever before the attention of regular customers and others. This department is always given a prominent position in the store, and no one can fail to see it. A good assortment of candies and chocolates is shown, and the display is made more attractive by the addition of fruit and nuts.

Mr. Braund does not hesitate to let it be known that Santa Claus has made his store the headquarters for these goods, and the extent of the sales has always demonstrated the wisdom of this method. Every grocer knows that nuts, fruit and confectionery are features of the Christmas trade. By thus emphasizing this section of the Christmas stock there is the realization by customers that they must have nuts, fruit and candy for the holidays. And practically every household purchases not a little, but a large supply of these goods for their own pleasure and to add to the welcome they wish their friends to feel when Christmas goodwill is exchanged.

Stirring Up Fall and Christmas Demand

Montreal Dealer Uses Various Selling Methods to Make Sales —Maintains That People Must Know What You Have Before Being Brought to Purchasing Point—How Dried Fruits Are Handled—Present Season Means Extra Sales in Flour, Cocoa, Beef Extracts, Etc

"LAST year I did not handle a pound of currants or raisins that were not package goods," said T. J. Stevenson, of Kyle & Stevenson, 143 Fairmont Ave., Montreal. "I have gone over to the package idea in a great many lines," he continued. "I buy butter in pound prints, and on the same principle have I handled currants and raisins. When you buy 50 pounds of butter in prints, you sell them without any real possibility of a loss. That is under ordinary circumstances.

"I also buy bacon in pound packages, and I sell it as I buy it. There are no waste ends and one package is as good as another. It is not necessary to mention the many other articles that are sold in this way. The packages of currants and raisins have simplified handling them to a great extent. Every time a pound of either currants or raisins are weighed there is the possibility of a loss, but by the package system this contingency is avoided."

The Fall Campaign.

Mr. Stevenson remarked upon the importance of the fall campaign extending through the Christmas season. After the second week in October the fresh fruits begin to thin out, the weather is tinged with frost and people are beginning to think of foods that will put heat in their bodies, instead of the cooling foods of summer.

The first signs of the changing demand appear with larger sales of cocoa and coffee. Beef extracts are asked for and a display on a counter or in the window puts life into the new demand. Then there is felt a better enquiry for rolled oats and people who have been buying lightly of flour increase their orders to the regular winter size.

"The baker gets quite a lot of the summer bread business," Mr. Stevenson continued, "but in the fall and winter the home baking begins again and flour is a very important article. Prepared soups are becoming more popular every year. We have one particular line that sells well, and already our sales have been encouraging."

Depends on Salesmanship.

Mr. Stevenson's method might be called the regular method of selling. He places much dependence on his window and counter displays, upon the salesmanship abilities of himself and his clerks, and lastly upon the quality of the goods he carries. He has been running an advertisement in a district paper, but is of the opinion that better results can be obtained by putting this expenditure into his goods and his store.

Never Caught With Dried Fruits.

Mr. Stevenson has always prepared for one season by a glance at what he had done in the corresponding season of the previous year. In other words one must be guided by experience. "In handling dried fruits," he said, "I have never been caught with more than I could handle, nor would I want to be. A glance over your last year's business will give you a good idea of what you are likely to do during the coming season, if conditions remain favorable. By a little extra effort and by a slightly increased demand you may expect a little more than you accomplished a year ago. But in handling these lines I am inclined to keep within safe bounds."

Selling Fruit.

"If you have the goods people buy them." This is a business axiom which Mr. Stevenson has found from actual experience to be worth following. During the past summer he tried it with fruit and it worked wonders. In the past he used to buy, for example, six baskets of peaches. He would sell them and then buy others. But there was generally a short period when he might be without them. He would replenish his stock and thus it went, buying in small lots and selling them. With grapes it was the same. When he purchased ten baskets he sold them. Then he bought ten more. But during the past summer he bought in large quantities. Instead of six baskets of peaches it was fifty or sixty and similarly did he handle grapes.

The encouraging feature of the change was the manner in which the heavy stocks of fruit were sold out. The mere fact of the having of the fruit impressed customers and people who passed. They apparently passed the news around "that Kyle & Stevenson had a fine lot of peaches, plums or grapes," whereas formerly the limited supplies failed to attract attention. Mr. Stevenson is of the opinion that this principle applies to a great many articles, but as in the case of the fruit they must be made prominent before the public. A good window display, newspaper advertising or some other method is required to attract attention.

Selling Flour.

For his flour demand Mr. Stevenson has two of the recognized leading brands. He sells them in 7, 14, 24½ lb. bags, in addition to the larger size which is asked for by home bakers. A flour window is easily and quickly arranged and it is an article that is readily suggested.

The fall season is welcomed by Mr. Stevenson, who is always prepared for the new business and helps to give it a start by bring out the seasonable goods the people want but which they have been slow to begin purchasing.

A Talk to Sales Managers

An address given before the Executive Club, Chicago.
By R. R. Shuman.

The problem of winning the individual and collective heart of a vast and unseen multitude is very different from the problem of persuading one man face to face, eye to eye.

A clever salesman may sell a customer.

Advertising must make a thousand customers want to buy.

When the salesman who, by force of his stronger personality, persuades a weaker man than he to buy what he does not want or more than he needs, or more than he can afford to buy, he is illustrating the difference between selling a man and making the man want to buy the goods for their value's sake —their worth's sake to him.

The victim in that case is buying not goods, but experience—and sometimes dearly.

A sale of that kind has no permanent value and is usually cancelled; or, if not cancelled, is consummated under protest.

It makes enemies, not friends.

Personality Versus Merit.

The other kind of selling—the selling that creates the desire to buy, has a deeper foundation than that of a temporary surrender of will. It goes to the very foundation of things and builds business from the ground up.

The word-of-mouth salesman depends on his own personality more than on the quality or merit of his goods.

The printed salesman depends more on the merit of the goods or proposition advertised than on personality.

Yet there may be and indeed must be personality in the printed or written selling talk—for the composite buyer has a human side—a heart—just as the individual has; and the man who can best play on the soul side of the vast audience who reads his ads., his form letters or his booklets, is the man who has come the nearest to the secret of success in the important matter of building business friendship by wholesale.

The old-fashioned way to advertise had for its keynote the thought "We want your orders." It was the plea of the beggar, supported sometimes with a beggar's threat.

The new way to advertise is to reach away down into the mainspring of self interest—the self interest, not of yourself, but of the other man.

In many lines of business it can go no farther than the second Sheldon step —creating a desire to buy—getting the inquiry; and the salesman must do the rest.

Attention, Interest, Desire, Resolve.

In other activities, as in mail order advertising, it runs the whole scale of the Sheldon formula.

But in either case the printed word, to be effective, must be so attractive that it first forces attention to itself; then overcomes the inertia of the reader sufficiently to make him do more than glance at the headlines; then so convincing that it overcomes all the powers of personal persuasion of the eye-to-eye salesman who is waiting his turn to be heard, or who has just made his personal appeal.

It is not an easy thing to do. Indeed, it is so difficult that few succeed at it. Yet it is so intensely important a business force that the advertising manager of most businesses should, at least, rank with the sales manager.

The sales manager who handles 10 salesmen perhaps makes through them 100 calls a day, let us say on retail grocers, at an expense to the house of $100 a day—a dollar a call.

The advertising manager at the same time may easily call on 200,000 men in the same day at a cost of one cent a call—measured by full-page ads in trade journals that reach the same men that the salesmen reach.

Yet you men—you who are sales managers and proprietors, hire "kids" to do this work and pay them kids' wages plus the high-sounding title of "Advertising Manager." You hire them, not to manage advertising, but to grind out copy—such as it is. You hire them, not to buy advertising, but not to buy advertising—convenient buffers between your august selves and the advertising solicitors,—and they have to run to you with every $10 item.

You trust them to handle the multitude of prospects while you busy yourselves with the few who happen to call or write.

Poor Prospective.

I was in a store the other day when I heard this conversation.

"Say Hanson, what are you doing?"

"Oh, I'm grinding away at that ad."

"Jerusalem! Man, can't you see there are a couple of customers up front? Go and wait on them instead of wasting your time on that fool ad. I'm sorry I ever listened to that solicitor."

I got acquainted with Hanson, under some pretext, and from him learned that he was trying to get up an ad. for the Sunday Tribune, and that the Boss would never let him alone 10 minutes at a time.

Think of it! Making a man neglect his talk to 350,000 in order that he might talk to one!

Think of trusting the speech to such an audience to a cub salesman who happened to be willing to undertake the job!

I am now talking to 80 men. Though I have nothing to sell you—no self interest whatever—I am trying to make my talk 80 times as worth while as if I were talking to one man.

And this is my thought whenever I write an ad.

Say I am writing a page soda fountain ad. to go into a drug journal that has 10,000 circulation; I see before me 10,000 druggists, seated in a vast auditorium, eyes turned toward the platform where I stand—men who paid for the privilege of hearing what I have to say and what others have to say—paid in the form of their annual subscription to the paper.

What an opportunity! Ten thousand men, with an aggregate buying power of 30, 40, 50,000,000 of dollars. The value of all advertising is measured by the buying power of the audience that reads it and that's why I am a champion of trade journals. Of those 10,000 certainly 1,000 must need soda fountains—and that thousand will buy from somebody—a thousand fountains at an average cost of $1,000 apiece—$1,000,000 in real prospective business in my line seated before me!

Ye gods! for the power of a Pitt or a Webster! It is a supreme moment! What shall I say to win them?

First I must get their undivided attention. They are tired. They are listless. Some are talking. That is the problem of the headline and the picture, and in both I shout so that they must hear.

Metaphorically, I single out a little old fellow far back under the gallery, and make him lean back comfortably instead of straining forward with his hand to his ear.

Metaphorically, I also single out as I proceed with the text of the ad. one after another of the audience who shows interest, and talk to him as man to man.

Do I say "We want your order?" Not on your life. He knows that. I tell him—and in doing so tell all the great audience—how earnestly we strive to make our fountains better than the rest; point out mechanical features in which they are better, and in every word and thought try to put myself in his place and show him what he has to gain in dollars and cents, in increased business, in the friendship of his own satisfied customers.

A Vital Calling.

Nobody can talk slightingly about advertising in my presence. Nobody can call me "Only an advertising man" in my presence. My calling is vital. Its possibilities are boundless. Its power cannot be measured by the yard stick with which you measure the individual salesman. It is the new force in business that lays foundations of future greatness. Its work is permanent. Its responsibilities, too, are multiplied by the magnitude of its opportunities.

Every advertisement talks to an audience, and every audience has its own personality—its composite heart and soul, hopes and fears, likes and dislikes. It is different from any other audience, and it must be appealed to as a composite personality, rather than an impersonal thing.

That audience is a harp of myriad strings and every clear true note I utter sets corresponding harp strings and heart strings to vibrating in harmony with me.

I must be discreet, for the printed word, with no trick of eye or voice to interpret it, is so easily misunderstood.

I must be truthful: for there is no unsaying or explaining away a thing once said.

I must be earnest, for indifference on my part is absolutely fatal.

And above all I must speak in simple language.

Let me say that again; Advertising to succeed must be expressed in simple language. In short, it must be easy reading, and it must be worth reading.

Lincoln said that the Lord must have loved common people or he wouldn't have made so many of them.

Plain Talk, to Common People.

When you advertise you are talking to common people: or even if you are talking to a special audience of the cultured few, your best success lies in sounding the homely notes that are common to all.

No advertisement was ever great just as no oration was ever great that did not ring true.

No advertising man ever achieved permanent greatness who did not speak from the heart and honestly.

A clever salesman may deceive and delude one man, but no man is shrewd enough to deceive a multitude not for any length of time. Let him try it and a thousand eyes will bore deep into his insincerity and a thousand tongues will expose his rascality.

Necessary Qualities.

For this reason personal honesty, nobility of character, sincere personal belief in the thing advertised are necessary first steps in the making of a man who will make a talk that will win a host of other men.

And a second step is the quality of being in tune—in tune with his fellow man, and particularly in tune with the particular audience which he is addressing.

To be in tune with any audience, he must know his audience—his composite man just as a salesman should know his individual man.

And the best investment a firm can make in its advertising department is to give the advertising man such capable assistants that he himself has the time and the strength to go out and get acquainted with men and conditions on the outside, so that when he writes his printed message to those men, he can see them clearly before him, in the composite, and understand their problems, their methods of thought, their attitude toward the printed word.

Advertising has ceased to consist merely of writing and printing something and sending it out.

Treating Advertising Slightingly.

Yet, how do you approach this opportunity?

By treating advertising solicitors like book agents.

By getting rid of them as long as you can; then finally silencing them by signing their contract for as small a space as you think will pacify them, and tossing them a "card" for copy.

You don't believe me?

Go back to your office and look through the "junk" in your advertising contract envelope—bought, not because you wanted it or even knew what you were buying; bought from a mixed sense of fear and duty, just as I buy tickets to the switchman's ball when a couple of ugly mugs shove them under my nose.

And what do you get?—CARDS.

CARDS—public acknowledgement of your own weakness—vertebrate and financial; CARDS that automatically put you—no matter how rich you are—down in the "Piker" class at the bottom of an obscure back page.

CARDS that show little faith in your own goods and actual contempt for the audience that asks for bread and receives a stone.

What the "Card" Says.

Here's what a CARD in a trade paper says to me.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

Dried Fruits—New stocks. Prices high.

Montreal, Nov. 2.—Business is running along smoothly and is beginning to settle down to the demands of the Christmas trade. Dried fruits are arriving and are coming on a bare market. They seem to be, as a whole, later than usual. Canned goods are coming in steadily, salmon being included in the more recent arrivals.

Thanksgiving trade was quite up to expectations, and while jobbers are already delivering Christmas goods to retail trade, the latter will likely rest easy on their oars for a few weeks yet before they are deep into the year-end business. There are quite a few features to the present business but they have all been referred to more or less before.

Collections are quite satisfactory. Fall weather has helped the sales of fish, flour, dried fruits, soups and similar lines that receive particular attention at this season.

Sugar.—The demand for sugar is steady and the tendency seems to be to carry light stock. The continued unchanged prices seem to have created the impression that next movement will be downward rather than a further ascent. Of course, no one can tell just what will happen, but it is rather significant that the upward price tendency has stopped short, and that jobbers and others are keeping close to the line where there is little or no danger of being caught. Primary conditions are still firm, but it is the general opinion that they are not quite as strong as a few weeks ago.

Dried Fruits.—New stocks are arriving but they have been slow. Jobbers report the receipt of new prunes, raisins, etc., but in many cases actual delivery from the docks and stations will not be made until the end of the week. In practically every instance, new goods are coming on bare markets, and the firmness of the market is best illustrated by the appended prices. Prunes are undoubtedly dear, particularly in larger sizes. Spot currants are scarce and so are prunes and raisins just at present although the removal of this state of affairs is not far distant. Evaporated apples should be plentiful following a large crop, but there is not much to report in this regard as yet. Figs are moving freely from the retailers and with the arrival of new goods there should be a better trade. Present demand has been supplied from express shipments. Evaporated peaches, pears and apricots are quoted at a high figure. One certainty is that new stocks will be welcomed by both jobbers and retailers.

Nuts.—There has been a noticeable improvement in the demand for nuts during the past two weeks. Coffee.—The coffee question remains a vexing problem. Prices are higher, following recent advances in the primary market and manufacturers who desire to uphold the quality of particular brands without advancing prices until it is absolutely necessary have to "stand pat" before what in many cases must be a loss to them. Should the present stringency remain for some time it will surprise none of those who have followed the market closely to see prices advanced. In the meantime the retailer is probably meeting with a somewhat similar problem, only in his case he generally has to follow the market except, of course, with particular brands. There has been some irregular movements in the market of late, but they are not regarded as of any account. Firmness and high prices seem to have the spot light and will not be soon displaced if existing reports are really authentic and they are, apparently.

Teas.—Firmness is a feature of the tea market. Prices are rather high, there is a good demand and other markets are in sympathy, although it may be said that this fact is not very material. There is practically no change in the Japan tea situation. Stocks are small with good demand for all grades, and no prospects of further shipments even for late crop teas. Prices consequently are firm with upward tendency.

Beans and Peas.—The quality of both beans and peas is higher than usual and prices obtain accordingly. Hand-picked beans are quoted at $2.50 a bushel. Whatever the reasons may be both peas and beans show a higher standard than is ordinarily the case and of course this fact lends strength to their quotations.

Canned Goods.

Montreal.—The same old situation. At least it is beginning to be regarded as old. Salmon is beginning to be delivered, but the total is reported only 35 p.c. of orders. Some jobbers are not exactly "tickled to death" with the speed (?) with which their canned goods have been delivered. And prices! There is nothing of special importance to report in this regard. The trade may be assured that there has been no ground lost in this respect, and canned goods are, generally speaking, firm.

Toronto.—If there is any line with which wholesalers are oversupplied it, indeed, is not canned goods. The situation is decidedly the other way. Those wholesalers who are attempting to supply 100 per cent. of their customers' orders are in some cases, at least, having considerable difficulty. For instance, the jobber who received only 40 per cent. of orders for tomatoes, must purchase elsewhere to give his customers 100 per cent. Some United States stocks are being used for this purpose.

Complaints are being made regarding slowness with which canned goods are being delivered. Both wholesaler and retailer are finding fault. For instance, the retailer who has cleaned up his stock of tomatoes, says he does not feel like paying $1.60 or $1.70 when he has goods bought at $1.15 which have not yet been shipped.

Salmon is now coming forward from the coast. With the high price of sockeyes, a greater demand will be thrown on cohoes, and as only a 50 per cent. delivery of this line is being made, there is a consequent strength. This is reflected to a greater or less extent all down the list of salmon.

There is a good brisk demand in evidence for canned goods even now, when fresh vegetables and the housewife has a good shelf of preserved fruit.

Toronto, Nov. 2.—A good volume of new business is being done by local wholesalers, while they are also busily engaged in sending out goods for which orders were placed earlier in the season. Among other lines are new crop dried fruits, new peels, canned goods, etc.

Considerable trade is also being done with those dealers who get in supplies before the close of navigation, thus saving on freight rate. Requirements for goods which frost will affect are also being looked to.

Thanksgiving trade on the whole was good and prospects are bright for the remainder of the year. The weather is now more favorable for the sale of numerous lines and with Christmas only two months off, dealers expect to be kept busy.

Sugar.—Sugar market in Canada is stationary and of waiting nature. A great deal in regard to the future depends on whether Russia will be allowed to export her surplus supply of sugar this year. Those who are party to the contract are favorable to the proposition but each country has to first pass the necessary legislation before this will be possible. The Brussels Convention will convene again Dec. 8, when if contracting countries have passed this legislation, surplus in Russia will be allowed to be exported. Probabilities are therefore somewhat uncertain.

In New York, refined has begun to adjust itself to new crop conditions but prices were forced so high there during the flurry that they will have to decrease considerably before they are on a level with Canadian quotations. The estimates of the new cane and beet crops combined show a loss of 1,636,594 tons over last year, although compared with two years ago when the yield was short, a net increase of 400,000 tons is shown in this estimate. The Cuban estimates show an increase of 400,000 tons over last year.

European beets are quoted at 5.59 centrifugals in New York. New crop Cubas for January shipment are held at 4.86 landed, so it seems as if there should be some adjustment yet.

Demand is not brisk but normal for the season.

Syrup and Molasses.—Trade in syrups is active. Not alone is this confined to one line, but corn syrups as well as maple, both pure and compound, are finding good sale. General markets on Barbados molasses have been gradually firming up in sympathy with high sugar market and general conditions but no changes have been noted in local quotations as yet. It does not seem that the same attention is given to sale of molasses in Ontario as in some of the other provinces. While conditions connected with its sale are not so good here, greater efforts would no doubt work for a better trade.

Dried Fruits.—General steadiness prevails in dried fruits, both locally and at primary points. The fact that Valencia raisins have stiffened materially in Spain leads wholesalers to be a little firmer in their ideas, as any further purchases can only be made at an advanced figure.

New crop dates will probably arrive about Nov. 15. First shipment has already been well sold ahead. The crop in Persia has been lighter on the whole than last year. Hallowees will be higher in price, while Fards will be about the same as last year.

Prunes on coast are holding firmer and are on a considerably higher basis than was quoted earlier in the season. Raisins in California also are apparently holding steady.

Wholesalers are now busily engaged in shipping new crop dried fruits to retailers. The trade are said to have generally ordered fairly well for requirements.

Tea.—A general steadiness is in evidence in all varieties of tea. There have of late been no special features bearing on the market. A fair amount is now being taken by the retail trade.

Coffee.—Prices locally, following conditions at the larger coffee centres of the world, are well maintained. The world's supply of coffee is in strong hands and local coffee men can see nothing ahead, at least for some little time, but a continuance of the present steadiness.

Prices which retailer has had to pay for coffee have been going upward. In order to still continue to sell coffee at a profit he must either sell a lower grade or raise the price. The latter is the most preferable and will be found best in the end for the dealer who wishes to maintain his coffee business.

Spices.—Already, according to local dealers, retailers are ordering spices in anticipation of Xmas trade. Although this is a "between" season, retailers report a considerable demand.

It is officially estimated by the Zanzibar Government experts that the clove crop for the 1911-12 season will exceed that for the season of 1908-9. The clove season runs from July to June, and is now in full activity. With new crop coming forward, prices will before long show a declining tendency. Allspice is holding firm while nutmegs are on a upward trend

Winnipeg, Nov. 2.—No greater indication of the growth of the West during the past six months can be obtained than by general review of the wholesale grocery trade. At this season, when as a rule harvesting is generally completed and retail merchants are able to meet their debts, prospects have always looked more encouraging than the year before. This year, however, optimism has been the prevailing spirit in the trade. Starting with an early spring, prospects for a bumper crop were very encouraging, after the severe drought which prevailed last year, as moisture was abundant. Until the grain was almost ready for harvest, this feeling continued to prevail, and prospects for a phenomenal crop were bright.

Just as the harvest, however, appeared secured, the weather conditions became worse, and continuous rain prevailed for a period of a month or six weeks. Harvesting was, therefore, considerably delayed, and farmers were forced to sit around and watch their yield as well as grade gradually decrease day after day. Many fields were cut and in the stook, when the wet weather arrived, and consequently the grade of these was considerably affected. At last, however, some two weeks ago, the harvesting was generally completed and threshing operations begun. Wet weather again delayed these, and at present there is still a large quantity of grain to be harvested in the West. In spite of these continuous delays, however, faith of inhabitants of the West has remained steadfast in the country, and trade has maintained the standard set some three months ago. Sharp frosts have been prevailing during the last few days, and it is expected that fair weather will continue after this change. If such does prevail, conditions will be found to be in a favorable state, but if the winter sets in at once, many serious problems will be encountered.

Sugar.—As stated above, trade has been steady, and as a general rule the tendency has been upwards on all lines of food material. Sugar, the principal commodity, advanced steadily from June till September; the total increase approximately being 1 cent per pound. For the last five weeks, this line has been remaining stationary, and an advance or decline would not be at all surprising.

Syrup and Molasses.—Both these lines have been extremely active. Former has advanced 25 cents per case in the last six weeks, dde to conditions prevailing on the corn market to the south. Speculation as to the future prospects of the market has been indulged in, but as no reliable information can be secured, it is deemed advisable to refrain from any predictions. Molasses of all grades have advanced from 2 to 10 cents per gallon, in sympathy with sugar market during this period, and is remaining steady. The demand for these two lines is not exceptionally strong, and consequently stocks have not been enlarged to any great extent.

Evaporated Apples.—Coming in on a bare market as this line did some six weeks ago, the evaporators were quite independent, and consequently high prices ruled around 10 to 10½ cents, which consequently meant an 11 to 12 cent basis for the retailer. After the first demand was supplied, however, the price gradually receded, and it is the prevailing opinion at present time that no great deal of business will be placed till lower basis is reached.

California Dried Fruits.—Since the opening price of prunes was named, viz., 4½ cents bulk basis, prices have steadily advanced, until to-day's ruling figure at 6 cents bulk basis finds ready purchasers. Raisins have held fairly firm since opening prices, with the exception of a possible reduction of ½ cent per pound. Peaches and apricots are still soaring, and the prices asked for are practically prohibitive, and the demand is therefore very much curtailed.

Canned Goods.—The exciting situation which has been prevailing in these lines has been from time to time pointed out during the year. The demand in all lines has been good, notwithstanding the large production of local garden truck and fruit, as well as the large quantities imported from California and Ontario. The short pack in Ontario this fall renders the situation at the present time serious, particularly in tomatoes and peas; the former having advanced 50 cents per case since first prices were quoted, while the latter is up 30 cents per case. The United States market on these lines is also short, and when next spring comes along, short stocks and high prices are bound to prevail.

Brooms.—During the last two months brooms have advanced $1.25 per doz., which is almost 33⅓ per cent. This increase is reported to be due to the conditions of the broom corn market in the States.

Tea.—All lines of tea have been in strong demand during the summer and large quantities of bulk tea are being used. No phenomenal increase or changes in the trade is noticed, but conditions represent more a period of steady growth and development of trade.

Coffee.—Next to sugar, coffee showed the most active market during the summer, advancing steadily practically every month of the year. Although there is a temporary break at the moment, it is the unanimous feeling that prices will not stop until a 20 cent per pound basis is reached. In spite of the high prices prevailing at the present time, the demand has remained strong, and large orders are still being filled.

Beans.—About a month ago the market on this line, which had been advancing steadily for several months, weakened somewhat, but has since strengthened up again. The feeling prevailing is that there will not be any further reduction in this line. The demand is only normal, and as far as can be learnt the size of stocks at basis of supply is the principal cause of the re-strengthening of the market.

Butter.—Condition prevailing in butter has been improved. Prices held firm during the summer only to fall with the approach of fall. This weak spell, however, did not last long. The small supplies of milk and cream coming in from the country resulted in forcing prices up again, and at the present time Manitoba fresh made creamery bricks are selling at 30 cents per pound, and boxes at 29 cents. Dairy butter is also very scarce and the supplies coming in are limited. Indications at present would seem to point towards a greater scarcity existing. Strictly No. 1, delivered Winnipeg, is now quoted at 21 cents per pound; No. 2, at 18 cents; No. 2, at 15½ cents; and No. 4, at 13½.

Cheese.—The past season was perhaps one of the smallest outputs for Manitoba cheese factories since they have been established. At present there is little or no cheese of local manufacture offered for sale on this market. Ontario cheese appears to be in fairly large quantity, but high prices are prevailing and it is likely to advance. Dealers are quoting Ontarios at 15½ to 15¾ cents per pound, delivered Winnipeg.

Provisions.—There is little new that can be stated with regard to the provision trade, which has been holding firm during the summer. The movement of live stock this fall is somewhat different from what it was last year. The scarcity of feed, owing to the drought last summer, caused the western farmers to sell all their young stock in the fall at considerable loss. This year the reaction is being noticed, and as a result wholesalers claim they cannot secure enough for the fall trade.

Receipts of both live cattle and hogs have been decidedly small, when compared with last year.

Poultry.—The movement in poultry from the country to the city has been considerably delayed this year, and is just commencing. The quality of the stock appears to be in advance of last year, although the quantities as stated above being received are smaller. Turkeys appear in the best shape, and one wholesaler stated that he thought them 25 per cent. better than last year. It is expected, however, that the quantity will increase as the Christmas season approaches. The price prevailing is very good, and ranges about the same as last year.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax, Nov. 1.—Wholesale grocery dealers report business brisk. Trade with the shore ports is heavy. In past years merchants along the coast have left their orders until late in the season, and as a result there was a rush during late autumn months that it was hard for wholesalers to keep up with. All the coastal steamers have been so crowded with freight that it was impossible to ship the goods within any reasonable time.

This year wholesalers have overcome this to large extent, and now the goods are being sent forward, that heretofore would not go until a couple of weeks later.

Markets generally show advancing tendency. Rolled oats have been marked up to $6 per barrel, and some dealers say that they would not be surprised to see them go still higher. Beans are also higher, hand-picked being quoted at $2.50, and prime at $2.25. Spanish raisins have been marked up a fraction and may go still higher. Sugars are unchanged.

Flour markets are firm, Manitoba patents being quoted at $6.35 to $6.50, and Ontario blends from $5.10 to $5.20. Cornmeal is $1.80 to $1.85, and feed flour from $1.70 to $1.75. Middlings are quoted at $28 to $29 per ton, and bran at $26.50 to $27 per ton.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John, Nov. 2.—Few changes were recorded in local markets during past week. Dealers report owing to fact that in the West of late there have been heavy rains, beans have shown a tendency to soar during the last few days. Prices have gone up from 10 to 15 cents a bushel, and first shipments of new crop are looked for next week. It is thought possible that since Yellow Eye Beans are almost as cheap as hand-picked, the consumption of them will be greatly increased. The effect of long continued drought this summer is expected to make a material difference in prices of many kinds of foodstuffs. Pork and pork products are expected to be about the only articles which may be cheaper. In pot barley the jobbing price is now $7 a barrel, while this time last year it could be had for from $4.25 to $4.50. Rice is now selling for from 50 cents to 75 cents higher than last year.

Local grocers report a shortage in crop of peaches and apricots, and as consequence evaporated goods in these lines will be higher.

Raisins and currants will be higher, but why the former should be advanced is not definitely known. Fall shipments in dried fruits are now beginning to be received. Speculation among the exporters of figs is thought to be responsible for a rise in that commodity. Several lines of nuts are higher.

Already the expected has happened in regard to tomatoes. Local grocers have had to send to the States to keep up with the demand, as the scarcity in Canada has prevented their orders being filled more than 40 per cent. Higher prices are expected to prevail.

The wheat market during the past ten days has continued quite strong, and two advances have followed in Manitoba patents amounting to 20 cents per barrel. Ontario patents are also higher. It is thought probable that the higher prices will prevail for the greater part of the season, as there is reported to be considerable damaged wheat in the west.

GOOD XMAS LINES.

Macfarlane, Lang & Co., Glasgow, Scotland, biscuit manufacturers, have a most appropriate article for the Christmas season in their "Yule Log" tin. This is an out-of-the-ordinary decorated biscuit tin, made to resemble a log, the handle of the lid being in the shape of an axe. It is filled with assorted, small, dainty biscuits and should now be a splendid seller. They have also on the market a "Highland Shortbread" round decorated tin which is also quite appropriate for this season. These tins can be had filled either with thin sugared shortbread or with one thick cake Scotch shortbread. Their "Forfar" biscuit is put up in oblong tins with gold embossed wrapper and contains delicious finger-shaped cakes of thick shortbread. This firm specializes on shortbread and only the best materials are used.—Advt.

New and Full Grown Fish Departments

Methods of Barrie and Orillia Dealers for Developing Trade in Fish—Former Starts by Stocking Thursdays and Fridays—Latter Purchases Certain Quantity for Each Day's Trade—His Facilities for Handling This Article.

To have a fresh water lake right at one's door would lead a person to the natural conclusion that plenty of fish abound in the vicinity.

But this does not always follow, even when fish dealers offer pretty fair prices for supplies. Because of this fact the grocers of Barrie and Orillia, Ont., are getting the fish sales in their respective towns in their own hands. Both places are located on Lake Simcoe, but old fishermen say the fish caught there are few and far between.

Getting All the Fish Trade.

Grocers all along have of course been scooping the trade in tinned, boxed and dried fish, and with the fish peddlers out of the way (because no local supply is available) they are also getting the trade in fresh fish.

During summer there is a steady, though small, demand from the tourists for fresh fish daily, and in the fall and winter and at Christmas there is a growing call from local trade for fresh and frozen fish that is well worth cultivating.

Prepares for Friday Trade.

To meet this local demand S. G. Caldwell, Barrie, stocks up with fish on Thursdays and Fridays. He has not bought largely as yet, nor does he purchase fish the rest of the week, though he believes that if the trade is cultivated it would grow. His weekly orders keep up and every little while he adds a new customer which enables him to take on more stock.

Purchases Stock Daily.

Perhaps J. J. Hatley, of Orillia, does the biggest fresh fish business around the Lake Simcoe region. He orders about 175 pounds of fresh fish daily, with an extra 300 pounds on Fridays. One recent Friday evening he opened his fish box and found but seven pounds remaining, and his manager told him he had sold 650 pounds in the two days (Thursday and Friday). This gives an idea of the business that might be developed if the trade is cultivated and encouraged.

In Hatley's store there is a regular fish department at the back of the grocery section. A large fish case filled with ice occupies the centre of this room, and attached is a table with draining-board on which the salesman places the fish for inspection.

Fish Cleaning Outfit.

In connection with the department is a complete fish-cleaning outfit, with running water keeping the room at all times clean and wholesome. Should it be necessary to carry a large stock there is a refrigerating and cooling plant with a fish compartment capable of handling several weeks' supply.

In winter, of course, there is greater scope for handling dried and frozen fish by the trade, because then ice is not so necessary, but the two grocers named above carry fresh water and sea fish the year round on ice in addition to the dried and frozen fish.

Mr. Caldwell is an example of the beginner adding a fish department, and Mr. Hatley's business shows how the trade can be developed. That a fish department pays can be vouched for by both grocers.

A TALK TO SALES MANAGERS.

I am Blind. Blind to the opportunities of the business world about me. Blind to the power of true advertising. Blind to the fact that the countless eyes of the composite customer are scanning the printed page for something worth reading about my goods. Blind to everything but the dollar I own—and the fear lest I lose it is wrenching even that dollar from my very grasp.

Not blind only, but DEAF.

Deaf to the clang and roar of the business world about me. Deaf to the questions the world is asking about my goods. Deaf to the clear call of duty to my business, myself and my family. Deaf to every sound save the clink of the dollar I own, and I squeeze that dollar so tightly that its ring is turned to lead.

Not deaf only, but DUMB.

Standing here on the platform of a great auditorium—a multi-million-dollar audience of purchasers of my own kind of goods before me, and, though invited to tell that vast company of buyers my business story, I stand mute with only power to hold up my shrinking little business "card" and run to cover.

Gentlemen, you can't win the great composite buyer with any such miserable makeshift as a "card." Cheap as it is, it is money thrown away. No cheap advertising is worth its cost—it only cheapens and discredits you in the eyes of the men you wish to reach.

The composite buyer is great and broad and must be approached greatly and broadly.

Thanksgiving Poultry Was in Poor Shape

Poultry That Came Forward for Festive Season Showed Lack of Proper Feeding—Check on Downward Trend of Live Hogs—English Bacon Market is Lower—Butter and Eggs Maintain Strong Position.

Thanksgiving, as usual, brought out a flood of poultry. This year the quality for this festive season was not good, that is, the birds were in poor shape. Chickens were generally plentiful but thin. Turkeys were quite scarce with arrivals poorly finished, showing lack of proper feeding. This seems to be the most reasonable explanation of the abundance of poor poultry coming out.

The downward trend of live hog prices which has been so marked during the past month or so, has received a check for the time, at least. Values show no further depreciation over last week's prices, and at the moment market appears fairly steady. Movement of hogs to market centres has been quite free, but there has been a general good demand from packers.

The English bacon market, however, continues on an easy scale, last week witnessing a further decline. Quotations are at 52 to 54 shillings as compared with 58 to 63 shillings at the beginning of October. There is at least no firmness in provision prices here, although a moderate demand is generally reported.

Butter still maintains its steady position, with nothing apparently at hand to shape it otherwise. The butter market in England is quiet and lower, and demand from that quarter has been dropping off, although Western Canada is taking any surplus in the east.

Eggs also continue strong. Although production is falling off, some centres report larger receipts than for the same period last year. There were several hundred cases of eggs exported last week to English markets, the largest proportion going to Liverpool.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—One feature of provisions this week is an advance of one-half cent in the price of pure lard. This article is scarce but only temporarily. There is a good demand for it and with a scarcity reported the situation is made firmer. Live hogs are down to from $6.25 to $6 35.

TORONTO.

Provisions.—Trade in pork products is at a good volume. Smoked meats are naturally with the cooler weather in lighter demand. The heavy lines of pork are receiving more attention. There is considerable trade produced by mining and lumbering camps now putting in their fall and winter supplies. Lard is also moving freely.

Live hogs, after a long continued drop, have steadied up for the moment at least. Indeed, some firms are quoting a slightly higher figure this week. Arrivals have been fairly large but more stinted than for the previous few weeks. Pork products are generally unchanged. Long clear is quoted at 12 to 12½c.

Poultry. — A plenitude of supplies with quality below the average was the feature of Thanksgiving flood of poultry to this market. There was an over supply of poorly finished fowl and chickens. Prices for the former went as low as six cents per pound, while chickens went down to 8 to 10 cents.

The Thanksgiving turkey was scarce, and to make matters worse, they were very poorly filled out. Geese and ducks were not very plentiful. This week finds considerable poultry on the market, mostly chickens and turkeys.

Who loses, Mr. Merchant, when your clerk is interrupted and forgets to enter a charge sale?

Or when your clerk offends a customer by over-charging---or charges goods against the wrong customer?

Putting a National Cash Register receipt in every parcel prevents such mistakes, and saves you many a penny.

That's why customers prefer to deal in stores that have a National Cash Register. Also it is the reason a million merchants have adopted this system.

The McCASKEY SYSTEM

The End of Drudgery

Simplifies the Handling of Accounts

¶ You might just as well use a quill pen instead of a steel or gold one as to keep your accounts in a set of books instead of The McCaskey System.

¶ More than 70,000 merchants in all lines of business are using The McCaskey System. It shortens and simplifies Bookkeeping, keeps every account posted and totalled to the minute, keeps every customer informed of what he owes. By giving a statement of the account in full with each purchase you improve your collections, put an end to errors and misunderstandings with customers over their accounts.

¶ The McCaskey system keeps you from forgetting to charge an account. It automatically limits the credit of those upon whom you wish to set a credit limit. It will prove your loss to the penny if your store burns.

¶ We'd like to send you some letters from people you know about The McCaskey System. There is also an entertaining book "Bookkeeping Without Books," that will be sent for the asking.

Good Time to Feature Flour and Cereals

Retailers Who Put Greater Efforts Behind These Lines at the Present Time Will Be Well Pleased With Result—Housewife More Inclined to Make Her Own Bread — Weather Favorable for Sale of Cereals—Advance in Manitoba Flour Generally Recognized—Markets Losing Ground

The present is an excellent season for the retailer to put greater efforts behind his flour and cereal departments. Grocers who attempt to liven up these lines will find results gratifying. The season has come when fires are essential and the housewife is more inclined to make her own bread. The dealer who gives prominence to flour will thus suggest this to the housewife. Then again the cooler weather stimulates the demand for cereals, but it is necessary for the grocer to feature them if he wishes to reap the best results.

There is not the same firmness in either flour or cereals in evidence a week ago. While the advance of 10 cents per barrel in Manitoba flour became general before the end of last week, the quotations on the raw material have been easing off since, so that flour is less firm. Cereals have been also losing ground due to the reductions in the raw material. This easing reflects the bearish sentiment of the trade in the speculative centres both at home and abroad.

The grading of wheat that comes forward from the Canadian West from now on will have a big influence on the market. So far it has been poor. There are hopes, although not strong, that it will improve. At present there is little real good milling wheat obtainable. The big yield in Canada this year is pointed to by some dealers who expect the market to ease off. They say the amount coming forward would be larger if cars for shipment were available.

Argentine is expected to have an important bearing on the world's situation. At present there is weakness in the principal Argentine markets.

Flour.—The advance of 10 cents per barrel in Manitoba flour announced by some mills last week became general towards the end of the week, so that the present prevailing price is $5.50 per barrel for 1st patents, with 10 cents more per barrel being asked by some firms for cotton sacks.

The market has been losing ground, however, since Friday last. Although flour prices have not been affected, wheat quotations have been easing off. Trade just at the present is not overly brisk. Ontario wheat has, however, under small offerings and a good demand been holding firm.

Flour.—Trade in flour is brisk at the present time and from all quarters a strong demand is prevailing. Export bids have been active, and millers have been busy rushing all export and eastern orders off before the close of navigation, which is expected to take place within a month. A change has been made by Winnipeg millers in quoting flour, owing to the cost of cotton sacks. At the present time, flour will be quoted in cotton and jute sacks; the difference being 5 cents in favor of the latter. There has been a slight all-round advance in flour prices for the week Prices quoted below are Manitoba car lot prices in cotton sacks. In jute sacks prices will be 5 cents less.

prices on rolled oats have been active, and have advanced from 20 to 25 cents per bag. To-day's prices range from $2.10 to $2.20 per sack, as asked by millers. Bran has also been strong, and a large quantity has been exported during the last few weeks to Germany. Trade with this country is not always possible on account of prices prevailing, but this year large orders have been received, and while the exact tonnage was not procurable, it is learnt on good authority that a large quantity has been shipped to this country. Price asked at the present time is $21.00 per ton, which is $1 a ton over that prevailing last week. Shorts are quoted at $22 to $23 a ton. Chopped barley per ton in sacks $29 to $30; oats $28 to $29; barley and oats $29 per ton.

THE CLERK WITH INITIATIVE.

He is The One Worth More to Employer Some Don'ts to Turn Over.

There are clerks trying to discover methods of getting out of work, instead of finding work to do. It is only by looking for work, and constantly working for your employer's interests that a clerk can expect advance in salary or responsibility.

Endeavor to sell just as much goods as if you were working for yourself.

Study every customer and cultivate his acquaintance.

Learn the names of as many of your customers as possible. Show your willingness to serve customers when they come in. It's just as easy, you'll feel better and so will they.

Remember its not how much you say that makes sales, but what you say and how you say it.

A FEW DON'TS.

Don't argue with customers.

Don't try to force goods on them, they don't want.

Don't make claims for your goods that you are not positive are true.

Don't hide the "stickers" under the counter. Get them out and sell them.

Don't talk to friends when customers are waiting.

Don't always wait to be told.

Lastly, be a salesman, not a machine. Learn to do things; possess some initiative. Look around and see what there is to do, then do it.

TO TALK ON PROFITS.

Invitations are out for a smoker, under the auspices of the Retail Grocers' Association, of London, Ont. The affair is to be held in Duffield Hall, on Tuesday evening, Nov. 7. Wm. Turnbull, of Edward Adams & Co., will talk to the retailers on profits. It is expected that other wholesale grocers will be present to talk on other matters of interest to the trade. Cyril Hayes, former secretary of the Retail Grocers' Association, who has been studying elocution in England for the past year, will be present and favor the grocers with some recitations. Thos. High Cheese Market Likely to Last Drought in Great Britain This Summer Chief Cause—Production There Falls Off 35 Per Cent.—Heavier Demand for Butter—Not Much Cheese Held in Montreal.

The season of 1911 will go on record as one of the highest priced seasons for cheese the trade has ever known. Owing to the drouth which affected the proing to the drought which affected the proestimated to have fallen off about thirty-five per cent., and as Great Britain produces about twice the quantity of cheese as is exported from Canada, it meant a total shortage of over one million boxes.

Of course, in the light of conditions of this kind, it goes without saying that prices were advanced sufficiently to curtail the consumption within the limits of the quantity available, and the result has been the establishment of new records, both in cheese and butter. The current prices being paid in the country this week run from 13½c to 14⅛c, and Septembers were delivered on a basis of about 14½c to 15c at shipping points, and as it is the September and first half of October make that is generally carried for winter use, it is easy to come to the conclusion that we shall have high prices during this coming winter.

More Butter Wanted.

Another factor in the situation has been the increased demand for butter, both for home consumption and for export. Prices for this article have also established a new record; last week at Cowansville, Que., the leading board of the Eastern Townships Dairymen's Association, butter sold at 27¼c, equal to 27½ laid down in Montreal.

Owing to the increased and improved demand for cheese and butter at the high prices, the exports have been very much larger than usual, the total shipments of cheese from May first to the present date are 1,571,685 and the receipts 1,617,844 packages, so it is easy to judge from this that the quantity held in Montreal warehouses is small compared with previous years. The exports of butter show considerable increase this year over last, the total being 134,013 against 27,753 packages last year. This leaves the stock available for use in the winter very light, and consequently high prices must prevail.

It is likely that this year many dealers have refrained from buying, anticipating that they might be able to secure the later made October cheese at less money, but owing to the conditions aforesaid, these expectations are hardly likely to be realized.

BAR DOGS FROM THE STORE.

A chronic complaint from grocers and a righteous one, too, is that relative to the bringing of dogs into stores where so many and so much food-stuffs are displayed within easy reach of an animal's snout. A grocery traveler now in business for himself, speaking about this to a representative of this paper said, that one of the Berlin grocers had pretty well squelched the annoyance by having prominently displayed in his store a sign worded "Dogs and tobacco smoke not allowed here,"—and his customers applauded, too, even those who, because of want of thought, had brought dogs into the store.

W. T. Grose, the Montreal manager of the Ontario Lantern & Lamp Co., has resigned his position as eastern representative on account of ill health. W. H. Ginder, the president, presented Mr. Grose, on behalf of the company with a handsome piece of silverware suitably engraved, as a slight token of the company's appreciation of his work during the past three years.

GETTING VINEGAR FROM THE BARREL.

Barrel Placed on Side—Vinegar Pump Is Used.

A good deal of time is saved and a lot of heavy lifting done away with in handling vinegar, in a simple manner by a Perth, Ont. store.

A vinegar pump is used but instead of standing the barrel on end and boring a hole in it as is usual, the barrel is left on its side, the bung knocked out and the pump placed in the opening. A small transferable platform which can be made by the grocer himself in five minutes is placed on the top of the barrel, forming a flat surface for measures and jars.

A change from one barrel to another can be made in this way in a couple of minutes, so that there is no loss of sales because a new barrel has not been tapped.

Unusual interest was manifested in Philadelphia recently in the arrival of a British steamship with sugar from Java by reason of the fact that the vessel's cargo increased in value in transit more than $107,000. The vessel sailed from Java on August 1, bound for the McCahan Refinery there. When the six thousand tons of sugar were put on board the value per 112 pounds was 14s. 6d. Quotations for Java sugar were 18s. 6d. on the arrival of the steamer. The advance of four shillings in the price will net the owners $107,000 over the original purchase price. The duty paid on the Kwarra's cargo totalled $180,000 or on a basis of $30 per ton.

Andrew Watson, Montreal, Canadian representative of the Molassine Company, Limited, Great Britain, intimates that his firm has been awarded the Grand Prix at the Festival of Empire at the Crystal Palace, for Molassine Dog and Poultry Foods, and Molassine Meal. This award is the highest obtainable, and the Festival of Empire being one of the Confederation of International Exhibitions, the Grand Prix is much sought after, as manufacturers recognize that it hall marks their goods as of value and repute.—Advt.

Preventing Blunders in Delivery

The Order Slip System in Vogue by Fraser, Viger & Co., Montreal—Orders Classified According to Nature of the Goods—Reproductions of Method Used.

SUPPOSING a clerk receives the following order: Fifty cents' worth of gran. sugar, ½ lb. of coffee, one bottle of vanilla, 1 basket of grapes, 2 pecks of potatoes, 1 bag of charcoal, 1 package of corn starch, 1 small keg of herring, 1 package of ammonia powder.

It will be noticed there are two kinds of articles in the list—those that are kept on the shelves, and those that are too bulky for that position.

The Order Divided.

He puts up the order for the sugar, ammonia, vanilla, corn starch and coffee and places them together on the order counter. But there may not be room for the grapes, charcoal, herring and potatoes. In the majority of groceries the orders would be divided in this manner, but it is done by Fraser, Viger & Co. of Montreal. The order is taken down on the duplicate counter check book found in every store, then there is a slip like that of Figure I. shown herewith.

To Prevent Blunders.

It gives the name of the purchaser and in a little square there is given the number of articles that are put up by the clerk. They are the ordinary groceries. There is then the place for extras. Now the extras have been put together in a group where there is more room for them and the delivery man on looking over the order counter learns that there are a number of extras to go with this order. The clerk who puts the order up generally looks after them going out, when it is necessary, to aid the delivery man. The idea is to diminish the chance of any blunders being made in the delivering of the goods.

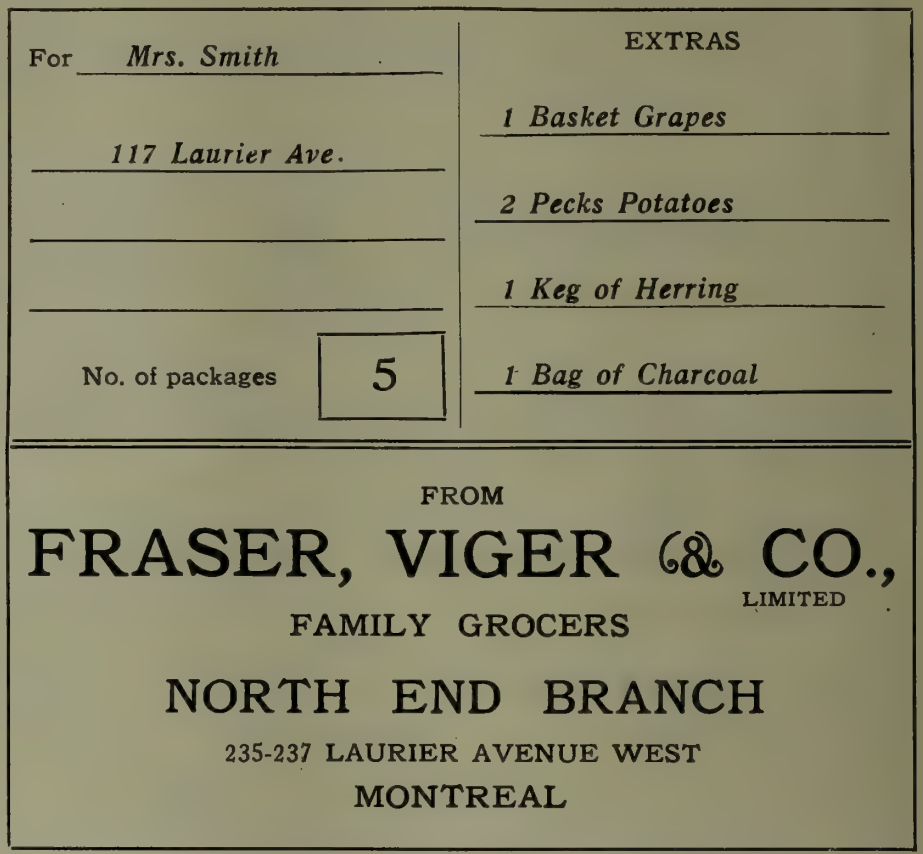

Fig. 1 — Slip showing delivery man that articles other than shelf goods are to go out.

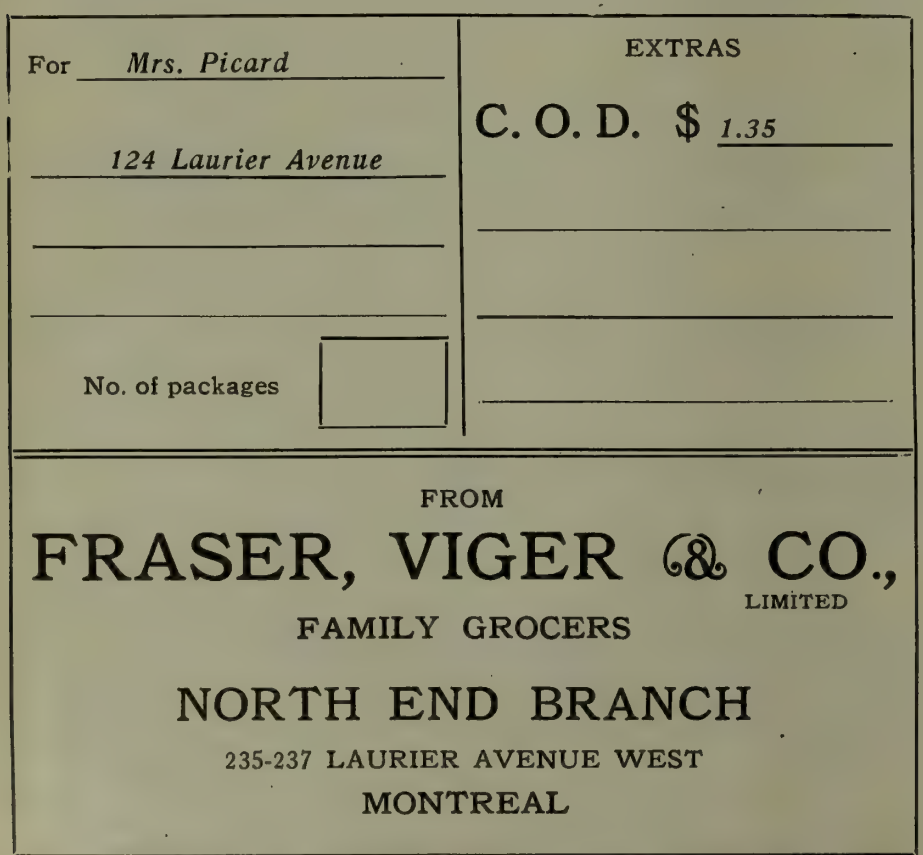

Fig. 2 — When goods go out C.O.D. this slip is sent. The original is on yellow paper always.

Yellow Sheet for C.O.D. Order.

This extra sheet is of white paper, except if it is a C.O.D. order. Then a yellow sheet is sent with the amount to be collected marked in a place for that purpose, as shown in Figure II. This plan simplifies matters for the man on the rig and the sending of goods to the customer is by no means the least important part of the grocery business, and therefore worthy of consideration.

The grocer who sold only the goods his customers called for at the price they expected to pay, would soon sink. Success in the retail business is impossible without salesmanship.

When you treat each customer as if he is the best customer the store has, you are a business builder.

MARKETS INTEREST HIM.

J. Smith, Montreal, is a reader of The Grocer, and says he likes it very well indeed. "You certainly get the right side of the markets. They interest me most and I always read them carefully."

First Shipment of New Crop Lemons

Received This Week From Italy via New York—Valencia Orange Shipments Practically Done for the Season—Florida Oranges Coming Forward—Good Trade in Fruits Around Thanksgiving.

Perhaps there is no other line which the grocer handles that is benefited so much by the Thanksgiving holiday as fruits and vegetables. Those dealers who featured them around the festive occasion found results gratifying. A general increased briskness in trade preceding the holiday is reported from all sections of the Dominion.

This week marks the arrival of new crop lemons upon the Canadian markets. These are only the advance shipments via New York, and it will probably be middle of the month before big supplies are received. Old crop lemons seem on the whole to be pretty well cleaned up.

Late Valencia oranges are now held at fancy prices. Decreased shipments marking the wind-up of the crop in California with the better demand under smaller supplies of other fruits is responsible. New crop Florida oranges are now coming forward and will be more reasonable in price.

Quality of fruit as well as crop is said to be quite good this year. Grapefruit from this same state is coming along freely. However, the crop this year is considerably shorter than last year.

Cranberries found a good demand around thanksgiving and hallowe'en.

MONTREAL.

Fruits. — Thanksgiving Day and Hallowe'en brought considerable extra business and a good trade was reported. There is a fair general enquiry with some lines moving particularly well. Oranges are beginning to move better and grapes are selling well. Apples are, of course, quite a feature.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—The trade in fruits for Thanksgiving was good, and those dealers, both retailers and commission men, who took advantage of the festive season to feature different lines more extensively were well pleased with results.

Belated shipments of late pears and grapes are still coming forward, but the quantity is not large. Imported goods are now holding the centre of the stage. The advance shipments of new crop lemons arrived this week, but arrivals will not be on a large scale for a couple of weeks. The first of the Florida oranges will arrive before the week is out. There is considerable Florida grapefruit of good quality coming forward and meeting with a good demand. Pineapples are now being given more prominence. They are quoted at $3.25 to $3.50.

Vegetables.—Potatoes remain at the same figure as a week ago. Wholesale dealers report they are finding a good demand. The short crop in various parts of the province has necessitated the securing of supplies from New Brunswick and shipments from that province have been large. The car of Manitoba potatoes which came to this market last week was taken up quickly.

Celery, cabbage and cauliflowers are slightly easier in price this week as are also Spanish onions. Green peppers under similar supplies are higher at 50 cents per basket. Parsnips are quoted at 75c per bag.

WINNIPEG.

Fresh Fruit.—This line has been exceedingly strong during the summer, and wholesalers report that a large increase has taken place over last year in the volume of trade transacted. Prices have remained fairly firm during the entire year, and all lines have been eagerly sought after. Present quotations are :—

Fresh Vegetables.—That the western people are able to enjoy luxuries is well noticed in the enormous business conducted in this department of the grocery trade during the summer. As is well known, the earlier part of the season is generally supplied by southern grown vegetables, which in spite of the duty and long freight, bring remunerative prices to the importer and retailer. About three months ago, however, the arrival of home grown goods on the market gradually decreased the amount brought in from the south, and for the last two months only local grown stuff has been offered on the trade. Prices vary considerably from week to week all during the season.

COL. HOWE says: "On Circus Day a boy likes to hear that one of the eight-horse wagons became stalled, and that an elephant pushed it out with his head." This character trait evidences itself in later life. Some people never grow up, and like to hear about the unusual, the freakish and the peculiar. In business life the steady success of the discriminating business man does not attract the attention of the unthinking, but men of higher ideals, ambitions and attainments, always have a preference toward the conservative, honest and sincere successes. My brand of Lemon is pleasing this type of men. The ever-increasing demand for my "Standard of Quality" is evidence that my efforts are "scoring goals." Order my "New Crop" Lemons—The Brand

Potatoes.—The situation in potatoes has been a fairly representative one of conditions that prevail every year. Between one month and six months ago, before the arrival of new potatoes became general, prices made some sharp advances, as local stocks were low. As high as $1.50 per bushel for Manitobas was reached, only to fall back the next week to $1.25 and still lower as the supply increased. Receipts coming in at the present time are heavy, especially from Manitoba points. Reports from wholesalers indicate that there is a scarcity in the East and in the far West, and it is likely that prices will stiffen within the next month. At the present time it would appear as if the fear of the arrival of cold weather was causing every man with potatoes for sale to offer them on the local market.

Mr. Moncur takes over the office and warehouse at 30 St. Dizier St., Montreal, where he will carry a large and varied stock of all lines manufactured, and, retains his old territory where he has become so familiar a landmark, his ground being from Kingston east to Halifax.—Advt.

The retailer to-day does not seem to realize that it is quite possible to work up a strong trade in macaroni and vermicelli. Both are becoming more and more popular with the Canadian housewife. The C. H. Catelli Co., Montreal (the Swallow Brand people), announce in this issue that the quality of their goods is just as high as it was years ago, and further beg to state that they have an interesting proposition in their new brand "Marguerite." Inquires will be carefully attended to.—(Advt.).

Sealshipt Oysters
—Now Sold a New Way

In sealed, ice-cold, individual packages called Sealshiptens.

Just as the Sealshiptor and the Sealshipticase were the inevitable successors of the open tub, in shipping and displaying oysters, just so this new Sealshipten must supersede paper pails and all other methods of selling.

It saves slop.

It saves time.

It necessitates less investment on the dealer's part.

No shrinkage—at least 7% more net profit assured.

It puts an end to substitution and all unfair competition.

It affords you a known profit, no guesswork as with bulk oysters.

It reaches the user under air-right seal—no possible contamination.

It makes an attractive package of what formerly was a leaky, bunglesome paper pail. It requires no careful handling—it cannot spill.

Unscrupulous dealers cannot always be stopped from selling bulk oysters as Sealshipt, but they can and will be stopped from counterfeiting this trade-marked package.

Your Sealshipticase has the same advantage as before—the same advertising advantage—the same advantage as a refrigerator for keeping the Sealshiptens properly.

It enables you to offer Northerns and Blue Points in either Standards or Selects, in two different sizes of package, without extra investment on your part.

Sealshipt Oysters come right in and go right out. They do not linger. You have practically no capital invested in them.

The Sealshipticase enables you to meet a ten-gallon-an-hour demand—or to keep your oysters in perfect condition against a call of only three pints a day.

The new Sealshipten makes the oyster business the cleanest, most profitable business a store can have.

We have made it easy for you to get and keep oysters at their best.

We have, by our advertising, created a demand which will send a stream of customers to your store.

Will you be content to deal in "just oysters" when Sealshipt Oysters offer you so certain a profit?

This is the Dealer's Blue and White Porcelain Sales Refrigerator—Equally valuable for keeping stock of the new Sealshiptens as for keeping stock of Sealshipt Bulk Oysters.

How to sell more Oysters

Building up a big, profitable business in oysters depends mainly on three factors :—1. Right Buying; 2. Pushful Selling; 3. Quality of the Oysters.

And the existence of these essential factors is also the strongest reason why you should sell

"Coast-Sealed" Oysters

Consider them one by one:

1. RIGHT BUYING.—"Coast-Sealed Oysters cost less than most lines because your order is measured up in solid oysters. A gallon of "Coast-Sealed" Oysters is composed of nothing but absolute meats.
2. PUSHFUL SELLING.—The "Coast-Sealed" Oyster Display Cabinet is a great aid to pushful selling because it displays your oyster stock most attractively, and enables you to keep that stock absolutely fresh until the last pint is sold. And—this is very important—"Coast-Sealed" Cabinets are sold outright. No strings, no conditions; the "Coast-Sealed" Cabinet is your own property after you have bought it. Quality, not coercion, is what sells "Coast-Sealed" Oysters.
3. QUALITY.—Without consistent good quality your oyster business cannot be truly successful. By handling "Coast-Sealed" Oysters you are absolutely certain of consistent good quality. "Coast-Sealed" Oysters are all northern grown on our own grounds in Rhode Island, Connecticut, and New York, and are all over four years old before being opened. They are fat, meaty, full-flavored oysters. They are packed—right at the sea-coast, mind you—in "Coast-Sealed" containers which are then sealed. The container reaches you with the seal unbroken and with nothing inside of it but pure, absolutely fresh oysters with the delicious salt sea flavor unimpaired.

Selling "Coast-Sealed" Oysters is the surest way to do a bumper Oyster trade.

As the season is advancing rapidly we would solicit an early enquiry.

Fish - Oysters

Good Fish Trade Already in Evidence

Business Shows Marked Rapidity Although Continued Cool Weather Would Work for Better Trade—Oysters Have Done Well so Far—Some Lines Not In Any Too Abundant Supply—Tuesday Was a Fish Day—Advent Only a Few Weeks Off.

The first week in November finds trade in fish at an appreciable volume. Since the set in of fall this line has seen a gradual increase, so that present business compares favorably with that of past seasons. Continued cool weather would now be welcomed by the fish men as it would induce a larger number of retailers to put their fish departments in operation. Although oysters have met with fair reception, cooler weather would be much more beneficial.

Tuesday of this week being a fish day, found an increased demand for fish. It should be remembered that Advent, a season when demand becomes much heavier, is only a few weeks away and the dealer should be planning for it.

Receipts of fresh and cured fish at the points of supply on the eastern coast have been light and the scarcity has put some slight strength into the market. Fishermen are said to be keeping back their catch. Herring catches have been small, only limited quantities of mackerel have been taken, while haddock is reported scarce, particularly in better grades.

QUEBEC.

Halifax.—Local fish markets have been frozen, prepared and cured fish. There is a big demand for smoked haddies, bloaters and kippers from practically all over the country. Fresh fish is also moving well and the present aspect of trade is encouraging. Western fish will soon be arriving in frozen form. Tuesday of this week was a fish day and created an extra demand. Fresh halibut was rather scarce this week, but there is some frozen fish offered. Pike, pickerel and whitefish are in fair supply. Haddock and cod are more plentiful but prices remain rather firm.

The weather in the fishing ground during the past five weeks has been decidedly unfavorable and in addition dogfish have been creating trouble. In spite of this, however, supplies are coming in rather freely and trade is good.

Now is the season when fish of all kinds sell well. Haddies are particularly prominent and fresh fish receive more attention with the first sign of cold weather. Haddies and fillets are arriving freely and are of fine quality. Kippers, however, are rather scarce. Oysters are going out steadily with demand increasing. It should be remembered that Advent is only a few weeks distant. This, like Lent, is a season when demand becomes much heavier than usual.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—Arrivals in dried salt fish have been quite slack of late. Several vessels have come in from the Bay of Fundy fishing centres, and out of a fleet of eight, the total cargoes have not exceeded 600 quintals. These vessels under ordinary circumstances would average 700 quintals each, so that the difference is at once apparent. As a consequence, figures are rather high and the market is not promising. This scarcity in this commodity is partly accounted for by the fact that the catch has thus far averaged only about half the usual run. It is also said that schooners from the United States have visited certain fishing ports along the Nova Scotian coast, and taken away fairly large shiploads.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—Trade in fish is on an appreciable scale and the volume compares favorably with the same season of other years. The weather has not been exactly all that could be desired, and a continued lower temperature would be welcomed. Oysters are meeting with a fair demand for the season.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—Local fish marlets have been rather quiet during the past week. The receipts of fresh and cured fish have been light. Scarcity of arrivals has had tendency to strengthen market slightly. Price of herring has been advanced fifty cents per barrel. The fishermen are keeping back their catch and this is the reason assigned for jump in price. Some October herring catches have been reported, but they are so small as to have no influence on the market. At some points there was abundant run of small herring, but these have slackened off of late. Herring have been in good supply at Bonne Bay and Bay of Islands, Newfoundland, and at the latter place $1.50 per barrel was paid, which is 25 cents above the government price.

Salt codfish continues in good demand. There are several large cargoes now on way to this port, one steamer from Newfoundland having on board 4,500 quintals. During the week a Magdalen Island cargo was placed at $6 per quintal. Haddock continue scarce, particularly the better grades, and show an ad-

BOUTILIER'S Smoked Fillets

Here, Mr. Grocer, is a line you can do a good trade in ALL THE TIME, and we would advise you to consider it. You can easily start a good fish department and work it successfully. Make a selection from our lines. Instruct the driver or delivery clerk to tell your customers that you are open to handle their fish orders; or get out a neat circular (a few dollars will cover the expense) and send it round. The results will be good, because the housewife likes to give her order for everything to one store and dislikes having to go here for her groceries and there for her fish.

Winnipeg.—Trade in fish has been extremely good and a full catch, that is, the full amount that the government permits, was got on the interior lakes. The season for all kinds of fresh fish is almost over and frozen stock is being used. At the present time fresh salmon and halibut are still being offered, but the supply is getting limited. Fish a Profitable Department

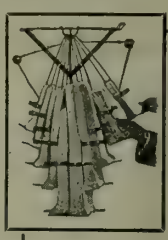
So Maintain Sherbrooke Que., Dealers—Extra Efforts Made in the Fall But Have an All-the-Year-Round Trade — Lines That Are Featured—Easy Matter to Begin This Line.

A fish department does not present serious difficulties if it is undertaken in the proper manner. This is the testimony of various members of the trade, and only recently a representative of The Grocer learned from a firm in Eastern Canada the simple methods by which they went ahead with their fish department.

May & Houlahan, grocers, in Sherbrooke, Que., have a good all-the-year-round fish business, and with the first signs of the colder weather in the fall, they open out on a little larger scale, adding haddies, kippers, cod, and other lines of smoked and prepared fish, in addition to an extensive trade in oysters.

A Friday Trade.

Friday is, of course, responsible for the bulk of the fresh fish trade, but during Advent and Lent, there is an extended heavy demand. The principal point to be remembered in handling fresh fish, is that it arrives as soon as possible from the time it comes from the water. This applies particularly in the warm weather. Fresh fish is generally shipped by express, and on its arrival should be kept in a cool place, and, of course, in a clean container. Mr. May explained to The Grocer that his supplies for Friday usually arrive on Thursday afternoon. A special refrigerator is given over to fish, and they have a small room apart from the grocery store, where the stock is cleaned and made ready for delivery the next day.



Other Demand.

There is often during the week some demand here and there, but the Friday business is of all importance, except during the periods mentioned above. Then, of course, some people cannot afford to buy fresh fish continually, or they may desire a change. They turn to canned salmon, or to the smoked and prepared fish, which is receiving more and more attention from consumers. Even people who are not regular fish eaters welcome a change of food, and this fact should be quite an inducement to grocers to push prepared and smoked fish. Haddies have always been a favorite, fillets are popular, bloaters too, and prepared cod have an assured demand. These lines of fish will bear recommendation to all classes of customers. They constitute a tasty food, especially when a change is desired, and during the winter when there is a natural demand for them, a greater effort should be made to sell them. They do not require the same care in handling, as every grocer knows, but they should not be kept too long.

Profitable and Easy.

Mr. May stated that this was a good line for grocers. This firm has its regular customers, who require supplies of fish every Friday, and frequently more often. In beginning the department, it was only necessary to announce to the regular customers that fish would be carried in future, and as soon as they become accustomed to it, nothing further was necessary. Some advertising in local paper was of assistance. The principal point, however, is that there is a demand for fish, it can be easily made very profitable, the fall and winter season is a particularly good time to carry it, and the handling of fish does not entail any difficulties.

Oysters are a part of this trade, and to the grocer who has a fish department they are of vastly more importance, for when a customer wants to change from fish, she mentions the fact to her grocer, who of course, has oysters always in store. They form a part of the grocer's fall and winter business, and the more progressive members of the trade are not satisfied with one line or two, but do not stop until they have a dependable department.

Tobaccos and Cigars a Profitable Side Line

Many Dealers Finding it Profitable to Use Their Selling Power on This Department—Show Case a Valuable Assistant in Making Sales—The Need of Moistu

By O. S. Johnston.

A tobacco department presents no difficulties to the grocer according to experiences as related by several members of the trade in Montreal.

One of the first considerations is locality. There is but little chance of much success if your next door neighbor is a tobacconist. But even this has not proved a handicap to some of the more adventurous spirits who felt that with so many lines they could afford to take a little less profit than the men who were selling tobacco only. These have been, however, the exceptions.

Handled in Various Ways.

In the course of many visits to grocery stores the writer has seen tobacco "handled" in various ways.

One grocer carried only plug tobacco. He would buy about twenty-five pounds of chewing tobacco and the same quantity of smoking. The two tins would be placed together on a shelf and a plug would be loosened with a skewer. This was one grocer's "method" and he admitted that there were not many lines returning him as god a profit as this.

Use of Show Case.

Those grocers who have more pretentious stores and who take a greater pride in their business usually purchase a show case and devote it to the display of the tobacco they carry. They include cigars, cigarettes, package tobacco and some usually keep the plug variety, although it doesn't find its way to the show case. By this means the display becomes prominent, persons entering the store are able to see it for it is not hidden under a counter or on a shelf, it can be kept neatly and in a show case it can be fresh and moist.

Albert Bouthier, manager of the Park Provision Co., St. Viateur St., Montreal, stated to the writer that he found tobacco a satisfactory line to handle. There is no tobacconist near and therefore no real opposition. He has given over to his tobacco goods a large show case in which are displayed a number of brands of cigars ranging from the time-honored five-cent straight to the four for a quarter and "ten-center."

Package tobacco is represented by some of the best known lines and of course cigarettes are not overlooked. By always keeping a glass or two of water in the show case there is no danger of the tobacco becoming dry.

Good Lines to Sell.

Other grocers could be mentioned who have given tobacco a fair chance and found it satisfactory in every sense of the word. But this one instance will serve for the bulk of the trade, for the method here mentioned is that followed by the majority of the grocers who have taken up tobacco.

Considerable demand is for package goods and, as before stated, no trouble is presented in dealing with these lines.

Hints on Increasing Mince Meat Sales

Care That Should be Taken With Bulk Article—What to Offer The Particular Customer—Reputable Brands Should be Known and Handled—Season Now On.

Mincemeat is usually sold in glasses, tins or in bulk. In the latter form the grocer should exercise special care in keeping his stock in the very best condition. That is what he paid for and received, but it is now his duty to watch it diligently. He must see that the container always has a neat and clean appearance; he should keep it cool and thus provide against its losing flavor or becoming fermented. Even the suggestion of carelessness in the handling of an article like mincemeat will turn people away rather than attract.

Acts of Carelessness.

The representative of a leading manufacture of this article in Montreal, expressed the opinion that if he were retailing mincemeat in bulk he would keep it in a refrigerator or some place almost as cool. The greatest carelessness is shown by the grocer who opens a pail of mincemeat, puts it on a counter and heeds not the dust that is settling in it just as on the tops of show cases. The ladle used is often given scant attention. Some of the goods become dry and caked on it. It is an easy matter to handle even this bulk mincemeat, and if the same care is shown as in the handling of oysters, the grocer will find his stock moving out rapidly, especially during this season of the year.

Dealing With High-Class Trade.

To the more particular trade it is best to offer mincemeat in pails or glass. They are thus receiving the best article on the market and naturally will be willing to pay a little extra. In this form window displays can be arranged easily and the goods are more attractively placed before the public.

The oft repeated caution of handling goods of unquestionable quality applies particularly to mince meat. In its prepared form, it won and held a big trade when women who tried were convinced that it was as good if not (in many cases) better than the home-made article. The grocer has, therefore, the reputation of the manufacturer partly in his keeping. For instance, it has been found at times that some unscrupulous retailers made their own mincemeat and put it in a manufacture's pail. The quality was inferior, and the result may be surmised.

Mincemeat cuts quite a figure in the fall trade and with a fair share of attention its sales can be greatly increased. But in the language of the street—it is up to the grocer.

THE STORE FRONT.

"A good store front including the windows, door and general appearance is a valuable asset to the grocer or any other merchant," maintains a Prince Edward Island dealer. "From it a customer judges the store before he ever sets foot in it. If it impresses one favorably he will likely enter.

"For this reason every merchant should give special attention to his windows that they may be attractive and give the customer a good opinion of the store. The passage to the store should be clear of all obstructions in my estimation, so that a customer may pass in and out without difficulty.

Then in regard to the store front, a little paint will often brighten it wonderfully, and improve the general appearance."

HERE'S HOW THEY WORK:—

SALESMEN WANTED. Owing to the transferring of some of our best salesmen to foreign sections, and others to the sales work on our new Filtration System and Meter proposition. The first of the year we shall want a number of high grade salesmen to work on the General Store Trade and Public and Private Garages. This work requires good salesmanship and hard work, but is very pleasant and profitable for such men as can meet these requirements. Our goods are well known everywhere, and of the hundreds of thousands of users, there are few that would think of being without our outfit for double what they cost them. That our salesmen like their work and it is profitable for them is proven by the fact that they remain with us, many of our first successful salesmen still being with us after twenty-five years of service. We find in working the Store trade that frequently a good, live grocery clerk, who knows how to sell goods and is not afraid of work, is a big success with our line. We also find that grocery salesmen, hardware salesmen and salesmen in other lines, calling on the General Store trade, are very successful with us. We will have territories vacant in many sections of the country, and have splendid opportunities for a number of the right sort of men. Correspondence should be directed to D. A. Corey, General Sales Manager, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Exceedingly Popular Throughout Canada

As a Winter food, Baked Beans have a very great food value, which is well understood by Canadian housewives.

Beans baked, as are the Simcoe Brand Beans, have largely taken the place of the home baked, because they are thoroughly cooked without destroying their form, and the flavoring is much more even and rich.

"Simcoe" Brand Baked Beans

are made from selected beans, cooked by the latest scientific methods; all the sauces used are carefully prepared from ripe fruit and pure spices.

The result is a perfect can of delicious beans that you can sell to your best trade and secure repeat orders.

One-writing Self-Indexing Fire-Proof

Every one of these merchants had large stores in which buildings with contents were completely destroyed, but they all saved their accounts through the Keith Fire-proof System.

This positive evidence of the fire-proof qualities of the Keith Systems actually spreads all over the United States, and yet, strange as it may seem, certain manufacturers of drop-leaf systems who would first sell their system and would then afterwards sell you an expensive safe in which to store the accounts—call us fire-proof fakers.

They have an axe to grind.

We have given you facts backed by sworn affidavits and we, therefore feel safe in leaving this matter to your intelligence.

The fire-proof feature is only one of the many points of protection offered by the Keith System.

Shall Dealers Sell to Their Employes?

If Yes, on What Basis?—Testimony of Some Dealers Who do not Allow Employes to Purchase Goods, Even for Cash—Claim That it Involves Too Much Bookkeeping—An Interesting Subject Cleverly Handled.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

All the retailers with whom I have ever come in contact want the trade of their employes and even feel resentful towards any workers who do not trade with them.

Now comes the National Provisioner with the report of an investigation it has been making among 400 butchers, big and small, the result of which would seem to conclusively show that retail butchers, at least in the larger cities, not only do not want the trade of their own help, but positively will not sell their employes, even for cash. The Provisioner says, truly, that this is a surprising condition; that only two retailers out of the 400 were in favor of selling to their help; but the reasons given are certainly such as will give us something to think about in connection with our own business. Here are some:

Want Best at Lowest Price.

This one owns a number of markets: "No employe is to have meat in any of my stores, whether charged or for cash. This is not because I distrust my help, but why should I carry extra, unnecessary accounts and give my bookkeepers and cashiers extra work? Besides, a man naturally takes the best cuts of meat for himself and expects to be charged at the price of poorer cuts, and also looks for a reduction from that price. For these reasons I deem it inadvisable to sell to my employes."

The manager of a large supply company says: "It has been for many years a rule in our business not to sell any of the commodities in which we traffic to any of our employes."

Another large one says: "When I hire my help it is understood at the beginning that their meats are to be bought elsewhere, as to carry their accounts means unnecessary work and trouble in making out bills and deducting from the men's wages on Saturday nights. I have had several dishonest men so have been obliged to make it a rule that no package be taken out without my inspection. As every journeyman is not honest, the innocent must suffer with the guilty since I learned my first lesson."

Innocent Have to Suffer.

Others say: "We used to allow it but found that ill-feeling was engendered among the men due to the suspicion that some were getting choicer cuts than others." "I feel that a good salesman whose intentions are honest, should be only too willing and satisfied to receive a salary equal to his earning capacity. We often feel that we are being taken advantage of and, with a dishonest employe, we are certainly better off without his patronage." "If others had my experience they would have found that the men trim most of the fat and bone off before giving in their charges, but they make sure to take about a pound of suet and more bones than they can possibly use."

Is there not a good deal for us to think of in these quotations? May they not serve to change some of our views regarding the trade of those who work for us? Some of us may have rules similar to what these butchers have formulated. If so, I should like very much to hear from such grocers; for herein can the experience of each be very valuable to all.

His Only Shortcoming.

I must say that I, personally, have always been very free from any feeling one way or the other on this point so far as my own help is concerned. Just as I pay a farmer for his produce in cash, and allow him the privilege of buying from me or not, as he chooses or has need to do, so I have always regarded my contract with my employes as involving a stipulated service for an agreed compensation. I have held that if the employe delivers the service agreed upon, the deal is satisfactorily ended by my paying him in money. I must confess, however, that I have always been inclined to feel more kindly towards those who buy goods at Johnson's; though I know I have not let this feeling blind me to the merit of any who have not traded with me. One of the oldest and most valuable men I ever had never traded with me to amount to anything. He was so fine in every way, so thoroughly trustworthy, conscientious and single-hearted in his honesty of purpose, that I used to think this failure to trade at Johnson's was his only shortcoming.

Department stores, having from hundreds to thousands of employes make a distinct play for the trade of those who work for them. This is often the sole subject for discussion at some managers' meetings and plans are formulated and tried out from different angles to keep the trade of the workers in the store. Discounts are allowed and special arrangements are made whereby the needful checking of employes' packages is rendered as expeditious and unobtrusive as possible. Yet it is a difficult problem to handle for many reasons. Employes of large stores seem vaguely to hanker for the novelty of buying at other stores. They particularly like the "independence" of going where they can buy and carry their parcels right out with them, without inspection and without having to come and go by any special door. Moreover, many stores besides the one wherein they work will give them the same discount—usually 10 per cent., and they have only to say they are employes of Soso & Co.; they do not have to prove it, as they are sometimes compelled to do in the place where they work.

The article quoted is the first intimation I have ever had that the trade of his employes was not earnestly desired by every employer; but the rule not to sell employes certainly does away with some abuses which, in your case and mine, may be more or less serious.

Employes in some grocery stores are sold "at cost"—whatever that is. In some others they are given a flat discount of 10 per cent. except on sugar, flour and a few other things. This has never been countenanced in any degree at Johnson's. We have treated a clerk exactly like any other customer—so far as we knew; which gets down to one of the troubles which might justify our declining to sell our help.

The Honest Are Reasonable.

This trouble is the difficulty of preventing a clerk from waiting on himself. In a big store this would not be hard to regulate; but in a business doing under $70,000, where everybody knows everybody else and each meets all the others from the boss down, in daily intercourse, it is hard to draw the line. Yet there is no room for question that no employe anywhere should wait on himself. His order should be taken by another and his goods put up just the same as if he were an outsider. This is the only way that any reasonable check can be put on the employe; and every honest one will always want to be checked in any way that is usual, reasonable and not humiliating.

It is a fact that employe's accounts are very troublesome. This applies not only to the merchandise but to their wages. The men, coming and going all the time do not make a system of ordering, but buy little dabs daily, sometimes twice a day. They are always at the store, so their folks think they can "just as well" bring this or that item "on the way home." Thus a weekly account of $4 will often involve more detail work than a normal account running to three times the amount.

Clerks do not generally incline to be bargain hunters, but some of them are just that. In such case the store gets very much the worst of it. It it also difficult to draw the line between merely being thrifty and forgetting the doctrine of meum et tuum ; in other words, it is difficult for the employe to be impartially fair in the handling of transactions in which he is an interested party.

The intolerable nuisance of having employes draw against their weekly pay-envelopes has mostly been eradicated from our store. We have it clearly understood at time of employing that we pay every Saturday night in full, and that we cannot advance any money against pay-day. Occasionally an emergency will arise, a man's wife may be suddenly taken ill and he may have to send out for medicine for which he has not the money ready in his pocket, which may require us to break this rule; and of course, such emergency is met. It is an abuse of the good nature of the employer and an imposition on the time and nerves of everybody concerned, however, which it should never be a practice to allow.

It is a long time since we have had such a live, interesting subject, or one which seems to hold such promise of being valuable to us. I hope we may have full discussion of it.

Wide Awake Methods of Retailing

Got Condensed Milk Tin to Suit Customers' Pocketbooks—Using the Phone on Friday for Fish Orders—Dealer Keeps Copies of all Orders Given to Travelers—Prefers the Clerk Who Reads.

The Grocer will pay any dealer or clerk for practical items for this page.

Tin to Suit Customers' Wants.

Hamilton, Ont., Nov. 9.—One grocer in this city had never been able to work up a trade in condensed milk until a short time ago. He had not been handling the size of tin which his customers would buy. He had previously been handling a tin which retailed at 12½ cents.

Some one suggested that for his trade a five cent tin would be a better seller, so he ordered a case. Not only did he clear out that case in short order, but now has a substantial trade in that line. He says that the fresh milk now costs seven or eight cents per quart. Customers find that a tin of milk will do them a day, and they figure that they thus save 2 or 3 cents per day on their milk supply. He finds that customers who would not be able to use all of a larger tin, will buy the smaller one.

Phoning for Fish Orders.

St. John, N.B., Nov. 9.—"The telephone is my order boy on Friday more than any other day in the week," said a North End grocer this week. "Quite early in the morning I have one of my clerks devote a little time to 'phoning to my grocery as well as my fish customers and letting them know "Well, Mrs. So-and-so, we have some very nice fresh cod this morning," or "What is it in the fish line to-day, Mrs. Somebody-else?" Now some of them would probably not think of sending in a fish order if it were not for a polite reminder that fish would be a delightful change.

"I opened up a fish department in connection with my grocery store only a few months ago, and I have made quite a success with it, although I had very little previous experience in this line. While I sell quite a quantity during the week, my best sales are on Friday, of course, though Wednesday runs it pretty close. Now one can carry the work of suggestion into the fish trade, coupling it with groceries, just as easily as in any other line. For instance with a good grocery customer, I can say to her that we have some nice fresh oysters or clams, and hadn't she better have some? I would say to any grocer that with encouraging circumstances governing his move, he will make no mistake in opening up a fish department, but let him not forget to solicit his orders especially on Friday."

Keep Copies of all Orders.

Saskatoon, Sask., Nov.—"As a result of having no method of keeping account of orders given I found myself frequently overloaded with some line of goods," stated a local dealer. "Then I decided to make every traveler leave me a copy of my order so that there would be no danger of re-ordering any one line.

CARTOON TALKS ON SERVICE

Asking a Customer if You Will Wrap Up a Parcel for Her is not Good Policy. Do it Without the Question Unless Otherwise Requested.

However, frequently a traveler was in a hurry and promised to send a copy from the hotel but this he often forgot to do, so I decided my system was not exactly sound.

"Now, I have every traveler give me a copy before he leaves the store while any goods which I order by mail, I always keep a duplicate of them. Thus I prevent doubling up on any line, which means the prevention of dead stock or carrying a larger stock than necessary."

A St. Thomas Ad.

St. Thomas, Ont., Nov. 9.—"Look to your groceries," is the heading on an advertisement of D. H. McIntyre, grocer, Talbot and Alma Streets, in a local paper. Then follows :—"There is nothing for your home that should be selected with so much care as your groceries. For this reason we pay strict attention to the quality, of goods selected, and you may always depend on what you order from us.

"Furthermore promptness and punctuality with which we handle orders is daily adding to our business. Where and when may we call for your order ?"

Get the Clerk to Read.

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 9.—"A clerk who reads a good trade paper," remarked a Vancouver merchant to the writer, "is generally much more valuable to his employer than the one who does not. From it he will get in touch with the methods employed by other grocers, which will be useful to him ; he learns how other clerks make sales, and also receives information about goods that is of great value in interesting customers and making sales."

"If I had a clerk who would not read the trade paper," he declared, "I would shift him out.

"The merchant should do all in his power to get him really interested. A good way is to pick out some article he considers will interest that particular clerk, and say, 'Did you read that article on —— John ? What do you think of it ? '

"In this way the clerk may be induced to read it. Discussions on problems dealt with in the trade papers is also an excellent way."

Ad. on Every Bag.

Toronto, Nov. 9.—A Yonge St. grocer has his name and address with a small advertisement printed on every bag he sends out of his store, and claims that it does considerable advertising for him. These are printed on all sizes of bags, and no matter what size purchase a customer makes, they carry away an advertisement of the store.

Speaking in regard to this, he said, "I believe that it pays me all right to advertise in this manner. A housewife purchases goods from me, and every time she goes to the pantry to use that article, she sees my name and ad. It soon becomes well known to her, the same as some widely advertised brand of goods. When she looks over her goods before going out to purchase, she sees my name on several bags, and I am more likely to get the preference than if I did not have that ad. there."

Peculiar Tricks Against Retail Dealers

Many Times When the Public Try to Impose on Them—Sleight of Hand Work With Tomatoes—Woman Placed Stone in the Butter—Had the Trick Turned Back on Her—Borrowing Dishes for the Threshing.

A merchant has a good many hard propositions to contend with in his business.

Customers are not always as honest as they should be or as the daily press suppose them to be, and the dealer is frequently the victim of many peculiar schemes which sooner or later are discovered.

A Canned Tomato Purchase.

One merchant relates of how a boarding house mistress bought a case of tomatoes. A few days afterwards she appeared at the store and complained that the tomatoes were the "worst" she had ever bought and that they were nothing but water with a little tomato juice mixed in. She demanded a rebate on her purchase.

The merchant in question was one who took particular care in the selection of his goods and expressed his regrets that the tomatoes had been found of inferior quality. He said he would send up for what was left and rebate her on the used cans.

"I have always found that an excellent brand and can offer no explanation We don't want any customer to use poor goods, so we will take them back," he declared.

She Changed the Brands.

So the tomatoes were sent for. The grocer on opening a can found them equally as bad as she had stated but he also found that they were a brand of which he had never had a case in his life. Afterwards he found she had purchased them at another store at a very low price and was attempting to exchange them for the better quality.

Dangerous Butter This.

Another attempt to cheat the grocer by a customer is reported from another town. It was a farmer's wife who apparently was not satisfied with receiving 25 cents per pound for her butter. She planned to increase the value of this product.

In making up a roll, she selected a round stone for a centre piece and built the butter around it. She knew the butter when taken to the grocer's was placed in the refrigerator with other rolls and that if he did cut it before selling she would not know who had brought it.

Things did not work according to plans, however. While the grocer was weighing it, a customer admired the color and appearance, but said that she would not need the whole roll. The grocer volunteered to cut it and of course the "cat was out."

The dealer, however, was not to be beaten. He extracted the stone from the butter, and placed it in the middle of the package of tea, worth the same as the butter per pound, and which the butter woman had ordered. He, therefore came out even in the end. He states he never heard anything more of the stone nor did he ever have loaded butter presented to him again by that customer.

Got Dishes for Threshing.

Another story is of a farmer's wife whose supply of dishes although large enough for ordinary occasions, was too small for threshing time and accordingly contrived to get the merchant to supply her for the time with the required dishes.

The day before threshing she entered the village store, purchased a big supply of dishes and had them charged. Three days afterwards when the threshing was over, her son appeared at the shop with the dishes and a note saying her husband had purchased dishes the same day and she therefore wouldn't need any. A request was made to mark them off the books. The merchant afterwards found her husband had purchased none and she had made use of his merely to tide her over threshing time.

Next year on the same occasion, encouraged by the former success, she again came to the store to purchase dishes.

What would you do in such a case?

Paul Ciceri, of the Chas. Ciceri Co., Toronto, has returned from a trip to Western Canada.

A $75,000 Turnover in Eleven Years

Oshawa Grocer's Experiences—Some of His Methods for Developing His Trade—Salesmanship and Display Emphasized—Buys Goods of Guaranteed Quality.

Eleven years ago J. S. Kyle, Oshawa, Ont., commenced business with a small stock and a boy delivering with a basket; to-day he has an annual turnover of $75,000 with 15 employes and five horses working every day.

"The People's Popular Grocer" is the advertising slogan which Mr. Kyle has adopted and he finds it pays to be popular too. The slogan is used on all his delivery wagons as well as in his advertising. He has won popularity through exceptional service—good values, courtesy, attention, promptness and equipment. The store is large and bright. About $8,000 stock is carried. At Cedar Dale, a suburb of Oshawa, a neat branch store was also opened about two years ago. Not only are the stores attractive but the stables are well equipped in every way.

Power of Display.

Mr. Kyle is a firm believer in the effect of display. Everything possible is displayed to advantage as he does not see any value in keeping goods in the cellar where they cannot be seen. The stock is always complete; he buys canned goods and sugar in car-load lots and places orders for dried fruits and fall stock in the spring.

Developing Salesmanship.

A specialty is made of purchasing goods that can be guaranteed and instructing his clerks to push certain lines in season. In this way the surplus business resulting from good salesmanship is developed. The security envelope system is used in keeping accounts. The store motto is "Keeping continually at it brings results."

An illustration of the store interior is presented herewith.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER.

"The value of knowledge of the goods carried has been especially impressed upon me during the past two months," remarked a London grocer recently. "I have always believed that unless a salesman was well acquainted with his goods, he could not hope to sell as much goods as if he was conversant with the talking points, but during the past two months, this has been especially demonstrated to me. We had for a considerable length of time carried a certain meat sauce, which we had pushed as a relish for meats. The traveler for that particular line happened to tell me one day that it could be used with salads and cheese or in enriching soups, gravies and hashes. This had been stated on the package, but we had not given the package the study we should have. I acquainted all my clerks with the fact and as a result of acquainting customers with the same fact during the past two months, our sales in this line have shown a substantial increase."

OVERESTIMATING REQUIREMENTS

That careful buying is one of the essentials in the grocery store is the opinion of a large Winnipeg dealer.

"Unless this end of the business is given most careful attention," he says, "the merchant will at times find himself with stale goods, unsalable lines and a stock greatly in excess of the amount which is really required for the size of business he is doing."

This grocer gave a definite example showing the importance of careful buying. "When I first started in business," he said, "my fruit and vegetable department was a source of loss instead of profit. This was totally due to poor buying or in other words to my poor judgment."

PROVIDING THE XMAS TURKEY.

Providing Christmas turkey for customers has been unprofitable to more than one grocer. It is the exception, rather than the rule, of course, particularly in these days when the farmer's fowl is almost worth its weight in gold around Santa Claus time. It is not likely that buying and selling can ever be depended upon as a "sure thing," but grocers with a reputable trade should be able to know beforehand just about what amount of Christmas fowl they will require.

Many people find themselves without their favorite fowl on Christmas because of delay in trying to secure it. Some grocers make arrangements with customers to supply them with turkeys. The price arrangement is fixed so as to be mutually satisfactory. This simplifies matters considerably, and is appreciated by the customers. Of course, the grocer must be sure of the quality of the stock or this plan might prove exceedingly unsatisfactory.

To those who can operate such a system, however, it is considered an assistance in avoiding the trouble of carrying goods until after the holiday, at times being almost unable to give them away. If the grocer is thinking of any such plan now is the time to act while there is plenty of time.

LOOK TO FISH DEPARTMENT.

It is only a matter of a few weeks until the Advent season commences. This period is not concluded until Christmas eve, and as abstinence from meat on several days during the week is the custom to a part of the public, there is an extra demand for fish.

This is an incentive to grocers to extend their business in this department. There is also the fact that during the winter there is a better opportunity to handle fish and that this article is usually in good demand until after Easter Sunday.

This is a suggestion to those who may be contemplating a little extra effort in their fish department, or, in fact, the opening of this part of the business. If fish were not wholesome and economical to the customer who seeks a change of food now and then, if it were not profitable to the grocer and comparatively easy to handle at this season there would be nothing to be gained in taking it up.

The experiences of those who have tried and succeeded is worth dependence.

WESTERN WHEAT CROP SITUATION.

The fair cold weather which has been prevailing during the last week has brightened considerably the prospects for the western farmer, as threshing has not been interrupted, and at last all machines have been running full blast for a week.

The latest report published shows 80 per cent. of the crop in Manitoba to have been threshed, and 50 per cent. marketed. In Saskatchewan, 60 per cent. is estimated to have been threshed and 30 per cent. marketed. In Alberta, 30 per cent. threshed, but very little is reported to have been marketed as yet. The estimated grade so far shows 80 per cent. of the Manitoba crop marketed to be ranging from No. 1 Northern to No. 6 Northern, and of this amount 50 per cent. is reported to be grading No. 2 Northern, or higher. Saskatchewan is reported to be grading as low as No. 6 Northern; the bulk ranging around No. 3.

Reports indicate that help is needed in Saskatchewan, and serious car shortages is noticeable in Saskatchewan and Alberta. In fact, the Department of Agriculture in Saskatchewan is endeavoring to induce threshing outfits to visit Saskatchewan after they have finished threshing the crop in Manitoba.

CONCENTRATION.

One thing at a time is enough for any person to handle and do it well. The clerk cannot correctly serve a customer when his mind is following his favorite ball team on a distant field; if his attention is on some person across the street; or given to a discussion on some subject with other members of the staff, foreign to the work of the store.

A woman entered a Canadian store the other day to purchase some toilet soap. Three of the clerks were giving their opinion of the world's baseball series. She had stood at the counter a considerable length of time before one clerk managed to tear himself away from the discussion to enquire her wants in an abrupt manner.

He "whacked" down two cheap soaps upon the counter and meandered up to the pennant "judges" at the other end of the counter, leaving the customer to make up her mind which of the soaps she wished.

She did not wish either. She wanted a good soap. The clerk, at last noting the icy stares, returned just as she had about decided to go to another store.

She said she wanted a good toilet soap. The clerk placed another box on the counter for examination, meanwhile talking to his fellow clerks something about "Connie Mack." The woman, although she had come to purchase several items, took one bar of soap and went across the street to leave her order where clerks were more interested in customers than baseball.

The clerk who cannot give his undivided attention to customers has no place in the store. He should be handling a pick and shovel or at some other work which allows conversation with his fellow laborers. A person cannot use his full powers of salesmanship when he is interested in other things.

Concentration on one thing at a time is necessary.

CATERING TO THE MASSES.

It is both amusing and exasperating to retailers to read the editorials appearing in the daily press from time to time on the prices the so-called "middleman" is charging.

Anyone acquainted with conditions can see at a glance the idea these papers wish to convey. It is a purely political move and practically every daily newspaper of both political stripes, in the larger cities particularly, actually "fall all over themselves" to tell the consuming public it is being robbed.

And all for effect. Catering to the masses without stopping to think is not honest dealing with any paper, even if a few votes should happen to be lost.

The Toronto Star never loses an opportunity to point out the "exorbitant" profits the dealer is making on garden products. It wants the market gardener to go direct to the public, but the market gardener knows the expense attached to this and prefers to sell the dealer where he is sure of his money.

But the Toronto World made a big mistake the other day. It published an editorial condemning the Milk Producers' Association for raising the price of milk several times during the past year. It went on to say that "some drastic steps be taken to prevent the raising of prices of this and other products to an unreasonable extent. For several years the Attorney-General's Department has not seen fit to make any prosecutions under certain sections of the criminal code, and some people, at least, seem to have conceived the idea that these sections of the criminal code are of the 'dead letter' variety."

Next, it quotes the criminal code, pointing out the penalties, etc., and goes on to say: "It can be shown that the price of milk in Toronto is far higher than in any other city or town in Ontario. It is admitted by many of the producers themselves that there is no real necessity for the increased price. There has, however, been a constant endeavor on the part of a certain number of the producers to unduly enhance the price of milk, and to make an unreasonable profit out of an article which the citizens cannot do without. It is up to the Attorney-General's Department to investigate and prosecute under the above section of the code, without delay."

Evidently, after discovering that farmers constituted the "milk producers," and that many of them are important constituents of the proprietor, who is an M.P., the World beat a rapid retreat the following day. Note what it says:

"A mistake occurred in a World editorial yesterday dealing with milk and combines. Instead of speaking of milk producers, who belong to the country, we should have spoken of milk dealers, who belong to the city. Milk producers are the farmers who sell their milk to city dealers and dealers sell this milk to consumers; and time after time dealers have put up the price of milk to consumers without a corresponding increase to the farmers who supply the milk. And only the spring of this year, instead of reducing the price of milk to consumers, the dealers maintained winter prices to consumers, but lowered the price they paid the farmer for milk! That wasn't square to either producer or consumer, etc., etc.

"It is true that farmers hold a meeting two or three times a year to fix a minimum price at which to sell their milk to dealers, but it is not in the nature of a combine. The dealers have more or less of a combine in the city, and are able to keep the price away up."

If any other body of men had fixed a minimum price such as the farmers, as milk producers, have done, wouldn't the World have gone into hysterics? Imagine a Retail Grocers' Association doing a similar thing and publishing it! What would the World, and for that matter, all the others, have said? But the producer or farmer who is in the majority on election day is excused by the vote-hunters.

AN UNRESPONSIVE POOR.

Ruskin was once a grocer. In 1874 he opened a shop in Paddington Street, Notting Hill, England, in order, as he announced, "to supply the poor with pure tea in packets as small as they choose to buy, without making a profit on the sub-division, large orders being, of course, equally acceptable from anybody who cares to promote honest dealing." The shop did not attract.

Ruskin complained in Fors Clavigera that "the poor only like to buy their tea where it is brilliantly lighted and eloquently ticketed, and as I resolutely refuse to compete with my neighboring tradesmen either in gas or rhetoric, the patient sub-division of my parcels passes little recognized as an advantage by my uncalculating public."

The shop soon closed down and the grocery trade lost probably the most distinguished represenative it is ever likely to possess.

THE LIMIT.

Last spring a certain Canadian grocer known to the writer, put in a window of flour and he has not changed it yet. Probably he intended it for a Marathon window, or was so pleased with it that he believed the people would never tire of a good thing.

At any rate, the window is there yet. If it were not that his store otherwise suggests fair progressiveness this glaring thoughtlessness might go unpassed.

Another grocer of less importance had a window of a certain breakfast food from spring, through the summer, until a few weeks ago, and it was then changed when the representative of The Grocer called the attention of the manufacturer's agent to the fact that the window in its last condition was anything but good advertising. Words fail to describe it.

In these cases a little supervision by the manufacturer's representative would not be amiss.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The trade will follow carefully the canvass being made of Hamilton grocers to determine opinion of the majority as to whether Wednesday afternoon will be time of rest the year round instead of in summer only.

Cereals should be kept in a dry light place. Before a new case is opened all of the older goods should be disposed of. Some retailers are not particular enough about cleaning up old stock before putting the new consignment up for sale. This carelessness frequently results in a few packages remaining for a long time. Weevils may appear and then there is no end of trouble.

The decease of an emu in a public park in New South Wales revealed the fact that its stomach contained four pennies, six halfpennies, nine 2½-in. nails, five marbles, one pump connection, one umbrella ferrule, one key, one medal, one clock-wheel 2½ in. in diameter, two collar studs, one safety-pin, two staples, three washers, three coat buttons, twenty-four pieces of assorted crockery and glass ware, and one large pin 2 in. long. It looks as if the grocer is going to lose his job. If such a diet should become popular among the bird family it might spread to other bipeds.

Dealer Controls Customers' Purchases

How He Can Suggest in Various Ways Goods Which Public Will Buy Only When Attention is Called to Them—Particular References to Christmas Trade —Attracting People From the Country.

Throughout the winter season everywhere in Canada, and perhaps most particularly in Western Canada, the average grocer is inclined to let his winter trade fall below the normal of the spring and summer season. It is taken as a matter of course, that trade cannot be kept active through all the seasons of the year, and by force of habit the merchant falls back into a sort of recline, and lets the business come as it may. When the thing is referred to in this manner, undoubtedly the average grocer will for the moment question this condition, but after investigating the circumstances, it will undoubtedly occur to him that there is more or less relaxation on the part of the merchant during the winter season.

The Dealer's Power.

It may be difficult, and undoubtedly is difficult to keep the trade lively during a season when customers do not come to town, and the more immediate customers do not frequent the streets so often. A great fact must always be borne in mind, however, by the merchant, namely, that he is in a position to exercise great control over the buying power of the public. It is his right, his privilege, and his duty to exercise that power. All of us will admit of the fact, that there is power in suggestion and in the transmission of ideas. The merchant is the most prominent man in town. His name appears in bold letters over his store front. He occupies a site on a prominent street, where every citizen of the town and country round about is obliged to pass by. He takes space in the local paper. He is, perhaps, an official in the muncipal council ; perhaps a school trustee. All these things bring the merchant into prominence, and give him great advantage in attracting customers and selling them goods.

Controls Purchases of Public.

To come more directly to the thought of control over the buying power of the customer, and the control of the aesthetic temperament of the public, there is no limitation to the value of the merchant's window. In this window he can arrange artistic dispalys, something beautiful, which delights the eye. He can arrange the display of a single staple line of goods which he wishes to push of in a hurry. The value of this kind of display is well known to the experienced merchant. He can use that window to create demand for line of goods with which the public is not familiar. The merchant has the power in his hands to sell a new product by the systematic and tasteful use of his window.

Not only has he the advantage of his window, but he has himself, his own personality, his own words and thoughts to transmit to those with whom he converses, and to the customer over the counter, whom he may directly influence to buy goods.

Giving Service by Suggestion.

In the winter season when the customer may not come to the store as often as in other seasons, should not the merchant be more particular to suggest some articles that the customer should order? The grocer has many lines of goods on his shelves, which the customer would never think of ordering if the name and the idea were not suggested. It does not necessarily follow that the grocer would be urging too strongly or pressing too keenly for business by using his powers of suggestion, and the creation of ideas, because it is service, that the grocer should render, and service should be his chief object. The grocer should feel he is doing the customer a favor by offering suggestions.

The interior arrangement and display of goods is an important feature in the winter trade. Too often the same line of goods are prominent week after week on the counter or on the floor, and a customer is never given the pleasure of seeing even a new label, and the appearance of the store is repulsive and monotonous rather than inviting and suggestive. In the winter season the grocery store can be made an attractive "rendezvous" for customers. Not in the same sense that loafers are attracted to a place, but a place for sight seeing, interest creating, where the customer can be educated up to the point of purchasing large range of goods by merely seeing the goods around him. The store can be made warm. A flower or a palm can be attractively pedestalled. Comfortable seats can be arranged convenient for the customer who, perhaps, drives in through the cold from a distant point in the country. All these things tend to give the merchant power over the buying public and the confidence of the customer.

Show Fancy Goods.

The fancy goods table arranged in the centre of the store has a popular following among merchants. This is a feature that can be enlarged upon to advantage during the winter season. A line of goods which probably decorate the dark shelves in the rear of the store can be taken down, dusted, and put out on the fancy goods table. These may be goods that the customer never saw before, probably a product that he never heard of, and the only possible way they can be sold is to bring them to the attention of the buyer; the buyer really wants them and is waiting to be told about them.

Another feature of the winter trade should be the special advantage taken of the daily newspapers to advertise thoroughly and strongly the seasonable lines. The newspaper is read more thoroughly and pondered over more religiously during the long winter evenings than in the other seasons of the year. It is only reasonable that the merchant should take advantage of this fact.

To refer more particularly to the Xmas trade, very often the grocer is at fault, first, by not ordering his goods in reasonable time to reap the benefit of the holiday trade. The dealer should have his Xmas goods on display weeks before Xmas. He should advertise them and talk about them well in advance. It is within the merchant's power to suggest so strongly the purchasing of Xmas and holiday lines that the customer will buy wide ranges in large quantities, where he perhaps would not buy at all if the merchant did not work him up to that point. As previously intimated, it does not necessarily follow that the merchant is taking advantage of the customer, but he is simply suggesting to him goods that he needs and he should have.

The grocer can influence the customer to have more zesty meals prepared for himself, more attractive homes, healthier bodies and more happiness in life all through; hence the great factor of the merchant in the community.

Latest Review of the Grocery Markets

Less Firm Feeling in Sugar Market—When Refined Will be Affected is a Matter of Conjecture—Big Shipments of Goods Being Made Before Close of Navigation—Dried Fruits Sent on to Retailer—Salmon Coming Forward Slowly—New Peanut Prices Lower—Jams Not Plentiful—Railways are Crowded.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Molasses.—Up 2 cents.

Sugar.—Less firm.

Shelled Walnuts.—A little easier.

Montreal, Nov. 9.—Wholesale grocers report extremely busy conditions. The fall trade is at its height and it is safe to estimate that some of the houses are shipping goods each with the daily total of $20,000. There are several influences responsible for this immense business. Cold weather is approaching and many are taking advantage of this last opportunity to secure the delivery of their goods by water before navigation closes.

But the bulk of the trade is seasonable. Currants, raisins, prunes, figs, canned goods of all kinds, and other lines, are being delivered. A large quantity of these goods are for the holiday trade. Canned goods have to be shipped now; in fact, some retailers claim they have been too long without the delivery of their orders. Dried fruits are already in demand by consumers, and shipments of these goods are being made at an opportune time. Judging by the quantity of grocery staples and specialties now going forward, the Christmas trade should reach large proportions this year.

Sugar.—There is only a fair demand reported in this market, trade seeming to be of the hand-to-mouth variety. Various reports indicate an easier feeling. Conditions have been favorable to the new cane crop, and beet sugar is also tending to weaken the situation. However, there is no pronounced feeling here, although it seems to be held that the high price period is nearing the end of its tether.

Syrups and Molasses.—An advance of two cents a gallon in fancy and choice Barbadoes molasses is a feature of the market. This higher price bears out, to some extent, the statements made in these columns but a short time ago, to the effect that molasses was worth watching. There is a steady demand for this article and the firmness is supported by market conditions. The new cane crop is promising under favorable conditions, and it is not easy to say how long the market will maintain its present strength.

Dried Fruit.—Nothing particularly new is reported for the week in this market. Shipments of currants, raisins and prunes are being made. Currants are firm and it is likely that future orders to packers will be at higher price. Up to the middle of October, says one report, the exports from Greece amounted to 84,000 tons, and it is stated that but 45,000 tons remain to supply the world's demand until the next crop comes in.

Nuts.—New almonds have been received and are being delivered to the trade. Shelled walnuts will not arrive for several weeks yet. It is known that some supplies received are simply last year's crop, shelled recently. Of course they are not being sold as new goods. Brazils are steady. There is a better movement of late in nuts, the arrival of almonds having helped business. The filling of orders for the holiday trade will go on steadily in the coming interval.

Teas.—There never was such a scarcity of Japan teas at this particular period, when it is expected the larger quantity, including third crop, will have arrived, and from latest cable advices our market will be practically bare of all grades for the remainder of the season. A Shanghai report says since the advice that the first shipments of China greens had been made to the United States, and which were rejected by the government inspectors as containing facing matter, complications have arisen, and inasmuch as information has been received that the law will be rigidly enforced, the prospect is there will be no China greens available this season.

Canned Goods.

Toronto.—There are no particular new features to the fore in regard to canned goods. The market at the least is generally steady.

Salmon is moving eastward slowly, while the percentage of delivery is not at all pleasing to the jobbers. Sockeyes give particular cause for complaint in this regard. A continued feeling of strength is expected in this line.

Retailers are already finding considerable demand for canned goods.

Montreal.—Supplies are still coming forward and jobbers are filling orders yet. There are even some retailers who are buying at the present price. They are more numerous than might be expected, and are paying the extra price resulting from putting off purchases. Only scant supplies of salmon have been received and the outlook in this market is regarded as blue.

Toronto, Nov. 9.—A good volume of business is reported by local wholesalers. The amount of goods going out is large, orders coming in freely for shipments of goods before the close of navigation in order to secure lower freight rate. Collections are also quite good.

A great deal of complaint is being made by local jobbers because the railroads are not able to deliver goods on account of lack of adequate facilities. All the railroads seem to be offenders in this regard. It is not in the shipment of goods they fall down but in the delivery when they have arrived here. Cars of goods are on the sidings but shed room does not seem large enough or delivery outfits numerous enough to deliver the goods in anything like a reasonable time. Cases are reported where shipments are here a full week before they reach the consignee. Jobbers have orders from retailers which for this reason they cannot completely fill. Retailers who have been disappointed should remember that the wholesaler is not at fault.

So far reports from Europe indicate good prospects this year for larger yield of the finest grades of olive oil. New crop oil will not arrive here until February.

The supplies of Canadian jams are not large. Raspberry and strawberry are particularly in short supply. Considerable quantities of Old Country jams are being brought in. The trade in imported jams is yearly on the increase to meet retailers' requirements.

There is at present a brisk demand for canned milk. As the trade knows, condensed milk has been generally advanced during the past two months. No change has taken place in evaporated however.

Cotton twine is easier, owing to the reduced price of cotton.

Sugar.—There is a feeling that future of sugar is towards an easier tendency. Just when that feeling will make itself apparent in refined is a matter of conjecture.

Raws in New York have been shaping downward. New crop Cuban cane for January delivery is quoted at $4.86. Immediate sugar is above that figure. The natural course will be for present prices and that of new crop to come together. If Russia is allowed to export her surplus sugar, the market will be further weakened. That will not be known until well on in December.

Syrups and Molasses.—There are no changes in this department this week as far as prices are concerned. The syrup trade is on a healthy scale. Retailers are finding this a favorable season to put some efforts behind syrups. The general tendency in molasses elsewhere is decidedly firm, but there has been no no change in prices here.

Dried Fruits.—The advance shipments of all lines of new dried fruits have arrived with the exception of dates, which are expected about the 15th of the month. Heavier shipments of many lines are now arriving. Large sizes of prunes are scarce this year and some houses report their supply of larger sizes are rather scant. Peels hold a steady position, citron being quoted at 14½ to 15 cents. Hallowee dates are higher this year, full boxes being quoted at 7¼. Some 1910 stock are still available at around 5½ cents. Fards range from 9½ to 10½. California seeded raisins continue easy and lower.

A local wholesale house has an advice that the Turkish Government have forbidden the further export of Smyrna figs, the balance to be held for the use of their soldiers. Such would mean a shortage in the delivery of figs here, as shipments have not all came forward yet.

The Valencia raisin market continues strong. One Spanish shipper who had considerable goods here has fallen down on his contracts, necessitating the purchase again by such wholesalers concerned at an advanced price.

Malaga seedless raisins are quoted by one firm at 7¼ cents. Evaporated apples are quoted around 11 cents. There is at least no firmness in this line.

Tea.—The tone of the market continues steady. There are no particular new features. A fair trade from wholesaler to retailer is generally reported.

Coffee.—Prices both locally and elsewhere are well maintained. A coffee report says that with less coffee in sight than there was one year ago, with stocks in dealers' hands very low, the upward tendency of coffee appears to be justified. It would seem that those who have coffee to sell have the best of the trade, and it is with them a question of putting up the price just a little higher from month to month. Everybody is certain that coffee is much higher now than it ought to be for the good of the trade. But that does not help matters. Those who own coffee are going to get just as much for it as they can. They have been getting their price right along and it looks as though they would continue to do so.

Nuts.—One advice from France is to the effect that the shelled walnut crop is ample, and that the quality is generally good. Another report says that all responsible packers have withdrawn quotations until they can get more definite information as to the current season's output. The Turkish crop is reported to be short.

Prices on new crop Virginia peanuts which have been issued show a reduction from the ruling price for old stock. In Virginia prices for old crop have for the past few months advanced considerably. New almonds will be available soon.

Rice and Tapioca.—There is nothing to indicate other than a continuance of steadiness in the rice market. Advices from Rangoon state it is estimated that 363,000 acres under rice have been destroyed by floods in Lower Burma. There may, however, be about 100,000 acres replanted. A report from Japan says that although floods in some districts have done damage, the crop will be an increase over the average. The fast increasing population is greatly enlarging its use and there is no prospect of any great increase in the production sufficient to meet the increasing demand in Japan. Tapioca also continues steady.

Beans.—Beans seem quite firm at present values. Wholesalers complain of the scarcity of supplies. The farmers are apparently holding. It is pointed out that the consumption of beans is showing a decided increase. Mining, lumber and construction camps are big consumers.

Prime beans, per bushel	2 30	2 35
Hand picked beans, per bushel	2 40	2 45

Brooms.—Since the price of broom corn began to soar, there has been an advance of from $1.25 to $1.50 per dozen in brooms here. For instance, a broom that previously went to the retailer at $3, now costs $4.50, and a $4.75 grade has risen to $6 per dozen. Broom corn is now selling from $135 to $200 per ton in the producing sections in the United States. It is now practically all out of the producers' hands, and an interesting fact is that about 85 per cent. of it was purchased during the three weeks' flurry when buyers first went into the market.

There is little prospect of foreign corn being brought in. For Hungary on account of floods and wet weather the crop has been small, and a recent quotation is $160 per ton, which is very high when the waste in this corn is considered.

Whether or not the higher prices will cause a falling off in the demand for brooms is a question. A number of manufacturers say that consumption did not fall off in the high period of 1909-10.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Nov. 9.—Few complaints were heard during the week among local grocers as to the success of Thanksgiving trade, and in many cases, dealers reported business to have been far better than in past years. It is reported in addition to this by wholesale grocers that fall business has thus far been encouraging, and they are looking forward to a period of briskness between now and Christmas.

The markets, too, are firm, and few changes are noted. This week saw the arrival of large quantities of dried fruits and nuts, and the orders which have been placed by the retailers will be filled with all possible haste. Speaking, generally, prices in these lines are much higher than they were last year, but not enough it is expected to interfere with the success of Christmas trade.

Some lines of nuts have declined slightly in price, and prunes are also reported a little easier, but in the case of evaporated peaches and apricots, higher prices prevail. An advance in spices is looked for, and there is a prospect of nutmegs going up as well.

General firmness is reported in grains on all markets. Rolled oats have advanced slightly of late while it is thought likely that cornmeal will also be higher. For the most part, however, the market is reported as quiet.

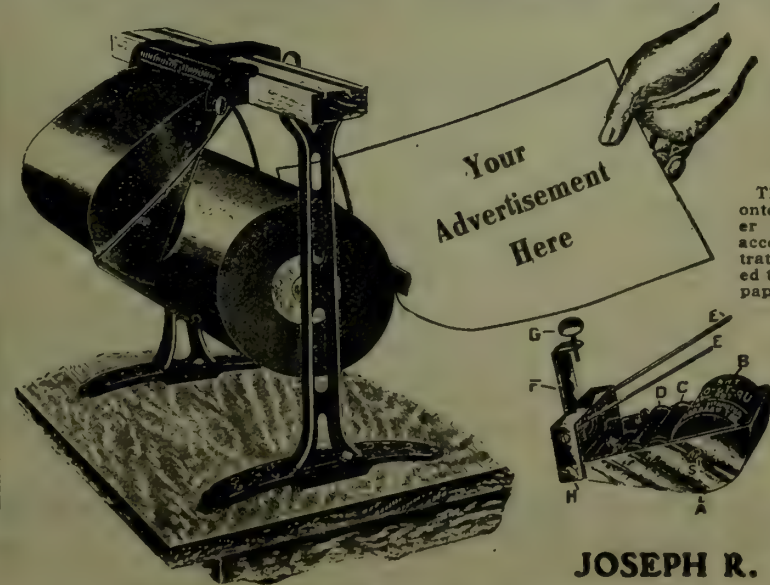
NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, Nov. 7. — Notwithstanding enormous crop of apples in Nova Scotia, prices of hard winter fruit promise to be high. Bishop Pippins and King of Tompkins are selling slowly, and high price is said to be the reason. No. 1 Pippins are quoted at $3, and Kings at $3.50 to $3.75. It is stated that many of the growers in various sections of the Annapolis Valley have formed co-operative societies, and agreed not to sell their winter fruit below a fixed price. Gravensteins are now about over, and the stock still offering is quoted at low prices to clear them up. Malaga grapes are reported in heavy demand, and this week the stock on hand was about cleaned up.

A steamer arrived the other day loaded to the hatch with dried fruits from Mediterranean ports. She landed several thousand packages at this port, the balance being for Montreal. Men worked night and day on the steamer so that she would get away in good time for Montreal. The trade at the time of writing had not received any of this fruit.

Jobbers report potatoes in good demand. Several cargoes arrived here this week from Prince Edward Island, and they are selling ex-vessel at 60 cents per bushel. Dealers here are looking for lower prices when more vessels arrive. On the Island, potatoes are selling at 35 to 37 cents per bushel. They are retailing here at $1.75 per bag. The quality of the stock this season is considered pretty good.



Dealers report sales of flour quite heavy, the shipments principally being to the outposts. Prices are firm. Manitoba patents are now quoted at $6.35 to $6.45, and Ontario blends at $5.25 to $5.35. Split peas have been advanced 25 cents per bushel, and whole peas have been marked up seven cents per bushel. Rolled oats in barrels are now selling at $5.75 to $6, and in bags $2.75 to $2.90. Cornmeal is quoted at $1.85 to $1.90. Beans (prime) are $2.40 to $2.50, and hand-picked $2.55 to $2.60.

The price of eggs is now beginning to soar. Jobbers are asking 27 cents per dozen for Island stock, and 28 to 30 for Nova Scotia eggs. Receipts show a heavy falling off during the past week, and this is the main reason for the advance in price.

Did You Ever Buy A Bankrupt Stock?

If you did—didn't it make you actually sick to see the shelves full of unsaleable goods—only worth in cash about half what they cost.

The man who bought the stock originally expected to make a big profit. He bought brands, which, if he could have sold, would have paid much more profit than standard, well-known brands.

But—they didn't sell. He not only did not make the profit he expected, but after selling part of each lot found the rest on his hands. They hadn't the quality that brings repeat orders, so, in the course of time, loss of interest and loss of trade forced him into bankruptcy. This is an old, old story being repeated somewhere every day.

The merchant who carries a big stock of slow selling goods loses the profits he should make and often loses his capital, while the merchant who keeps only quick selling, good quality goods turns his stock over often, increases his business, makes quick, clean profits, keeps his credit good by taking his discounts, and adds something to his capital every year.

Red Rose Tea is a quick, sure seller. Will make more profit for you month by month than any tea you can sell.

To the Manufacturer or Wholesaler——

If it were possible to employ a traveller who could call on thousands of the best dealers all through Canada every week, what salary would you figure he'd be worth—even supposing he did nothing more than go in and shake hands with these dealers, under such circumstances they'd be glad to see him.

Would he be worth $200, $300 or $500 per week? Many a house would pretty nearly let him fix his own salary.

Equip an advertisement in this paper with a verbal handshake for every dealer in Canada, and a frank, brief, pointed talk about your goods and you add a traveller to your staff who will make thousands of calls a week for you at a salary of $4 to $8 a week—less than you would pay a first-class stenographer.

Of course this traveller won't displace any of your regular salesmen, but he will help them to sell more goods and open up more new accounts.

MANITOBA MARKETS.

POINTERS.—

Sugar.—Easier.

Syrup.—Firm.

Coffee.—Strong.

Beans.—Easier.

Winnipeg, Nov. 7.—Good steady demand for groceries from wholesalers to retailers is apparent throughout the West. The fair weather which has been prevailing throughout the week enabling the farmers to get their crops threshed has resulted in healthier feeling. As result many of the conservative retailers who have been holding off on account of wet season, are now placing their orders, and wholesalers are busy as ever. Navigation will close in about two weeks and as a result stocks which are generally low at the present time are being rushed forward with all haste from the East before all-rail route will increase freight charges.

Sugar.—The sugar market is reported to be a little easier this week but no reduction has taken place as yet on the local market. Wholesalers refuse to express an opinion on the probable movement as they state they are entirely controlled by southern markets.

Coffee.—The tone of the market is every bit as strong as it was last week and an advance in price is looked for daily. At the present this has not as yet occurred on the local market, but it is prevailing opinion that higher prices will be seen shortly.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON THE YEAR ROUND

Hamilton R. G. A. Taking Referendum to Determine Opinion of Majority—Some in Favor and Others Not—Which Will it be?

Hamilton, Ont., Nov. 9.—At the regular monthly meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association, a motion of W Waters that the grocers close their stores every Wednesday afternoon at 1 o'clock all year round was brought up for discussion.

This motion has been discussed at the last three meetings of the grocers, but it seems that unless a majority of the grocers agree with the plan it will not be taken up by the association. A number of the grocers were of the opinion that the idea was a good thing, but the question seemed to be whether the grocers, many of whom were not in the association, would look upon the idea in the same light.

It was accordingly decided to send a canvasser around to every grocer in the city to see what the feeling of all the storekeepers was on this question. When the canvass has been completed then some action will be taken. This was the principal item of business of the evening and the meeting adjourned.

President J. A. MacIntosh was in the chair.

THE POOR GROCER.

"If sugar goes much higher, I don't know what we'll do," mourned the anxious housewife. "Do," answered her practical husband, "why, we'll change grocers, of course. We owe this present one about as much as we ought to expect him to stand, anyway."

Hog Prices Have Turned Upward Again

Slump in Hog Values Checked—Receipts Have Been Smaller—Good Demand for Lard—Butter is Firm Under Reduced Yield and Good Demand—New Laid Eggs in Small Supply—Storage Stock Being Cut Into—Cheese is Quiet.

The slump of the live hog market has received a check, and prices during past week have again been shaping upward. During September and October, the price of the porkers hit the toboggan slide for a total drop of $2 per cwt., going down to as low a basis as they have reached in two years This was occasioned by the free delivery, and it was said the farmers were selling off their stock because of the high price of feed. There has, however, been a decrease in supplies during the past week or so, and a keen demand from packers has brought about the firm tendency.

Just whether the smaller receipts are due to the small supply of hogs in the country, or that farmers are unwilling to sell at the low level, is a question. With the high price of feed, it seems as if the present values for hogs were well warranted.

Demand for pork products is on a moderate scale. The consuming demand is fair, while there is also a considerable demand for the heavier lines from mining and lumber camps. Lard is holding quite firm. "As long as butter maintains its present price, I expect to see lard rule firm," is the way one dealer sizes up the situation.

Butter is holding firm too. The high price of cheese has induced the farmer to send his milk to the cheese factory, thus reducing the production of butter. However, with the cheese factories closing, there are some hopes for an increase in the butter market. Demand for this commodity is good.

Eggs are becoming a valuable article of food. With receipts of new laids on a small scale, prices are on the ascent. Storage stocks are being cut into, and a wide swath is being made in these supplies. Some small shipments a short time ago were brought into Canada from Chicago, but the market there has stiffened slightly. The amount of storage eggs in Canada is said to be smaller than last year.

Cheese varies little in either direction. Trade is not overly brisk.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—There is a good demand for pork and salt meats. Lard is also moving well, and during the week pure lard was marked up ½ cent, and compound was marked down to the same extent. Cooked and smoked meats are a little easier. Business on the whole is good, and supplies during the week were fairly easy.

TORONTO.

Provisions.—As noted last week, live hogs seem to have reached the end of their tether. Prices this week are higher by about 25 cents per cwt., being quoted at $6 at country points. The supply was not so free last week, and packers did not get all they wanted.

There is an easier tendency in smoked meats, and some slight reductions have been made. Lard, if anything, seems to be shaping in the other direction. One firm quotes both pure and compound ¼ cent higher. Trade in pork products is fair.

Eggs.—Eggs are getting to be a valuable article, and very early in the season too. "New laid hens' eggs are about as scarce as hens' teeth," was the way one dealer spoke. There is a variety of prices being quoted under the scarcity. Storage stocks are being made use of. According to report, the storage stocks are not on any large scale, the amount that was put away this year being said to be smaller than in previous years. This will, no doubt, mean an early call for the imported article from across the line to supply the demand.

Poultry.—Wholesale dealers have other than kind words to say about the poultry trade. It is not the scarcity of supplies that is causing the trouble, but the quality of the stock arriving, mostly poorly filled out and very thin birds that look far from attractive to the purchaser. There is, at present, quite a flood of supplies on the market, mostly chickens. The following prices are quoted by one dealer for good quality dressed poultry: Fowl, 9 cents to 11 cents; chickens, 12 cents to 14 cents; ducks, 12 cents to 14 cents; geese, 11 cents to 12 cents; turkeys, 20 cents to 22 cents.

GROCERY TRADE TALK.

Considerable damage was done to the store and stock of W. J. Connors, grocer, Chatham, Ont., by fire.

The Butler chain of grocery stores in New York City has a total of 200.

A report from St. Louis, says, the First Christian Church, of that city, has entered the grocery business, and will sell to its members and possibly others, securing only sufficient profit to cover operating expenses.

COVERING OF OUTSIDE DISPLAY.

London, Ont., Nov. 9.—Retail grocers have secured the defeat in the city council, of a by-law providing for the covering of foodstuffs displayed outside of stores, in order to protect fruit and vegetables and the like from contamination by animals, wind-blown dust, etc.

At this meeting of the council, Ald. Saunders moved the six months' hoist, which carried. A large delegation of grocers was present, and applauded the shelving of the measure.

Friends of the by-law promise to bring it up again.

Review of the World's Tea Situation

The Consumption of Tea on the Increase—Yield for the Different Producing Sections of World—United States Prohibits Importation of Artificially Colored Tea—Japan Stops its Making—Ceylon's Production Falls off on Account of Drought and Planting of Rubber—Russia Takes More Tea.

An interesting review of the tea situation during the past year is given by a large London, Eng., tea firm, Brooke Bond & Co., Limited. They say that the increase in the consumption of tea throughout the world continues. The demand for British-grown tea is greater now than the supply and prices have been paid this year for common tea which have not been equalled for twenty years. The average price of all tea has also risen considerably.

"Rather more than four years ago, consumption overtook supply. Prices thereupon rose. Since then production has continually increased, but consumption has increased still faster and is now distinctly in advance of supply. We say in advance of supply, rather than of production, because in all probability large quantities of tea are grown and consumed in all the producing countries, particularly in China, of which no record reaches the outside world.

"The proportion borne by the various countries in supplying the world's demand remains much the same as last year, all of them having increased their output except Ceylon.

"By far the greatest part of the tea concerning which we have reliable statistics is grown in India and Ceylon, most of the rest coming from China, Japan and Java. Small quantities are grown also in Natal, Nyasaland, Burma, the Straits Settlements, the Mauritius, Queensland, the Fiji Isles, Brazil and the Caucasus, but are almost entirely consumed locally; some also in Annam, part of which is exported to France.

India Increases Yield.

"India produced a record crop during the year 1910-11, her exports up to May 31, 1911, to which date we have official figures, including Southern India, reaching the large amount of 258,384,800 lbs., about 4,000,000 lbs. more than during the preceding twelve months. It seems probable that when we see returns for the twelve months ended Sept. 30, we shall find that the increase is even greater, and that the crop of 1910-11 is as much as 15,000,000 lbs. ahead of that of 1909-10.

"The area under tea in India has not much increased during the year; the difficulty of obtaining coolies is so great that most planters now devote their attention rather to increasing the productive power of the existing gardens than to extending their area.

Deficit in Ceylon.

"Up to the end of 1910 the total export from Ceylon had fallen over ten million pounds. During the early months of this year it recovered considerably, but not sufficiently to bring the total nearly up to the record output of 1909-10, which was very little short of 192,000,000 lbs. The deficit is attributed largely to the drought and partly to the great attention given to rubber. Some experts think that with favorable climatic conditions the output of the island will remain at about the same level for some years to come, for although the increase in rubber planting tends to reduce the area under tea, better cultivation increases the yield. Also there is much high ground in Ceylon very suitable for tea, where rubber cannot be grown. About 61 per cent. of Ceylon's crop goes to the United Kingdom, the rest mostly to Australia, Russia and America.

"The great feature of the year with regard to British-grown tea, both Indian and Ceylon, is the immense increase in direct shipments to foreign countries, particularly to Russia. Many Russian merchants who formerly made their purchases in London, now buy almost entirely in Calcutta and Colombo.

"Owing to the drought it is probable that the output of Natal tea will be about 50,000 lbs. less this year than last, viz.: 2,042,000 lbs. instead of 2,092,000 lbs. The demand for this tea increases steadily. If the output were doubled, the whole would probably easily be consumed in South Africa.

"It is estimated that there are about 20,000 acres of land in Nyasaland suitable for tea growing, of which about 600 are at present under tea, while there is an interesting demand for land round about the existing gardens. Last year's output was about 56,000 lbs. The aroma and flavor of the tea are said to be very good, superior to low-country Ceylon.

Large Exports From China.

"Exports from China increased on the whole during the year. Shipments to the United Kingdom and to Russia rose, but the United States took 23 per cent. less green and 71 per cent. less black tea than during the preceding year.

"The trade with the United States has been affected by the new regulations, which came into force May 31st, 1911,

Brisk Routine Trade in Flour

But There is Said to be Little Buying Ahead—Export Trade Quiet—Locals Cannot Compete With English Mills, Which get Big Price for Offals and Sell Flour Lower—Western Wheat Coming Forward Freely, but Grading Low.

Flour remains at the same level as a week ago, while cereals are also unchanged. Those dealers who are giving the necessary efforts to these commodities are finding results gratifying. The season is favorable for the sale of these lines.

With visible supply of wheat showing substantial increase, and with bearish conditions elsewhere, wheat market in Canada shows easier tone. However, this has not any marked bearing on flour, as this commodity has not been following the raw material in its ascent of late. There have been some complaints heard previous to this easiness, that flour was not in keeping with the price of wheat. Although wheat is pouring freely from western points, it is grading low, so that good milling wheat is not plentiful.

A good routine trade in flour is in evidence locally. However, on the whole, as reflected from reports, it would seem that there is not a great deal of purchasing ahead. Experiences of last year do not encourage dealers to take out contracts, as market eased off a good deal after many had booked orders last season.

"Millers are just as glad that there is less buying ahead," stated one, "as there have been efforts expended to do away with long contracts. No matter which way market goes, the miller gets the short end of the string. If flour goes up, he has to carry out his contracts, while if it goes down, he is generally forced to sell at the lower price."

Export trade in flour is quiet. Bids are out of line, exporters being unable to compete with English mills, which get big price for offals, and can afford to sell flour lower. Germany has been a big buyer of bran and shorts from England, as well as taking considerable from Canada. They have also been taking oat by-products, but enquiries are less brisk of late.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—The flour market during the week has been without development. The volume of business is encouraging, but there is no improvement in the foreign demand for spring wheat grades. The retail trade are showing more flour windows than usual, and are undoubtedly increasing their trade in this staple.

TORONTO.

Flour.—This week has brought about no change in flour, as far as the commodity itself is concerned. The ruling price for 1st patents in car lots is $5.50 per barrel. With wheat pouring into Winnipeg from all directions and with bearish news abroad, assisted by a decline in wheat prices in Chicago, there is a little easier feeling. However, the bearing on flour is not very marked at the moment at least.

Firmness continues in Ontario wheat. There is little being offered. Farmers are feeding it, finding it profitable with the high price of other grain to do so.

A good routine trade is being done at home, but the export trade is quite quiet.

EXPORTS FALLING OFF.

Canadian exports of bacon, hams, butter and cheese, in spite of the general development in the farming industry have been dropping back in the past few years. Calm After Rush of Domestic Fruits

Breathing Spell for Fruit Men After Flood of Summer and Fall Business—More Attention to Imported Lines—Oranges in Demand—Already Making Plans for Christmas Trade—New Crop Florida Oranges and Messina Lemons Arrive—Good Trade in Apples.

The fruit men are now being afforded a breathing spell after the long continued rush in evidence during the domestic fruit season. This is not to be taken to mean that trade is slack but there is not same rush as was experienced during abundance of domestic lines. Business in these lines is practically over, with the exception of apples and a few belated lots of pears and grapes in some sections. The period around. Thanksgiving and Hallowe'en was pleasing to dealers in the amount of trade transacted. Now the wholesalers are beginning to plan for the next special occasion, that of Christmas, previous to which there is always a big trade in fruits.

The shipment of late Valencia oranges from California is decidedly on the wane. From Nov. 1 of last year to October 23, shipment of oranges out of Southern California amounted to 36,725 cars as compared with 25,256 to Oct. 21 of previous season, so that size of the last crop in that state can be judged. Florida oranges are now coming to eastern Canadian markets. Navels from California will not arrive until around Dec. 1st, being somewhat delayed by the new United States law preventing shipment of immature fruit. Supplies will, however, be plentiful for Xmas trade.

New crop Messina lemons have also arrived. There are still some old crop Verdelli in stock, but in general this line is said to have been fairly well cleaned up.

Canadian apples are just now receiving a good deal of attention. There is a big export to European countries from the Eastern Provinces.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—The market is steady but without any particular feature. Oranges are receiving much more attention than of late; apples are naturally receiving a large share of attention, in fact Canadian apples are out in front as far as interest goes, with grapes receiving a good share of the trade.

Vegetables.—Celery is asked for considerably just now and is in good condition. Cabbage and carrots are also in good demand. Potatoes are steady. The colder weather means more cooking and more vegetable soups these days, hence one reason for the heavier business. Cranberries are very firm.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—First shipments of new crop Messina lemons have arrived. They are of quite good quality and quoted at $4. There are still some old crop Verdelli on the market. New crop Florida oranges have also arrived but are reported a little on green side. There are also some South America navels on this market at $3.50 to $4.50 per box. Navels from California will be held back this year on account of the United States law preventing the shipping of immature fruit. They may probably arrive around the first of the month. Trade is on a moderate scale.

Potatoes as suggested before are a little firmer. Prices in New Brunswick have been on the ascend, and with the small crop in Ontario those farmers who have stock are holding firmly. List of Frozen Fish About Complete Everything in Readiness for the Winter's Trade—Fishing Season has Been Extended Ten Days—Trade Will Soon Turn From Fresh to Frozen Varieties—Haddies More Plentiful—Good Season for Dealer to Push Oysters.

Several lines of fresh fish are practically done for the season and the frozen article is being turned to. The fishing season has, however, been extended for an additional ten days so that the fresh article in some lines will be received for so much longer while the total catch for the season will be enlarged.

The list of frozen varieties is about completed and everything is in readiness for the winter's trade. There is a good movement already. A brisk demand for smoked and prepared fish is in evidence. Haddies are more plentiful and a little easier in price.

Trade in oysters is good. This is a good season for their sale and they should be given attention by the dealer.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—Fresh halibut is practically done for the season and during the winter supplies will be of the frozen variety. B.C. salmon continues scarce; frozen salmon is now coming forward but the supply is limited and the price is a little firmer. Cod and haddock are arriving more freely.

There is a brisk demand for smoked and prepared fish. Haddies are a little easier in price and are more plentiful. Large kippers are scarce but medium are in good supply. The oyster season is bringing a good trade. The price of solid meats (select) are down ten cents a gallon. Standards were reduced five cents last week. This is the right time to boost oysters.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—The season for fresh fish, which generally closes on Nov. 1, has this year been extended for an additional ten days, so that there will be supplies coming forth for that much longer period. On the whole the catch of fresh fish this fall has been quite fair.

Latest addition to the list of frozen fish is red salmon, both headless and dressed as well as round, which is now in from the coast. This practically completes the list and everything is in readiness for full flood of winter fish business.

It is already off to a good start, there having been good run of trade, while the cooler weather and the approach of Advent will tend to bring about a still greater business.

Digby smoked herrings are now in and quoted at $1 per bundle.

FINE NEW BRUNSWICK APPLES.

St. John, N.B., Nov. 7.—That New Brunswick can compete favorably with other provinces in fruit raising was the unanimous verdict of all who paid a visit to the annual fruit exhibition in St. Andrew's rink this week, for the display of fruit of different kinds from all sections of the province was far beyond expectations of great majority of those who attended convention. Some of the apples shown will be sent to Ontario to be exhibited there, and it is believed they will warrant special and distinctive honors. The members of board of trade were visitors at the rink one evening, and were enthusiastic in praise of the remarkably fine display of apples.

T. H. Estabrooks, the president, considered the show much better than last year, and said that one of his keenest regrets was that the whole thing could not be sent to England. He was of the firm belief that fruit raising would become one of the chief industries of the province. The board and several of the leading merchants in different lines of business contributed cash prizes for the various displays.

Prof. Macoun, of the Government service, Ottawa, said that the exhibition was the best he had seen in the Dominion outside of Toronto.

TRADE IN APPLES WITH GERMANY

A big trade with Germany in Nova Scotia apples has been opened up this season. Hitherto the apple exports from Halifax have been exclusively to London, Liverpool and Glasgow, but chiefly to London. The British ports have already this fall taken about half a million barrels. Hamburg for the first time has taken apples from this province the exports so far this season being about eighty thousand barrels, and shipments will continue.

forbidding the importation of artifically faced or colored teas, of which until this year about 15,000,000 lbs. have been annually shipped to the States from Shanghai. In spite of the publication of this law, about 40,000 chests of colored tea were manufactured and sent to Shanghai for exportation. Some of it was actually shipped to the States, but was rejected as impure. It has been suggested that possibly the manufacturers did not take the prohibition seriously, or thought that the authorities would be induced to relent.

"The production of tea in Java increases steadily, though not rapidly, but the total output is still so small compared with that of India and Ceylon, that it does not make much difference so far as satisfying the world's demand is concerned.

Non-Color Law in Japan.

"Exports from Japan increased during the year, but to no great extent. When the United States passed the law forbidding the importation of colored tea, a regulation was issued by the Japanese Government prohibiting the manufacture or handling of such tea in Japan. As, however, Canada gave some large orders for tea of this kind, the government decided that the regulation should not come into force until September.

"Experiments in tea growing have for some time past been made in Brazil. A sample lately received in London was of excellent quality, resembling good Ceylon. Possibly at some future time the shortage in the world's tea supply caused by the inter-planting of the rubber in the old tea-producing countries of Asia, may be supplied from the rubber districts of Brazil.

"Turning from the consideration of the production of tea throughout the world to that of consumption, we find that it also, as we said above, has considerably increased.

"In the United Kingdom consumption per head of population has risen to 6.39 lbs., higher than in any other part of the world except Australasia.

Russia Increases Consumption.

"Russia continues to be India's best customer outside the United Kingdom. Her whole population, over 120,000,000, drink tea and drink a good deal of it. They are gradually giving up China tea and taking more from India and Ceylon. There has been a succession of very good harvests, causing consumption by the peasantry to increase. It is possible that their buying power may diminish a little this year, as the harvests in several districts are not good, but this is not likely to make much difference in the total amount imported. Official statistics show an increase of 7,110,000 lbs., or 29 per cent., imported from India, during the year ended March 31st, 1911. The increase from Ceylon is estimated, to July 13th, at 1,400,000 lbs. Calcutta has now a direct steamer service to Russia.

"During the year under consideration, Australasia took about 750,000 lbs. more from India, rather less than usual from Ceylon, and a good deal more from Java, than during the preceding year.

"The trade continues to be in a fairly flourishing condition, both with regard to production and to distribution, tea being considered by most people, in spite of all that has been said to the contrary, a necessity of life."

An Extra Early Closing Night Was Discussed

Montreal, Nov. 9.—As was expected, the question of early closing was one of the chief topics at the regular meeting of the retail grocers' section of R.M.A. It was also the occasion of the annual election of officers.

Nothing new was determined as far as the extra closing night was concerned, but from the character of several speeches, it is evident the grocers are determined in their opposition to closing three nights during the week. They are satisfied with the present law, demanding that they be closed two nights, but they deem it impracticable to enlarge the scope of the by-law.

J. T. Boileau, presented a report of the finances of the annual picnic. The net receipts from a euchre party and picnic totalled $615.49, giving a balance in the bank, of $1,164.40. The officers elected for the ensuing year are:—President, J. I. Lussier; 1st vice-president, Pierre Filion; 2nd vice-president, O. Decary; treasurer, Romeo Bernard; secretary, J. O. Pesant.

Montreal grocers are in a good position, and will be called upon to display their strength in this vexing question of early closing on an additional night.

LOSS AND REGAIN OF CUSTOMER.

Clerk Made Error in Sales Check—Cause of Trouble Discovered Two Years Later.

It was just a simple little thing which saved probably a half minute's time but in the end created trouble. It meant the loss of a customer who bought about $300 worth annually.

A customer had purchased a 5-pound pail of jam which was sold at 50 cents. She had been made an allowance of 10 cents for something and the clerk in making out the sales check wrote "5 lb. pail of Blank's jam—40c" thus making the 10 cents allowance in a way that saved time for him. Unfortunately this sale's check fell into the hands of a customer who had purchased a pail of jam and paid 50 cents for it. Of course, she at once believed she was being charged more for goods than other customers and quit dealing with that grocer. It meant quite a loss to him and about two years after he decided to inquire why she had stopped dealing with him. He of course was able to explain and she began to deal with him again. However, he had lost two years' trade. It would have indeed been well if he had inquired the reason long before, but it would have been much better if the clerk in the first place had made the sales check out in a way that would have avoided all possibility of such an occurrence.

NEW R. M. A. FORMED.

Toronto, Nov. 9.—At an enthusiastic meeting, attended by about 150 retail merchants of the Board of Trade, a retail merchant's section of the Board of Trade as formed. The members of the first executive are Wm. Dineen, Geo. Barron (grocer); Thos. Bilton; C. H. Willison, C. B. Petry, Wm. Tyrell, and W. H. Worden.

The members were selected from hats and fur, grocery, tailor, electrical fixtures, books and stationery, and drug trade.

TO PRISON FOR BURNING STORE.

Mrs. Jacob Sivitzer, Toronto, accused of setting fire to her grocery store was sent to prison for a year. A padded list of losses was submitted to the insurance company which declined to pay and lodged the charge. The blaze was found under the counter, far from matches, stove or other natural cause. Evidence showed that practically no stock had been damaged.

According to recent information, there are 12,000 acres of sugar beets in Canada this year which, it is estimated, will yield 9,000 tons of sugar of 2,240 pounds each, providing weather conditions continue favorable. Last year there were 10,500 acres in good stand and the actual yield of sugar was 7,771 tons of 2,240 pounds.

After being in operation for almost a century, the Hudson Bay Co. is closing out its store at lower Fort Garry, Man.

WHOLESALE GROCERS

MONTREAL

Begin at Once to Push Dried Fruits

Merchant Should Make This Live Issue Early in Season—Fruit Possesses Both a Nutritive and Curative Value—Methods of Display That Can be Used in Selling This Line—Prevention of Shrinkage has to be Looked After.

The selling season for dried fruits is now on. The new crop fruits have arrived and everything is ready for a good season's trade in this line. The wise dealer will not wait until the consumer's appetite for these lines has become somewhat appeased, but will at once prepare to bring it prominently before his customers.

There is nothing like pushing an article early in the season. Start as early as you can, and get all the trade you can during the entire season. There seems to be something that appeals to customers in that phrase "Our new crop dried fruits have just arrived." It is apparently the public desire to get the first of the season. The wise grocer takes advantage of it.

Have High Food Value.

The real reason that the public use any line of food, is because of the food value which it possesses. What can be said of dried fruits in this behalf? What is the food values of dried fruits? Why for ages have people eaten apple sauce with roast goose? Simply because the acids in the fruit assists in digesting the fats so abundant in this kind of food. This is a property of all fruits.

Many have the mistaken idea that fruits are taken more for their agreeable taste than for their benefit to the system. Such is not the case. It is in itself a food, a complete and full nutriment for the body; it is of essential value in assisting other foods to be digested, and is of utmost value in helping the body to eliminate waste matter.

Then, again, certain fruit possess medicinal curative values as well. It would not be out of the way to acquaint your customers with the fact—that dried fruits are both curative and nutritive.

Proper Display and Cleanliness.

Having established the value of dried fruits as a food, we may now go to other methods, which may be used to assist in their sale. Proper display is one of the most important of these. Cleanliness should be made the keynote of display, whether it be window or interior. There are merchants who display their dried fruits only under glass. This is done either by affixing a glass top on the original package, or by showing them inside a show case. The grocer should do his best to show them only in a sanitary method, because it induces sales from particular people, and most people are very particular when it comes to a matter of food.

Window display brings good results. Not alone are regular customers interested, but the passing public. However, the window must be so constructed to attract attention. That is the first essential. It must be attractive.

A Window Suggestion.

Here is a suggestion for such a window, given by a good grocery window trimmer. In the foreground, against the glass, is placed a row of package goods, for instance, seeded raisins. Some little distance farther back, is placed another row. Between these two the words "Dried Fruits" is spelled out in various lines of dried fruits. Behind this, boxes of several lines of fruits are arranged in fan shape, the boxes being nicely trimmed and tilted up, so as to show them to advantage. In each corner, built around the round part of the fan can be placed pyramids of package goods. Price cards may be used if the merchant so desires. Other ideas for display will suggest themselves to the trimmers. It is well to have some plan in mind before commencing.

Be Careful of Shrinkage.

The matter of shrinkage of dried fruits is one that should not be overlooked. Storage conditions that will make for a greater percentage of loss due to shrinkage, will also make for more rapid deterioration in this product. Worms will develop in dried fruits if the stock is carried for any great length of time in a comparatively warm temperature.

This same cause, will of course, increase shrinkage, as the merchant discovered who knocked the wooden casing from a box of dates and displayed the mass near a stove. There is a double point of advantage in showing fruits under glass. Besides increased cleanliness, it prevents a good deal of shrinkage.

Begin now to make dried fruits a live issue in the store. See if a little effort expended in this behalf will not pay. There are many grocers who are firmly convinced that it does.

WINDOW TRIMMING ASSOCIATION

Toronto, Nov. 9.—An organization of window-dressers has been formed. A convention will be held in Toronto about the second week in August, next year, when prizes for the best work in window decorating during the year preceding will be awarded, and demonstrations by the foremost window men in America will be given.

The officers of this organization are:—Hon. President, S. S. Moore, Toronto; President, H. C. Macdonald; Vice-presidents, F. Robinson, Hamilton and F. Kickley, Guelph; Secretary-treasurer, J. L. Maude, Toronto; Executive Committee, J. A. McNabb and J. McNicholl, Peterboro, and W. Andrews, St. Thomas.

The Canadian Tobacco Crop of the Past Year

The seed beds in the Canadian tobacco district in Southern Ontario this year did extra well in May and the latter part of April owing to the warm dry weather. There was a larger supply of tobacco plants earlier in the season than is generally the case.

During the very dry hot period many plantations were actually burnt up, necessitating complete re-planting. Reports state, however, that there will be a big crop owing probably to the great number of new growers and the larger acreage planted by the old growers. The crop is estimated at twelve million pounds.

In consequence of accidents to seedlings the growers in Quebec were not not able to increase the area of their cultivation as was at first proposed. The summer as a general rule was not favorable. It was only at the cost of repeated cultivation that the growers were able to obtain an average crop.

The United Grocers' Company, the new chain store system which has invaded Washington, D.C., will endeavor to get the trade and good will of the housewives of that city by selling stock in the enterprise. The leaders have figured that if a woman buys even one share of stock, she is pretty certain to trade with the company.

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE

The last bag going out meets the first bag coming in

FIVE ROSES never outstays its welcome.
Each bag is a transient visitor—
A paying guest.
It comes with a profit for you—delivers it—moves on.
Not a minute longer does it stay.
Remember, its a full profit you get from FIVE ROSES.
With nothing taken off for storage charges, long time insurance, idle capital, deterioration, and other expenses of slow-moving stuff.
FIVE ROSES never falls in love with your shelves.
Its character is active, energetic, pushful.
It simply must keep on the move — naturally a quick seller.
Regular as clockwork are your FIVE ROSES sales.
Each bag is a link of uniform satisfaction in the rapidly moving drive-chain of your permanent patronage.
And as this chain moves faster, the bags move faster through your hands.
And the movement is quickened because—
Each bag is a salesman which never misrepresents.
The language FIVE ROSES speaks is unmistakeable—the housewife hears and heeds.

Each bag from your store increases the kitchen happiness from the bag that has gone before it—and that's Goodwill.
It opens wide the sales door for the goods that will come after it—and that's Confidence.
Stretching from the mill doors to your store, there's a long line of FIVE ROSES sales waiting for YOUR door to open.
There's an equally long line of profit opportunities between many expectant housewives and you.
Let your store be the missing link.
Let it be the point where FIVE ROSES meets the user—
Where the profit is really made.
Sell FIVE ROSES—cash in on its splendid reputation, its purity, its uniformity.
Thousands of successful retailers—just like you—never knew the really profitable side of flour sales till FIVE ROSES showed the way.
This steady, clock-like profit—is business so very good that you can ignore it?
Write our nearest office—or ask your jobber.
Now is the time to be more prosperous.
Don't delay.

FROM THE FRUIT FARM TO THE FAMILY TABLE

The Daily Chronicle (London) says: "The estate on which the fruit is grown covers upwards of 3000 acres. The gathering of the morning is made into jam during the day, thus ensuring the perfect quality of the fruit. In the factories cleanliness reigns supreme."

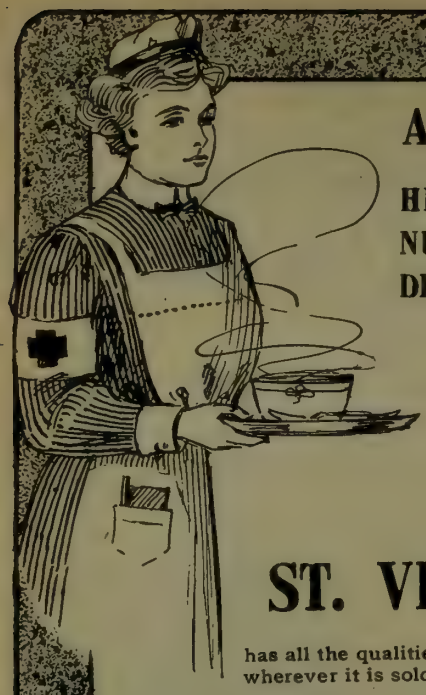
As a Winter food, Baked Beans have a very great food value, which is well understood by Canadian housewives.

Beans baked, as are the Simcoe Brand Beans, have largely taken the place of the home baked, because they are thoroughly cooked without destroying their form, and the flavoring is much more even and rich.

"Simcoe" Brand Baked Beans

are made from selected beans, cooked by the latest scientific methods; all the sauces used are carefully prepared from ripe fruit and pure spices.



The result is a perfect can of delicious beans that you can sell to your best trade and secure repeat orders.

Profitable Discussion on Store Management—Furniture and Fixture, Loss and Gain, and Suspense Accounts Dealt With—Opinions on Charging Interest on Capital Invested—Charging Equipment up to Advertising.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

On October 27 I reviewed the very remarkable statement of the concern whose further communication I have to talk about this week. You will remember that this company is doing business on a total expense of 6.63 p.c., in which connection I may say that I have just heard from one well-posted man in another section of the country who says that my stated average of expense for the entire country is too low. That instead of 14½ p.c., as I have it, the ratio is nearer 17½ p.c., and that, too, without any allowance for interest on invested capital. Take 6.63 p.c. from 17½ p.c., leaving 10.87 p.c., and you can see how one man could sell goods at less than cost plus the other man's expense and still have vastly more than the usually sufficient net profit remaining. But here is the letter :

Henry Johnson, Jr., Canadian Grocer :

Dear Sir,—In further explanation in regard to our resources, as per your edition of The Grocer under date of Oct. 27, wish to say : The item of store building of $1260 is net cost as our books show after crediting the account with what rent it might bring were we to rent it, and charging a certain per centage for depreciation in value. Of course, your idea is a good one, and correct, to hold the building and the ground as a resource at a fair value. The reason for the value of the building being low is, we may have cut too deep in the depreciation each year; but we put it low enough—at a figure that could be realized any time. As a business place it would be safe at $2000.

In regard to the suspense account, this is wiped out each year into loss and gain. Should any of the old accounts be paid later, that amount would be credited to loss and gain.

Regarding the furniture and fixtures, we deduct a certain percentage each year for depreciation in value, and charge said depreciation to loss and gain, leaving the net value as a resource. Think our loss and gain account showed that some time ago. You have evidently not understood our statement fully. The fair value of F. and F. should appear as a resource. We have in the course of many years deducted a certain percentage as depreciation in value and have it to-day low enough without a doubt.

There is one point we wish to ask. Is it customary to charge interest on capital invested ? We think this is not correct. We never heard that any corporation charges any interest against the business and at the end of the year declares a dividend of, say, 4 p.c., and another dividend of, say, 6 p.c., as interest. As a rule, if they declare 10 p. c., they declare a straight 10 p.c. dividend, or are we wrong on this point ?

In addition we beg to say that we do not deliver any goods. In fact, as stated before, this is a small country town and our trade is mainly with farmers. We think we have answered your questions fully and hope to hear more from you through the columns of The Grocer, or otherwise.

This man's ideas are clear enough and he knows just what he is doing, so it matters very little that some of his manners of expression are slightly obscure. Undoubtedly he knows what is a tangible resource, so it does not matter whether he lists those things clearly or not—so long as he has plenty of the tangible stuff any way he expresses it.

The building apparently has been handled just like furniture and fixtures ; depreciation charged against it and the principal sum thus systematically reduced, as he says, to such a point as might be realized at any time. This is O.K. so long as the concern has no intention of so realizing ; yet it would be better business to make all proper charges, and make them liberally. Then put in the property at its fair present value. If there be a surplus resulting from such treatment, such surplus should go to the credit of L and G. account.

The Suspense Account.

"Suspense" is evidently a convenient way of keeping track of such accounts as are so doubtful as not to be properly accountable as resources, and yet in this way they are kept track of so that, should unexpected payments be made, the money can be handled through the books without any disturbance of the system—going, naturally, to the credit of L. and G. account. It is a good scheme.

Advertising Equipment.

The statement about furniture and fixtures is mixed somewhere. If $150 is the present valuation, after such liberal deductions as have been annually made, then $150 is a resource : but $150 cannot be put among the resources if it is, as he says, "depreciation." I think that the $150 is what he now has left as the remaining investment in F. and F., after all the deductions. Throughout the letter "a certain per centage" is referred to. If not considered as a private matter, why not state what that percentage is ? I should like to have the ideas of such a successful man. My plan is to deduct 10 p.c. each year from the face of my F. and F. account. If I buy an entirely new appliance, I consider its character. If it is of a nature to be seen by the public, creating a favorable impression and hence having some advertising value, I charge 33 1-3 p.c. to 50 p.c. against advertising, and the remainder against F. and F. If it has no advertising value, it all goes into F. and F. If it is something to replace any outworn or discarded appliance, I charge it all to expense and credit expense with anything I may realize from the old fixture or appliance. By this treatment I feel that my F. and F. account is always automatically kept in very conservative condition, showing inside figures which I may fairly call a resource. On wagons, horses, autos, harness, and all delivery equipment, I charge off 20 p.c. annually, since here the deterioration is much greater. I should like to hear from others on this.

Here are my actual figures for the past five years :—

2123.29 less 212.33 leaves 1910.96
1910.96 less 191.09 leaves 1719.87
1719.87 less 171.98 leaves 1547.89.
1547.89 less 154.79 leaves 1393.10

Interest on Capital.

It is an open question whether interest on invested capital should be charged. Most men with whom I talk agree with me that it should be ; yet it is true that corporations, so far as I am informed, do not—that is to say, they do not call it interest. Maybe the corporation way of getting around this is the "sinking fund" or "surplus fund."

I hold that the fact that I happen to own the capital of my business does not matter—that the business is a borrower of that sum from me ; hence, must pay me the going rate, say, 6 p.c.; so I charge 6 p.c. into the expense account so that interest is paid before I show

Grocers Discuss the Dollar a Dozen Lines

Claim That Retailing Them at Ten Cents is Not Profitable—Opinions Differ as to Number of Dollar Lines on Market—What One Merchant Says About "Forcing" the Dealer—Up to Manufacturer, he Says, to Co-operate With Retailer.

(Special to The Grocer.)

Chatham, Ont., Nov. 16.—The old complaint, voiced at the Association meeting some months ago, to the effect that there is no profit whatever for the retailer in the handling of many ten-cent lines, is frequently met with among the grocers of this city.

"Apparently, the complaints made by the retail merchants in their convention haven't had the desired effect," stated one grocer this morning. "The same trouble is still met with in connection with many ten-cent lines. We are charged $1 a dozen for goods that sell at 10c each. There are jams, for instance, and some canned goods—just to specify a couple of a host of lines.

"And that isn't all. Unless we buy in exceptionally large quantities, there is freight to pay as well. Pay $1 a dozen, add, say, 5c on the dozen for freight, and with the goods retailed at $1.20, there is only 15c profit on the $1.20 sale. In addition to that, there is always some percentage of loss from breakage or deterioration—that loss is bound to occur, no matter how careful we are. When you calculate that it costs between 15 and 16 per cent. to do business, you will see that we're simply doing business in these lines for the benefit of the manufacturers. There's nothing in them for the retailer.

Cutting Out Unprofitable Lines.

"We're simply cutting out these lines wherever we can," added the merchant. "We're not pushing them. Why should we?"

Another grocer interviewed, took a more optimistic view of the situation.

"We have noticed a great improvement in regard to ten-cent lines," he stated. "In many of them the $1 a dozen price is no longer asked. The discussion at the convention appears to have done considerable good. Either that, or the difficulty is working out its own solution. Of course, in quite a few lines the grocer can secure a somewhat better price by buying in larger quantities. I very rarely purchase anything in small lots. The large buyer, therefore, would feel the force of the situation less than the small buyer.

"Nevertheless, there are still a number of lines where the $1 a dozen price holds good. I do not think the manufacturers in the long run gain anything by insisting on that price. In fact, it is a suicidal policy to pursue. There is absolutely no profit for the retailer in goods bought at $1 a dozen and sold at 10c each. Such figures simply mean that I am taking the profit from some other line of goods to help make up the loss on the ten-cent line. That's just what the whole proposition comes down to.

Where Selling Power Goes.

"And the minute a merchant realizes this fact, he does what is the only natural thing for him to do under the circumstances—he puts the $1 a dozen line of goods away back somewhere, and pushes something else. He sees that he is just keeping the $1 a dozen line as an accommodation for his customers—and he keeps them as an accommodation, accordingly, and devotes his selling energies to something which offers a fairer margin. There are some lines," he added, indicating a particular shelf. "We never mention them except when the customer asks for them. We could sell twice as many—more than twice as many—if it was worth while to push them."

Complaint is also made with regard to the close margins on higher priced lines, in which, the articles being patented, the manufacturers have a monopoly. In one instance the line, which retailed at 15c a package, cost $1.50 a dozen, plus freight.

"Doubtless," said one grocer, "there are retailers who never stop to look into this question, and who think that because they sell a lot of a certain article, they're making money on it, despite the narrow margin. But the grocer who figures the cost of doing business, and makes allowance for freight, breakages and other incidentals, looks at it from a different point of view. He feels that he is making money on one line of goods only to lose it on another, and as far as possible he cuts out the losing line.

Advertising to Consumer.

"Some of these lines are widely advertised. Their men have told me, 'We'll advertise this so much that you'll simply have to handle it, whether you want to or not.' Well, advertising is a very helpful item in business; but the manufacturer gets the best results where the retailer is cordially co-operating with him by pushing his goods. The manufacturer with his newspaper and magazine and bill board advertising, yoked to the retailer with his personal canvass of every customer, form an ideal business getting team. But the retailer isn't going to pull with the manufacturer unless he gets a fair share of the fodder. The manufacturer will triple the results from his advertising if he gets the retailer working hand in glove with him, by allowing the retailer a fair margin of profit."

The consensus of opinion among the grocers here is that the wholesalers are not to blame for the close margins, the feeling being that the difficulty is up to the manufacturers for solution.

Quebec Dealer Asks Important Question

How Can One Tell When an Egg is Fresh?—Shaking it Not Safe Method—The Candle Must be Used to Determine Amount of Air Space.

Editor Canadian Grocer :—Please tell your readers how to detect fresh eggs from other good eggs.

A. FILION.

No. 4 Fullum St., Montreal.

Editorial Note.—The method sometimes used to test the age of an egg by shaking it, is hardly dependable. The fact of the matter is, that even a comparatively fresh egg if subjected to enough force will shake. The ligaments which hold the yolk in place may thus be broken, and the egg, will of course, "shake."

"Candling" is the popular method used by dealers to ascertain the age of an egg. For this purpose, any simple lamp, provided with a reflector and if possible enclosed, all but a space in which the egg may be placed for examination is used. Thus the transparency of the egg and the make up of the interior may be seen, by placing the egg in this opening.

Every egg has at the big end an air space. This is the germinal spot. When new laid, this space is very small, and in some cases scarcely discernible. In a new laid egg, according to one expert egg candler, it will not be larger than a five cent piece. There is a constant evaporation going on in every egg, so that as the egg ages, there is a shrinkage, which makes itself apparent in the size of the air space at the big end. This is the cue to the testing of eggs.

It requires some little practice to tell just at a glance the condition of an egg. The inexperienced may need to have considerable time to clearly discern the air space at the end. However, if it has passed out of the new laid stage it will be there. One candler says that if the surface of the air space does not exceed the size of a 25 cent piece, he considers it a good egg.

Watch for the Dark Spot.

The candler, will at times, find a dark spot, which moves around when the egg is shaken. Such an egg is certainly not first-class. In stale eggs, the yolk is darker in color, and air cell is large. The first stage of decay is evidenced when the yoke has penetrated the white and settles into a dark cloudy mass.

The above method, it might be said, is perhaps more for ascertaining the condition of an egg than its age. The evaporation is, of course, much greater in warm weather than in cold, or in hot temperature than in a cold one.

For instance, an egg in cold storage for six months may not have as large an air space as another only five weeks old that has been in a warm temperature. The fact of the matter is, it is in a better condition. Thus is shown the value of cold storage in preserving the quality.

While it may take an expert accustomed to handling eggs to tell the age of one, the ordinary person can get a very good idea of it's state or condition by the above method.

Prevention of Frost on Show Windows

If the Air on the Inside and Outside of Glass Could be Kept at Equal Temperature There Would be no Frost—How to Accomplish This.

Frosted windows will soon be a difficulty with which the grocer will have to contend. That is, unless preventative measures are now taken before the season arrives. The solution of the problem will be made more easy by an explanation of just why frost does form.

The accumulation of frost upon the inner side of the plate glass is caused by the warm air of the interior laden with moisture coming in contact with the glass chilled by the freezing atmosphere on the outer side. The moisture in the air is thus condensed into steam which will gradually freeze.

Using Glycerine.

One method of keeping the frost from forming on the window, is by mixing 4 parts of cheap glycerine and 6 parts of methylated or other spirit together and rubbing over the inside of the window every couple of weeks during the winter. In very severe weather, the window may be sponged with a small quantity of alcohol.

However, this method is somewhat unsatisfactory. If the air on the inside and the outside of the glass could be kept at the same temperature there would be no frost. Some merchants box up or enclose their windows. Others already may have their windows enclosed and still have frost form. This may be due to the fact that the enclosure is not air proof and the warm air in the store escapes into this enclosure.

Use of Ventilators.

Then again there should be ventilation by openings at the top and bottom of the window, the top ones being more numerous or larger. These ventilators should be covered with fine gauze to keep out the dust.

One dealer in men's wear, known to the writer, had uncovered ventilators (holes about an inch in diameter) at the bottom. He had a display of ties in the window. One night an ingenious youth by means of a wire helped himself to a half dozen of the choicest. Thus one reason for covered ventilators.

It might be explained that these ventilators allow the warm air to pass out at the top and the cold air to come in at the bottom, thus keeping the temperature at a level with the outside air.

Caused by Cellar Dampness.

A certain dealer traced the frost on his window to the dampness of his cellar which a poorly constructed window floor allowed to come upward in contact with the window. The window floor should be as nearly air-tight as possible.

Burning Gas.

Then there are other expedients which the dealer may call into play. One plan is to insert close to the window bottom, a gas pipe perforated with minute holes about an inch apart. When lighted they warm the air and keep the inside of the window warm and clear.

Electric Fan Circulates Air.

Everyone knows that neither dew nor frost is observed on the ground on the morning after a windy night. With the air in motion, the moisture will not collect either upon the ground or glass. This same principle has been used in windows by merchants who have placed an electric fan in operation to prevent frost. One difficulty with the fans is that the agitation of the air is not uniform and therefore not always sufficient to prevent the accumulation of moisture in spots.

It is a great annoyance to a merchant to have an attractive window display obscured by frost. He should take some means to prevent it.

BACK FROM THE MERCANTILE GOLD MINE.

any net profit. Thus, when I show 24½ received 6 p.c. interest on that capital.

An Opinion That Differs.

One very well posted man tells me that I am wrong. He says: "It does not matter whether you can or cannot invest that money so as to forget it and yet regularly draw your 6 p.c. The fact is, that you have NOT so invested it, but have put it into the grocery business. Thus your net annual profit has not been 24½ p.c., with 6 p.c. interest, but it HAS been 30½ p.c. This because 30½ p.c. is what your business has yielded you. Had it not paid more than 5 p.c., then 5 p.c. would have been your earnings—hence, as the thing stands today, you have earned, and received, 30½ p.c., and it is all properly net profit. You can say that it has paid you 24½ p.c. better to leave it in groceries than it would have done to put it into bonds, but the fact will remain as I have stated it."

To Avoid Self-deception.

I continue to charge the interest, however. First, because I think it is right and good business; but more especially because I like to "bleed" and trim everything down to the bone, so as to avoid the too-common trouble of self-deception which leads so many merchants astray.

This is another moot question which I should much like to have fully discussed. I believe an exchange of views hereon will be of the utmost benefit to all of us.

OBJECTS OF NATIONAL ORGANIZATION.

The objects of the National Federation of Retail Merchants, organized recently in the United States, and which includes all the states of the union, has for its purposes:—

I.—To safeguard and serve the interests of all retail merchants.

II.—To oppose all unjust legislation inimical to retail merchants.

III.—To promote all just legislation designed for the benefit of retail merchants.

IV.—To demonstrate the necessity of retail merchants to manufacturers, wholesalers and consumers.

V.—To co-operate with all other organizations having for their object the advancement of the best interests of commerce.

SITUATION OF ROQUEFORT CHEESE.

The Roquefort cheese market in France is in an interesting condition and should be studied carefully by dealers who handle this popular line of cheese.

During July and August shippers in France were quoting Roquefort cheese ranging from 210 to 230 francs. (A franc is valued at about 18 cents.) Orders were naturally taken from Canadian and United States houses for thousands of fardeaux of the cheese at this price which was a little higher than previous years on account of the severe drough and also the foot and mouth disease among the herds. The farmers lost about 60 per cent. of their cattle and this tended to advanced the price which is now 280 francs.

Even now one cannot procure very much of the cheese as conditions practically brought on bread riots. The Chamber of Commerce in Paris tried to pass a law prohibiting export of dairy products for certain length of time. Manufacturers explained that on account of their contracts abroad it would be unfair to them to do so.

It is calculated that it will take about four years before conditions are normal again, and as the import of Roquefort cheese into Canada and the United States has grown with a marvellous pace, it will naturally affect matters here considerably.

SELLING SYRUP AT A LOSS.

From an Ontario town comes a report that one grocery dealer is selling five pound pails of a certain syrup at 25 cents. All the rest of the dealers in the same town are asking 30 cents for the same size and the same brand, and are making just a fair profit at the latter figure. As far as that one line is concerned, these dealers are working under great difficulties indeed.

The cost of this article is $2.75 per case, or, 23 cents per tin. There is the freight, unless it is purchased in 5 case lots. If this dealer will add the expenses of selling the goods, he will find he is losing money on every sale. Still he continues, and not only is he not making any profit himself, but he is spoiling the trade for the other dealers. Surely "a dog in the manger" policy.

This is the sort of merchant who is demoralizing the grocery trade, by selling goods which spells loss at every sale, at a price which other dealers cannot meet.

EARLY BORDEAUX WALNUTS.

The explanation of the arrival of this season's Bordeaux shelled walnuts at an earlier date than in former years will be of interest to the trade who like to know the why and the wherefore of the markets.

Usually, Grenoble walnuts have arrived about the 20th or 25th of November, with Bordeaux coming one or two weeks later. The latter have been on the market for a short time past because of the artificial kiln-drying process through which they have passed, instead of being left to dry through the influence of Nature, i.e., sun-dried in the fields after being gathered. In order to expedite delivery, a certain quantity have been kiln dried in their shells which were afterwards removed and this seasons first shipments were ready for the market much earlier than usual.

The price to the wholesale trade is now 6 or 7 cents more than the price for January delivery. The quality of the nuts, it is claimed, has not suffered, although it is a question how long they would continue to give satisfaction after this treatment. The method is more or less of an experiment, but its main purpose has been attained, and the crop dried in the ordinary way will be on the market in but a short time.

THE DEALER'S PROFIT.

The dealer is not a slot machine. That he uses his power to sell goods in which his interests are bound up is beyond contradiction—even if those goods are not well known to the consumer.

The reason is, he has the confidence of the people of his community. He is considered an authority on food products by his customers and his advice is taken.

In order to live, the dealer must get a fair profit. Is he likely, therefore, to oppose his own interests by stocking, displaying, advertising and handing out those goods which do not bear him a just profit, turnover considered? Manufacturers have found this out in many cases to their sorrow. While at first they may make some success and a good margin of profit, there can be no permanent success without the expenditure of huge sums of money in a campaign to "force" the dealer.

The Canadian retailer is as big and broad a class as exists anywhere in the community. Only the weaker section of the trade will conform to the manufacturer's wishes when he tries to force it to sell at a loss. The manufacturer who allows a fair profit to the dealer, who co-operates with him in every way, and who interests his customers in his product, is the one who reaps permanent advantages. When such goods are asked for, the dealer has no right to substitute if their quality is known, but he certainly cannot be supposed to get behind any product the manufacturer of which uses him merely as a tool to hand over the goods when called upon.

Let all retailers assert their rights in this connection and secure their just dues.

SEASON FOR BEEF EXTRACTS AND COCOA.

It is now time to change the goods you have been suggesting over the telephone and likewise over the counter. It is taken for granted, that every grocer employs this method, and now that the seasons are changing, it is necessary to talk fall and winter goods, leaving summer lines for next year.

One grocer known to the writer, has been quietly calling the attention of his customers to the change in the kind of goods now seasonable, even though they realized it as well as he. But it presents the opportunity of suggesting beef extracts, or cocoa, or rolled oats, or flour, or one of a great many articles that will now sell with little effort.

This grocer stated he found the average customer's reply along this line. "Yes, I believe I do need a package of that (or a bottle of something else), I had better take it." It is the wise grocer, who at least keeps up with the times.

JUDGING THE VALUE OF CLERKS.

There are many points which have to be taken into consideration by a merchant in judging the value of a clerk. Surface appearances are liable to be made the basis of judgment by many dealers, but the good business man will look beyond that, if he wishes to accurately gauge in dollars and cents the value of a certain clerk to him.

For instance, we find a clerk who is quick at weighing and wrapping parcels, but cases are known where it would be much better if he were slower and more accurate. He works quickly, but perhaps, he does so at a loss in profit through inaccurate weighing.

The amount of sales of employes will not give a correct idea of their worth. It is not always the clerk with the largest sales who is the most valuable. The clerk with the largest sales, who builds for future business as well as present, and who combines with his large sales, a degree of carefulness, which means the maximum of profit, and the minimum of leaks connected with such sales, is the valuable asset of the sales force.

SECURING EFFICIENT HELP.

"How many people do you discharge for inefficiency in the course of a year?" was the question put by The Grocer to the head of a busy section in a large store recently. His reply was somewhat unexpected. "During the present year," said he, "I have only had to discharge three people for downright inefficiency. They were likely-looking people when they came, and in spite of the interest that we exercised in their behalf, they went wrong chiefly on little things that lost customers. A manager feels his responsibility in such cases for he likes to feel that he can depend upon himself in making selections for his staff.

"Where so many are employed, vacancies will occur from uncontrollable causes, but we have many applicants. General appearance, manner, personality, evident temperament, the person's idea of employment, his or her ideals and numerous little things aid decision. It is often the case that a man's reason for leaving his former position stamps him as an uncertainty or one likely to shift on the slightest whim, and that fact alone is a good key to his efficiency

"There was a time when the head of the firm, on hearing of a new employe, approached him in the role of a customer enquired for some article, and based his own opinion on the way the man waited upon him. But the business is too large for that now. We list all applicants and keep a record of particulars concerning them as one means of aiding decision. Much depends upon the manager himself as to development and continued efficiency of an employe. By his attitude, his actions, his interest, his tact or the want of it he can often make or mar a young salesperson's career."

THE COUNTRY DEALER'S CHANCE.

It may not be necessary to point out to those grocers who are close to a farming district that there is a splendid opening for them now in the handling of new laid eggs. The large cities find it next to impossible to secure supplies. There is the usual demand and even if the price is reaching the abnormal there are many purchasers of new laid eggs no matter what the price may be.

In addition, there is no difficulty in making arrangements with city firms who would be glad to accept anything the grocer has to offer in this line. Many grocers are already doing all that is possible in this regard but there may be some who have not yet taken it up.

CRANBERRIES THE YEAR ROUND.

Cranberry sauce is now to be a possibility all the year round. Another acquisition to the list of evaporated fruits has been made. This year marks the introduction of evaporated cranberries to Canadian markets.

They are evaporated in a somewhat similar manner to other fruits and it is claimed for them that they retain all the medicinal and food qualities possessed by the fresh article.

THE WESTERN WHEAT CROP SITUATION.

Considerable apprehension at the present time is prevailing throughout the three western provinces as a severe snow-storm has passed over the entire west, and anywhere from three to eight inches of snow has fallen. The weather has also become extremely cold and from many points temperatures of from 10 to 20 below zero are reported.

As is well known, a large quantity of grain is yet to be threshed in Alberta and Saskatchewan. The arrival of this snow-storm will, therefore, have a very detrimental effect on prevailing conditions. During the last three months considerable stacking has been indulged in, and while this should have a good effect, it will doubtlessly have the reverse, as there are few in western Canada who know how to stack properly, and the result is that stacks have been built in a very loose way. Snow flurries will, therefore, be able to descend between the loose sheaves and the result is that if a thaw occurs ice will be formed and the grain will start germinating in the stack. There are also many thousands of bushels out in the field in shocks to be threshed.

Many, in spite of the snowfall and cold weather, have been threshing during the last two days, and this method seems advisable, as the grain will be marketed at once, and high prices are prevailing, so that in spite of the fact that the grade will be seriously damaged, a fair price will yet be secured. If the grain is left till some time later there is a chance that a greater loss will be sustained.

Dealers and clerks are urged to remember The Grocer's Christmas Window Dressing and Ad.-Writing Contest, announcement of which has been made fully in our last two issues. Make your plans early to enter these contests. Prepare a good, practical, selling window, and let us have a good photograph—one that will do justice to the window—before the last day of the year.

A Plea for Better Working Conditions

One Dealer Who is Firm Believer in Early Closing—Time Something was Done—Willing to Give Time and His Share of Money to Place Grocery Business on Better Basis.

By J. L. Casey.

I have always taken a great interest in your articles dealing with early closing amongst retail grocers. While I am not attached to any of the present organizations or movements, aims of which are to establish an earlier and more uniform hour for the closing of retail stores, I have taken action on my own account, closing at 6.30 p.m.

I have reason to feel assured from my experiences of the past two winters, and the words of encouragement I have already received this season, as well as new business from numerous residents of this vicinity, that I will reap a great gain financially as well as physically.

Eight Stores in Three Blocks.

On College street, in vicinity of my store, we have eight grocery stores within three blocks, something which very few sections of Toronto can boast of. Two years ago I made an effort to have these grocers agree upon a uniform hour for closing during the winter season. It was agreed upon, some closing at 6.30 p.m. and some at 7 p.m. However, it was only a short time till some of the number failed to keep their word. Last winter a few closed at 6.30 p.m. This season, so far, with the exception of one who has stood by the agreement all through, they are all remaining open at night.

Since I began early closing I have had people, who are not my customers, come in and strongly express their approval of the movement.

Improve Working Conditions.

The working hours and conditions of every other line of work in the city have been improved during the past few years, and in my opinion it is about time we would do something for ourselves. We have been slaves long enough, and unnecessarily so. A little less greed and more confidence in ourselves, is what we need, and these can only be brought about by more recreation for grocers and employes. Men in all other lines of business have time for recreation, and when I find there is no time for it in the grocery business I will get out of it and go at something else.

I will gladly give my time and my share of money in support of any action that will bring about shorter hours for grocers.

The Markets---Rice Advances Again

Goes up Aonther 10c per Cwt., Making a Total Advance of 75c in Past Three Months — Valencia Raisins Hold Strong Position—Tea Has Been Firming up—Goods Being Rushed Out Before Close of Navigation—Collections Generally Fair.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Rangoon Rice—Up ten cents.

Carolina Rice—Slight reduction.

Valencia Raisins—Advancing.

Currants—Up ½c per lb.

Montreal, Nov. 16.—There are a number of features to the market this week that should receive the attention of the trade. Another advance in the price of Rangoon rice illustrates the strength of this market. It has been pointed out in these columns in past reports that conditions in countries of production of rice warranted high markets and it is to be hoped that the trade acted when the first signs of an advance were noticed. Just now, there is no sign of weakness in eastern rice market.

Advances in dried fruits, currants and Valencia raisins particularly, just as the new goods are arriving will be at least gratifying to those who gave their orders early. In the primary market raisins are four shillings higher than the figures quoted but a short time ago. Some houses report a heavy demand for figs and Malaga raisins. One wholesaler could handle fifty per cent. more figs than ordered, and stocks were sold before the fruit arrived and orders were as heavy as usual. Some Malaga raisins are also cleaned out with some jobbers.

It was learned that in several cases, apricots, pears and peaches are being passed over this year owing to prices. In spite of everything, however, it looks as if Christmas trade is going to hold its own. In fact, there is an exceedingly heavy business passing and though dried fruits are inclined to be high there are no indications that the Christmas cake and pudding are going to be skimped in the matter of dried fruits.

Sugar.—This market seems to be marking time. There is nothing new reported for the week. No ground has been gained, but there has been another slight indication of a weakening in the situation. It is not marked, but a sugar reduction seems to be more and more merely a matter of time.

Dried Fruits.—A feature of the market is general upward tendency noticeable in a number of the new fruits of the season. To begin with, Valencia raisins and currants have been advanced ½ cent per pound, and some of the jobbers are sold out of figs. In regard to currants the situation is represented as being firm. New stocks have arrived but a combination of conditions have already resulted in higher prices. Valencia raisins for instance show an advance of one cent a pound in some lines but jobbers are not probably taking a full profit. However, an advance of one-half cent is a reality. Currants are also higher to the same extent. Some lines of Malaga raisins are already exhausted in some houses and figs are entirely gone with others. It is generally admitted that those who have bought sparingly or who have deferred purchases until now will have to pay the higher prices and the future appears very firm.

It must be remembered that wholesalers have not curtailed their purchases and at that rate of sales up to the present retailers seem to have disposed of their goods or are likely to. Travelers report a certain anxiety among the trade. Those who have given their orders are particularly eager to receive their supplies because of the market conditions, evidently desiring to be absolutely sure of their goods.

Then those who did not buy early want to order now, but in the face of this supplies are not coming in as quickly as they should. Hence the reason for a certain uneasiness noticed here and there. A representative of one large house states they are not handling evaporated peaches, pears and apricots because of the high prices.

Beans and Peas.—Present day market conditions are well illustrated in this department. Consider the following comparisons: Split peas have usually sold at about $2.25 per bag of 98 lbs. To-day the jobbing trade are receiving $4 a bag. Whole peas that in former years were quoted at about $1.30 are now bringing $1.80 wholesale per bus. of 60 lbs. Pot barley is now $3.60 compared to $2.25 of former years. Pearl barley is $4.75 as against $3.25 and white beans that used to sell all the way from $1.65 to $2 last year are now worth $2.55 a bus. Yellow beans that are used for soup alone cannot be purchased. There may be a few bushels here and there but they are not being offered the trade. It might also be remarked that lima beans are selling at from 8 to 8½ cents, an advanced price. These general advances have resulted from light production during the past year, and the old time pea and bean soup is, like many other household staples, going to be much higher than usual during the coming winter. It is reported rather difficult to receive supplies and the situation is not exactly to the liking of the jobbing trade.

Rice and Tapioca.—Rangoon rices have been advanced ten cents per hundred pounds following the advances of the past few months. The market is firm at the rise and it is evident that the first reports were all too true. There is no weakness reported in this eastern rice market. Carolina rice shows a slight reduction and is quoted at from 8 to 9 cents a pound. It is only a year or so since the Carolina rice sold at 12 cents a pound and the gradual reduction is explained by the increased production the result of rice cultivation of late years in Texas. The lower price of Southern rice should bring it more before consumers of ordinary means.

Canned Goods.

Montreal.—In a general sense there is but little news in this market. Canned goods are firm and those grocers who have not yet received deliveries from their jobbers are anxiously waiting for them. There is going to be a large output of pink salmon this year according to all accounts. This is usually put up last and will not be received until some time in December. It is expected here that prices will be lower than they have been because of the heavy supplies. Possibly pinks will be down to ten cents retail. However, that remains to be seen, the general scarcity of the better grades being still a factor. The pinks are a wholesome fish although there is lacking the color of the better salmon. It should find a larger sale than ever this year among those who have been unable to follow the better grades through their higher prices.

Toronto.—There are no special features present at the moment in canned goods. Prices are generally well maintained. Jobbers are now busy in getting things straightened up, when they will be able to tell with a greater degree of accuracy just where they stand in regard to supplies.

Advices from Seattle say that packers regard this as one of the best seasons for canned salmon ever known, but on this side of the line, things are different. The total pack in British Columbia amounted to 750,000 cases.

Toronto, Nov. 16.—In the amount of new business, there is perhaps not so much briskness present this week in wholesale circles. However, jobbers are busy in getting out goods which have been ordered ahead. Some firms have been particularly busy this week in rushing out goods that must go before the close of navigation. Collections are generally termed fair.

There are still many complaints from wholesalers of slow delivery of goods by the railroads, putting them to considerable inconvenience.

Sugar.—The sugar market at the moment is holding fairly steady. Indeed European beet quotations are somewhat higher than a week ago. Raws in New York are however shaping more towards the level of quotations for new crop cane. The price of refined in New York has been reduced considerably in order to conform to the raw sugar market, but there has been no change in Canadian prices. The fact of the matter is that United States prices have to come down a good deal in order to reach the level of Canadian figures. When local prices will be affected is a matter of conjecture. Trade is normal to light, as high prices are no doubt curtailing demand to some extent.

Syrup and Molasses.—The cooler weather is beneficial to the syrup trade and those retailers who are featuring it are finding a ready response from customers. This briskness is passed on to the wholesale trade. Molasses show no change in price. Present quotations seem to be well within the ideas of wholesalers. Perhaps the trade in this line is normal for the season, but the same big demand found in other districts is not present here.

Dried Fruits.—With but an odd exception the market on dried fruits both here and at primary points holds a position of steadiness. Indeed this steadiness in some cases has turned into considerable strength. Valencia raisins are prominent in this regard. Since the opening prices, values in the primary market have advanced about 2½ cents per pound. Locally the situation is one of firmness. Currants are also holding steady.

Peels are also quite high in price. Supplies do not seem to be overly large. Citron is held higher this week at 15 to 17 cents.

Prunes at coast points are strong as are also apricots and peaches. Seeded raisins, however, continue to ease off.

The first steamer with dates has not arrived as speedily as expected, being detained by stormy weather on the Atlantic. One broker pointed to the increased use of dates in this country as well as the fact that they are a summer as well as a winter seller now, this being made possible by the package article. He reported a big demand from May until November, whereas previously there was little or no demand during these months.

Tea.—Tea values continue on the ascendancy and this has been more marked of late. A local tea firm reports that on Oct. 14 the tea market in London, Colombo and Calcutta advanced a full half pence per pound. On the 21st, it went one farthing higher, while at last Tuesday's auction it advanced a further half pence, making a two and a half cent a pound increase in three weeks. "Before this last half pence advance," says this firm, "London circulars said that teas were higher than they have been for 25 years."

The fall is coming on early in India, thus adversely affecting the quality of the tea produced from now on, which will also add somewhat to the firmer tendency.

Another report says: "Finest tippy sorts, now in much smaller compass than was the case at the end of September, are, in a great number of instances, 1d. to 2d. per lb. dearer than then. In some cases, invoices now selling are literally pence per pound inferior for tip and quality, but are realizing almost identical prices."

Coffee.—While coffee options continue to shoot up and down, the spot market both here and at the big coffee centres holds a steady position. There are no special features.

Chicory is considerably higher at present than in normal times and prices are well maintained. This commodity comes from Europe. A month or so ago, opening prices lower than had been ruling were named, but before they really reached buyers they were cancelled, and a figure well maintaining present prices was named. Thus is shown the state of the market.

Rice and Tapioca.—The strength of the rice market was well pointed out in our last issue. This week an advance of 10 cents per cwt. in Rangoon and standard B is announced. Those who followed the advice given in past few months will have found it profitable. Since the middle of August there has been an advance of 75 cents per cwt.

Trade is fair considering the present high prices.

The yield of walnuts this year is said to be quite good and prices will be a little lower than last year. Brazils are scarce and high, being several cents above the price ruling at this time last year. Peanut prices have been issued and while they are just slightly higher than last year's opening price, they are below the values that have been ruling during the past few months.

MANITOBA MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Syrup.—Weak.

Molasses.—Steady.

New Figs.—Supplies arrived.

Winnipeg, Nov. 16.—During the last three days a severe storm has passed over the entire West leaving a coating of anywhere from five to six inches of snow throughout the country. The result is, that threshing operations have been seriously handicapped, and considerable loss is looked for by those farmers who have grain yet to be threshed. In spite of these conditions, however, trade in general lines continue to be active, and shipments are going out steadily just as usual. Practically all the rivers are frozen over, and sleighing will be general in a short while, many waiting at the present time to see whether winter really intends to set in or not, at present.

Travelers have been able to move quite freely, however, as the storm was not severe enough to delay trains and block roads, and as a result, those farmers who had their grain threshed during the fine weather have been hauling their wheat to the elevators, and taking home large supplies from the grocery store. The result is, that the tone of the trade is healthy, and many of the notes which were held over a month or two by wholesalers have been taken up, and it would appear as if they will all be looked after. However, one or two firms report that their collection department has not by any means cleared up past debts yet.

Sugar.—The sugar market continues to remain weak, and the reduction in prices which was expected last week has not taken place. Stocks of sugar in the city are low, and as one wholesaler stated this morning, jobbers could not afford to load up with supplies with the market in the present condition. The reduction is looked forward to daily, and is confidently expected that they will be prevailing next week.

Syrup and Molasses.—There is nothing new in these lines, prices remaining steady, and showing no signs of declines as yet. The demand is reported to be holding firm, and while no exceptional boom is expected this year, it is the opinion that the increased trade will take place in these lines.

Dried Fruits.—New figs have arrived on the market and are being offered at fairly firm prices, namely the 10 cent basis. The quality is exceptionally good and the wholesalers report that a good trade should be noticed in these lines. Other lines remain steady, the decline in new prunes having not taken place as yet, while the Valencia raisins are still quoted at the $1.75 basis.

Evaporated Apples.—Conditions remain unchanged from prices quoted last week, and just a steady trade is being done in this line. Prices are still on the basis of 11 and 11½ cents per pound.

Brazil Nuts.—Owing to a shortage of crops at the source, Brazil nuts have advanced this week to 18 cents. The stocks are fairly low and the demand is being increased with the Christmas season drawing near. It is expected that a large trade will be done this year. Shelled walnuts are also in good demand, and are being quoted at the present time on the 36 cent basis.

Coffee.—The coffee market is perhaps strongest of any prevailing at present time, as it shows absolutely no signs of declining. Standard Rio is rather scarce, and is quoted as high as 17½ to 18 cents by some dealers. The prevailing price, however, may be taken as the former. All other coffee lines are strong and further advances are looked for.

Beans and Peas.—The market is easy this week, but no reduction has taken place in prices prevailing last week. As stated before, stocks in the city are large enough to supply the demand for the present time at any rate, and until these begin to decrease in size to any extent, it is not expected that any tightening of the market will be noticed.

WINNIPEG.

Fresh Fruit.—Several new lines have been offered trade during last week, including California navel oranges at $5 per case, Montana crab apples at $2 to $2.25 per case, Malaga grapes, $6 per keg; Washington pears, $4.25 per keg; and Florida grape fruit at $6.50 per case. Some other lines show sharp advances with the arrival of snow, Valencia oranges going up to 50 cents to 75 cents per case. Cape Cod cranberries are off the market, but their place has been taken by Jersey cranberries at $12 per barrel.

Green Vegetables.—This week shows a general advance of about 5 cents per dozen in native grown lines that are on the market. The supplies of many home grown vegetables have been completely exhausted, and, as a result, imported goods are taking their places. Those lines which have been brought in from the south, are mint, onions, lettuce, head lettuce, and cucumbers, and consequently prices have advanced considerably. The greatest change is noticed in mint. Lettuce also shows an increase from 25 cents to 40 cents per dozen. Other lines show similar advances. Celery is of course in great demand, and between two to three car loads are brought in every week in Winnipeg from Michigan. This is causing considerable attention, and the government, it is reported, will endeavor to do something in the near future to encourage the growth of this line, as ideal soil can be found within a few miles of Winnipeg.

Potatoes.—Although not actually quoted higher, there is a stiffer feeling in the potato market, and receipts in car lots are limited. The sharp weather which arrived last week caught many cars in transit, and as a result they have had to be picked over, resulting in severe shrinkage. Shippers who do not like to be caught like this are consequently a little nervous, and receipts during the last few days have been light. If the cold weather has set in definitely, it will no doubt have the effect of advancing prices.

Butter.—Creamery butter has taken an advance of 4 cents per pound during last two weeks, and Manitoba fresh made creamery bricks are now quoted at 34 cents per pound, and boxes at 33 cents. Manitoba storage boxes are quoted at 29 to 30 cents. Supply of milk is inadequate to demand, and as a result, several hundred gallons are brought in daily from Minneapolis. Supply of dairy butter is also very light, but prices have not advanced, quotations being :—Strictly No. 1 delivered Winnipeg, 21 cents per pound; No. 2 delivered Winnipeg, 18 cents; No. 3, 15½ cents per pound; and No. 4, 13½ cents per pound.

Eggs.—Eggs have also advanced; 25 cents per dozen now being offered to shippers. Guaranteed strictly fresh laid are retailing at 60 cents per dozen in the city, and will go higher if a severe winter prevails.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Nov. 16.—Not for many months has the market been so quiet as has been the case during past week, when practically no changes of importance took place, with exception of anticipated advance in molasses. Several weeks ago a local wholesaler predicted that before Christmas molasses would be selling at 40 cents, and his prophecy has been realized more than a month ahead of the allotted time. It has become known that stocks are much lower than was thought at first, and because of this, an increase of 4 cents has taken place during the week. In casks, fancy Barbados is now bringing 40 cents, and wholesalers are none too willing to dispose of more than two or three casks at less than 41 cents. On account of scarcity of Barbados, it is believed quite possible that before next February or March, when new molasses comes on the market, further increase will have been made.

LIKE COLLECTION DEPARTMENT.

British Columbia Dealers Getting After the Slow Pays.

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 16.—(Special)—The collection department, established in connection with the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association, is proving quite a success. Lots of business is being turned in and depart ment will be self-sustaining, besides giving better returns to the dealers. This is one of the best propositions that the association has taken up, they claim. In the first place, before the account is turned in, notice is sent to the customer, and the fact that official collection will be made, with perhaps an added cost, often influences prompt payment. With a central department, too, the work can be done much better and cheaper, and a tab kept on those who do not pay.

This department will be of great assistance to association work, and R. D. Dinning, the secretary, is making an effort to have the other retail dealers send in their lists of collection. This will mean that at the central office will be the names of all those who buy from both hardware dealers and grocers, and who do not pay promptly. Mr. Dinning is secretary of both the Grocers' and Hardwaremen's Associations, and this joint list will include most of the people in the city who are prone to let merchants wait, while they spend money in something else.

The Retail Grocers' Association here is active, and that such good work is being done, is causing the merchants to take an interest in it. Since Thomas Duke has retired from the presidency, owing to his having sold out his business, W. Walsh has been elected to the principal chair.

WHOLESALERS TALK TO RETAILERS.

London, Ont., Nov. 16—(Special)—The Retail Grocers' Association held a successful smoker last Wednesday night in Duffield Hall. Speeches were made by a number of wholesale grocers, including Wm. Turnbull of Edward Adams & Co., Jno. Dillon, of A. M. Smith & Co., Jno. Garvey, and A. McPherson, of Elliott, Marr & Co.

They explained the folly of price-cutting, and urged the retailers to have more confidence in each other. Cyril Hayes, former secretary of the association, gave a recitation. Solos were given by Messrs. Drennan and Webb. President McLeod was in the chair. Harry Ranahan moved a vote of thanks to the wholesalers for their good advice. Thos. Shaw in seconding it, urged the grocers to turn out to all the meetings and discuss all the numerous grievances that crop up from time to time.

Montreal Traveler on Early Closing

Cites Case Where a Grocer is Being Discriminated Against—Closes Two Nights When Other Merchants Selling Similar Goods May Keep Open.

(By T. H. H.)

A down-town Montreal grocer discussed the early closing situation, so far as he is concerned, with the writer recently, and the conditions with which he has to contend are undoubtedly common to quite a number of the trade. He cited some experiences to illustrate the unfairness of compulsory early closing in particular cases. His store is closed on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. A few doors along the street is a nameless sort of a shop in which is sold cooked meats, canned goods, pickles, olives and cakes and confectionery. On the same side of the street at the corner is a Greek "confectionery" store. Here one may buy grapes, oranges, bananas, figs, dates, chocolates, nuts of all kinds and other lines the grocer carries. Across the street a restaurant sells all kinds of liquids, but this grocer states early closing cuts off his chance of securing share of this trade. Then there is the small butcher shop which remains open as long as the proprietor desires and retails butter, eggs, canned goods, pickles, bacon, ham and other articles.

"About the only articles these stores do not handle are the dirty and heavy goods," said the grocer in question. "They do not carry molasses, coal oil, potatoes, sugar, soap, etc."

The authorities have accepted this grocer's license money to sell ales, wines and liquors, and yet he declares he must close his store on certain nights because he is a grocer. The Greek candy store, the provision man, the butcher and the provision-confectioner are all permitted to remain open. The grocer alone must close.

This situation may not strike upon a responsive chord in those grocers whose business is finished at six-thirty. Some of the trade have little or no demand at night, and it would simply be a waste of money to keep lights burning for a few straggling customers. There is, however, the man who puts quite a dependance upon the custom that comes his way after six o'clock. In the city these grocers are more numerous than one might imagine.

The writer strongly favors early closing, but it is scarcely fair to legislate against the grocer and permit this horde of nameless shops to sell the very goods that form a large percentage of the grocer's stock and trade.

New Laid Eggs are Scarce and High

Production Small and Prices Soaring—Storage Stocks in Good Demand—Live Hogs Still Holding Firm Tendency Under Limited Supplies—Lard and General Provisions in Good Demand—Butter Holds Steady—Export Demand Has Fallen off.

If the housewife wishes to keep the cost of Christmas cake within reasonable amount, her recipe must call for only a limited number of eggs. This commodity at all centres has been advancing with marked rapidity for the new laid article, and now on the threshold of the big baking season, the price is not only high, but article itself is scarce. With the moulting season for the egg producers not quite past, the production is small. Storage stocks being more reasonable in price are in good demand, and the supplies laid away in past months are being well cut into.

Live hogs continue with the hardening tendency in price they assumed last week. Quotations are generally a little higher under more stinted supplies, and steady demand from packers. The high price of feed is said to have induced free deliveries of September and October, and there are those who hint this will be shown by small receipts later on.

The demand for provisions is on the whole fair. True, it is, that smoked goods are not getting the attention which was theirs in past months, but this is well made up by increased activity in other lines, most noticeably the heavier pork products. Lard is in good demand. This is attributed partly to the high price of butter, and partly to increased cooking, which the housewife at this season of the year indulges in.

Butter is holding a position of steadiness. Receipts are at present on moderate scale. In some districts the yield has been slightly increased, due to the closing down of cheese factories. The demand from England has fallen off of late on account of difference in values existing, but there is good domestic trade.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—Slightly lower prices for pure lard are quoted this week. Lard is in good demand, a sign of more activity in the pantries throughout the country. Some lines of hams are a little lower also. Sales in these lines are not as heavy as earlier in the season, but are made up by heavier demand for pork, which during the winter is a leading "seller."

Provisions.—About only feature of change in evidence this week is further tightening in live hog prices. Values this week are 40 cents per cwt. higher than a week ago, country point quotations ruling at $6.40, as compared with $5.75, but two weeks ago. This is only reflection of the change in size of arrivals during this period. Prices are steady at present figures.

Provision prices are unchanged. The demand for smoked meats is still slacker. On the whole, trade is fair, lard at present moving quite free.

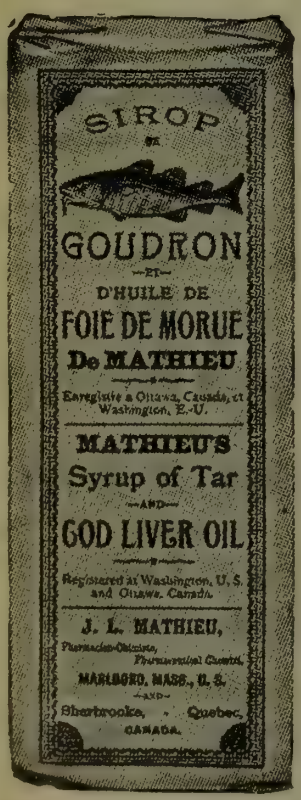
CURRANT SITUATION FROM HEADQUARTERS

Strong Demand This Season—More Than 8,000 Tons Sent Abroad in Excess of This Time Last Year—Probable Size of the Crop.

Patras, Greece, Nov. 1.—Owing to the short crop of currants and an unusually strong demand from abroad—so far more than 8,000 tons have been shipped this season in excess of last year's by this time—the currant market has been almost throughout the season firm with prices advancing.



A peculiar feature this season is that owing to the specific weight of the currant on account of the big drought being particularly light and varying in the different districts, the size of the crop is not yet ascertainable, and may not be until the beginning of next year. Opinions vary between 148,000 and 160,000 tons. Adding thereto about 10,000 tons old stocks, and deducting about 40,000 tons to represent 35 per cent. retention tax on probable export of 115,000 tons, would mean a disposable quantity of about 118,000 to 130,000 tons, and of course with so small a crop the difference between the highest and lowest estimate is very material and large enough to cause two extreme effects.

It will depend upon the actual size of the crop and the demand shown abroad, what course our market will adopt in the future. Whilst after the enormous shipments made the market here may calm down somewhat, it seems to us that, if so, a re-improvement could be only a question of time.

THE STRONG TEA MARKET.

"Current reports on this market from India are exceedingly unfavorable," says a report on tea from London, England. "The output last month is considerably shorter of what was expected, and the estimate for this month is now eight million pounds, as against fifteen millions as expected. This is due to severe frost setting in, and it is feared that this season will fall much short of last year's returns. There are hardly any stocks in this country (England) and very little stocks abroad, and yet the demand is steadily increasing for Ceylon and India tea."

Export Trade in Flour Lacks Briskness

Canadian Millers Unable to Compete With British Millers Who are Getting Big Price for Offals and Can Offer Flour at a Lower Price—Home Trade Good—Wheat Market Shows Little Change —Visible Supplies are Increasing—Argentine Crop a Big Factor in World's Situation.

A good healthy state of affairs that should be pleasing both to retailers and millers apparently rules at the present time in domestic trade of both flour and cereals. The export side of business unfortunately is not so gratifying to the milling trade. In truth, trade in this direction is quite slow, dealers here contending that it is impossible to compete in prices with British millers, who are getting such a high price for their bran and shorts that they can underprice Canadian exporters on flour. Mills are still sold considerably ahead on rolled oats and are running full time in turning out the commodity.

The movements of wheat quotations on the different markets have not been in unison of late. At the beginning of the week Eastern Canadian markets weakened to some extent. This was in accordance with Liverpool, which also eased off, the favorable report from Argentine being the chief factor in bringing this about. Although with an undertone of nervousness, Winnipeg held steady while the Chicago market turned upward under the apparent smallness of the increase in visible supplies.

The Canadian visible wheat last week increased by 3,231,000 bushels as against an increase of 1,253,000 a year ago. Total Canadian visible wheat now is 13,965,000, against 13,222,000 a year ago. The wintry weather may possibly interfere with the receipts this week.

The Canadian supply of wheat is not being worked off for export with the rapidity that some expected. The Argentine crop is expected to have a considerable bearing on the world's situation. Conditions just at the present are favorable, but much will depend on what happens between now and its final ingathering near six weeks hence.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—Business is at its busiest. The market is reported steady with a heavy country demand. Mills have been working seven days a week a steady grind to supply flour and cereals for the present seasonable trade. There are no changes in prices to report.

Cereals.—Rolled oats are in good demand and it is stated that mills are working as much overtime as possible to provide supplies. In [illegible] the many other kinds of breakfast foods, rolled oats seems to have lost no ground, particularly at this season. There is possibly a lighter demand during the summer months, but throughout the fall, winter and spring there is as much business as can be handled. The market is steady and prices remain unchanged.

TORONTO.

Flour.—Local trade in flour is considered quite good. Retailers who are pushing it find season favorable for its sale. The demand from millers is in proportion. Export trade is, however, dull, as prices are not on shipping basis. Local millers say they cannot compete with British millers on account of the remunerative price that the latter are getting for offals.

The wheat market is just a little easier in accordance with bearish tendencies abroad. The easiness is not, however, marked.

The movement of Ontario wheat is still slow. There is a considerable range of prices from 86 to 90 cents. Prices on Ontario flour are, therefore, quite firm.

Navel Oranges Make Their Debut

First California Navels of Season Appear on Canadian Markets —Big Yield Expected in That State—Cranberries Moving Upward—Florida Grapefruit Coming Along Freely — Firmer Tendency in General Potato Situation—Firmer in Manitoba—Ontario Crop Short—Big Demand for New Brunswick Stock.

Advance shipments of California navel oranges have made their appearance on Canadian markets. Heavy shipments as suggested last week will not be in evidence until close on first of the month. Quality of the first arrivals is reported fair. They are a little later than last year, especially in the southern portion of the state. Florida oranges are moving out well.

Information from one source says that the crop of California oranges this year is expected to be nearly as large as last season, which was far in excess of other years. That is, present indications point to a heavy yield, unless unusually adverse weather conditions should prevail. The total shipment of oranges from California during the past year amounted to 39,630 cars, as compared with 28,317 cars the previous season.

Cranberries are soaring in price. Early in the season, reports from Cape Cod, the big producing section in the United States, indicated a big yield. Frost, however, considerably reduced the production, and now they are scarce and firm in price. Nova Scotia has this year been sending out a nice quality of cranberry, but supplies from that province are small. There is a duty of 25 per cent. on those coming from across the line.

The general position in potatoes is one of firmness, and prices at most centres have been taking on that tendency. Manitoba reports receipts more stinted of late, while cold weather has interfered with shipment. Crop in Ontario this year was exceedingly small, and does not measure nearly up to the demand. Already there have been large imports from New Brunswick and they still require to continue. New Brunswick reports big shipments westward, and one report says there is a feeling there will be no difficulty in disposing of the surplus of the potato crop. Dealers at the moment at any rate are holding firmly.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—The market is rather uneventful. Apples are a feature of the trade, with quite a quantity of grapes selling. Oranges are beginning to come to the front. Other lines are in fair demand, but there is nothing unusual in the trade. Cranberries are receiving quite a share of attention.

Vegetables.—There is a good general demand, but only a small percentage of the vegetable trade passes through the hands of wholesalers. TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—First shipments of California oranges have arrived. A few car loads of fair quality stock came in this week. They are quoted at $4 to $4.50. Floridas are selling well just at the present time. Under the larger arrivals, there is a slightly easier tendency in lemons. Cold weather should help the sale of this line. Cranberries are firm and scarce, with prices getting to an almost prohibitive figure. They are now quoted at $10 and higher per barrel.

Vegetables.—It will be remembered we mentioned in our last week's market that potatoes were firming up. The hint was well warranted. This week prices are about 10 cents per bag higher. New Brunswick are quoted at $1.40 to $1.45 and Ontario at $1.30 to $1.35. As stated before, crop in Ontario this year was small. Indeed, in some sections only about one-third the quantity of the previous year is reported. Large quantities have been coming in from New Brunswick, and in that province prices are steadily moving upward. The majority of dealers here look for a continuance of strength. "I look for potatoes to reach $2 before spring," said one dealer. That is one opinion of the market. Others have less bullish views.

Sweet potatoes are also slightly firmer this week. Shipments of Valencia onions are not quite so free.

Trade in general lines is fair.

Cold Weather Beneficial to Fish Trade

First Wave of Winter Weather Improves Sales of Fish—Handled Easier and Induces Dealers to Buy More Heavily—Advent Close at Hand and Dealers Are Preparing for It and the Winter Season's Business—Oysters Moving Freely.

The colder weather prevailing throughout the Dominion has been beneficial to the fish trade. It makes handling of this line easier work, and dealers are induced to buy more heavily, while others who at other times do not deal in fish are taking to it now. With Advent not far off, and with King Winter about to really assert himself, preparations are being made for fall and winter season's business.

Oysters are going out on liberal scale. Prospects are apparently bright.

The leading lines of fresh and frozen fish are in quite liberal supplies. New haddies, bloaters, kippers and smoked herring are arriving freely. The character of supplies are changing more from the fresh to the frozen article

Nova Scotia sends out report that the herring catch along the south-western shore was the greatest ever known. Only small catches of mackerel are now being made. Codfish prices remain firm, and considerably higher than earlier in the season. About half of the Lunenburg catch has been disposed of and the balance is being firmly held. Reports from eastern provinces state that foreign markets for dried fish seem to be in better condition than for some time.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—Colder weather will at least made the handling of fish an easier matter. The winter is about due to assert itself any time now, and the intervening few weeks to Advent should pave the way for a good trade during December. New supplies of halibut are more liberal, and the price is reduced a few cents. Fresh B.C. salmon is being offered now and Gaspe salmon of fine quality is quoted at 25 cents. Fresh mackerel is lower, and the leading varieties of fresh and frozen fish are in good supply. Skinless cod is scarce, and is higher in price. New haddies, bloaters, kippers, and smoked herring are arriving freely and selling well. There is a steady demand for oysters, a good business being generally reported.

ONTARIO.

Toronto.—Lower temperature especially at this time of the year is conducive to trade in the fish department. The cold weather of week has been beneficial. Retailers who are pushing fish and oysters are finding good results. Fresh halibut is now done, and the frozen is being sold. The fishing season for trout and whitefish is over, and the available supplies of the fresh article are about cleaned up.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—The catch of herring on the south-western shore (referred to in last week's Grocer), was the greatest ever known in that vicinity. Total catch was over three thousand barrels. There were enormous schools of fish all along the south-western shore, and in eight hours the fishermen in the vicinity of Clark's Harbor had landed fourteen hundred barrels. Large quantities of these fish were salted, the balance being disposed of for bait.

Small catches of mackerel are still reported at some points along the coast, the most of them being placed on the local market. The fish are large, and fat. Fresh mackerel are also reported fairly plentiful on the Boston market—and price is low.

Cold storage plants are now busy. Large quantities of cod and haddock are being received daily from Canso, Petitie de Grat and Port Hood, most of which are made into smoked finnan haddies and cod fillets.

Codfish prices remain firm, and predictions are being made that they will go higher.

R. G. Blackburn has been appointed manager in Western Canada for W. G. Patrick & Co., and his territory comprises that bounded by Fort William and the Rocky Mountains. A branch has been opened at 110 James St., Winnipeg, in connection with which a spacious warehouse has been leased, and which is connected with convenient trackage facilities. Mr. Blackburn was formerly traveling representative for W. G. Patrick & Co., covering all western territory between the Great Lakes and the coast.—Advt.

The West Indies Fruit Co., Montreal, have just received a cable from the West Indies, stating that a cargo of fresh tomatoes, open air grown, is on the way to Montreal. This company will be in the course of a few days in a position to supply the trade every week throughout the winter with the choicest tomatoes, everyone guaranteed sound, at a wonderfully low figure. It looks as if the retailers of Canada are now going to have the means of overcoming loss from crushed and decayed tomatoes.—Advt.

Points to Consider When Buying Oysters

First, be careful that all the oysters you buy are over four years old.

See that they come from "Communities" (as oyster breeding grounds are called) that are noted for flavor.

Be sure that they are matured sufficiently firm to retain their full flavor for the longest time possible.

Decline all stock that has been watersoaked.

Insist that all the stock you buy be refrigerated at a low temperature, but never frozen.

VERY IMPORTANT

It is of the utmost importance that oysters be refrigerated properly all the way from the point of shipment to your store.

If this is not attended to it may well happen that your stock becomes unsaleable in a very short time.

DISPLAY HINTS

Display is another very important consideration—or rather, display and storage.

The "Coast-Sealed" Cabinet is to be recommended for this purpose. It has a vacuum insulated chamber between the inner and outer walls—a construction that results in great saving of ice. The interior arrangement of this cabinet allows part of the stock to be stored under ice continually, while the other part—for current sales—rests on ice.

We recommend "Coast-Sealed" Oysters, because they conform to every requirement mentioned above, and have never yet been known to disappoint a customer in quality, quantity or flavor.

We shall be glad to communicate with any merchant regarding constant supply of the best oysters grown and the closest prices going.

A FLOUR CUSTOMER WITH A COMPLAINT

Dealer Made Test to Prove to Himself She Was in Error—Her Ability as a Cook Not Great—Patience of the Dealer.

Montreal, Nov. 16 (Special).—Grocers have to exercise their patience a great deal with some customers who would scarcely be satisfied if there was not something to complain about. A week ago a woman ordered a small bag of flour from a west end grocer, but on using it she found there was something wrong with the quality. The results from the first trial of the new delivery were not what she expected. So she told her grocer who offered to send another bag of the same kind of flour and remarked afterwards that "it was splendid."

The grocer divided the flour she returned into two parcels and sold it to customers whom he knew had used that brand before. He felt safe in telling them the circumstances and asked them to let him know how they found it. Some time after reports from both customers were to the effect that there was nothing wrong with the flour, perfect results having been secured in baking. The first woman was a good customer and for that reason the grocer tries to respond to her whims. In the flour case, however, it was clearly evident that it was her own lack of ability that was at fault, for even without a test the grocer knows what brands are generally uniform.

CARE OF CRANBERRIES.

Should be Kept at Even Temperature—Never Alternately Hot and Cold.

Grocers sometimes complain that their cranberries do not keep well. This to a large extent may probably be their own fault. They do not give the necessary care to their stock.

Most important is it to keep cranberries in an even temperature, and never where it is alternately hot and cold. They should be stored in a cool, dry ventilated room, cellar preferred, if dry. Barrels should be laid on the bilge. The darker the room the better. If cranberries are received in cold weather, never put them in a warm room or cellar; if you do the berries will "sweat" and such conditions will soon spoil the best cranberries produced. Open the room or cellar and cool it to about the temperature of the berries; then let them warm up gradually.

It is perfectly safe to change cranberries from warm to cool air, and it is advisable to do this if the cooler temperature can be maintained.

The man who comes down to business in the morning with a smile on his face has taken a long step towards making the day a successful one.

Sealshipt Oysters
—Now Sold a New Way

In sealed, ice-cold, individual packages called Sealshiptens.

Just as the Sealshiptor and the Sealshipticase were the inevitable successors of the open tub, in shipping and displaying oysters, just so this new Sealshipten must supersede paper pails and all other methods of selling.

It saves slop.

It saves time.

It necessitates less investment on the dealer's part.

No shrinkage—at least 7% more net profit assured.

It puts an end to substitution and all unfair competition.

It affords you a known profit, no guesswork as with bulk oysters.

It reaches the user under air-right seal—no possible contamination.

It makes an attractive package of what formerly was a leaky, bunglesome paper pail. It requires no careful handling—it cannot spill.

Unscrupulous dealers cannot always be stopped from selling bulk oysters as Sealshipt, but they can and will be stopped from counterfeiting this trade-marked package.

Your Sealshipticase has the same advantage as before—the same advertising advantage—the same advantage as a refrigerator for keeping the Sealshiptens properly.

It enables you to offer Northerns and Blue Points in either Standards or Selects, in two different sizes of package, without extra investment on your part.

Sealshipt Oysters come right in and go right out. They do not linger. You have practically no capital invested in them.

The Sealshipticase enables you to meet a ten-gallon-an-hour demand—or to keep your oysters in perfect condition against a call of only three pints a day.

The new Sealshipten makes the oyster business the cleanest, most profitable business a store can have.

We have made it easy for you to get and keep oysters at their best.

We have, by our advertising, created a demand which will send a stream of customers to your store.

Will you be content to deal in "just oysters" when Sealshipt Oysters offer you so certain a profit?

This is the Dealer's Blue and White Porcelain Sales Refrigerator—Equally valuable for keeping stock of the new Sealshiptens as for keeping stock of Sealshipt Bulk Oysters.

Prices of Xmas Dried Fruits and Nuts

How Those Ruling Now Compare With a Year Ago—Certain Similarity in Quotations on Ingredients of the Christmas Cake—No Overplus of Peels—Almonds are High—Scarcity and High Price of Brazils—Prohibitive Price on Peaches and Apricots—Large Prunes are Scarce.

The season of demand for dried fruits and nuts is now with us. Especially during the three or four weeks previous to Christmas there is a good demand for these lines. The housewife must purchase currants, raisins, dates, figs, peels and other essentials of the Christmas cake, and the consumption of nuts around the festive season is large.

There is a certain similarity between the prices now ruling on the chief ingredients of the Christmas cake and those of a year ago. Readers, no doubt, have been following the markets during the past four months. They will know for instance, that Valencia raisins have been slowly, but gradually going upward from the opening price, until now they are quoted at nearly as high a figure as a year ago. Seeded raisins are higher than a year ago, while currants are just about the same. A comparison of prices on the Toronto market now and a year ago shows the following :—

Currants—Fine Filiatras	7½-8	7½-8
" —Patras	8 -8½	8 -8½
Raisins—Sultanas	11-12	10-12
" — " —Fancy	12-13	11-13
" —Valencias	8-8½	8-9
" —Seeded—Choice	9¼-9½	8-9
" — " —Fancy	10	8¾-9¼

Off Year for Figs.

Figs have been on the market now for some little time, and already considerable trade has been done in them. There appears to be "off" years in figs and dealers find it difficult work in judging what quantity to order. Some years there are not enough. In others there are some left over. Last year was of the latter variety, despite the fact that other dried fruits were scarce and high in price. So far this season, dealers report, demand quite fair.

New dates are just arriving. The market has been pretty well cleared of old stock, and the first arrivals have been well sold ahead. On Hallowees, the price this year is somewhat higher than last, while Fards are about the same.

Dates—Hallowees—Full boxes	7¼	5½
" —Package, per 1 lb.	7½	6¾
" —Fards, choicest	9½-10½	9½-10½
Figs—2 to 2½ inches, lb.	12½-13½	10½-12¼
" —Tapnets	4½- 4¾	4- 4½
" —Bag	4½- 7	4½- 6

Lemon Peel Higher.

There is little difference in the price of peels now and a year ago. The big season for their sale is during the next month. Supplies apparently seem to show no surplus over expected sales. Prices compare as follows :—

Peels—Candied	1911	1910
Lemon	10-11	9-11
Orange	10-12½	10-12½
Citron	15-17	15-17

Almond Market Strong.

The arrival of the first real touch of winter with its fireside gathering, puts activity into the nut market. Then follows the usual strong demand around the holiday season. Most retailers already have their orders in for these lines. New almonds have arrived, but walnuts are not yet in. The market on almonds this year is high, and shows an advance over last year. France has had a fairly good yield of walnuts, and the new arrivals are expected to ease prices somewhat from present quotations.

The retailer knows that peanuts have been moving upward in the past four months. New crop, while just slightly higher than last year's opening prices, are on a more favorable basis than the quotations ruling of late.

Brazils show an advance of several cents over last year. The crop this year was much smaller than the previous one, and prices accordingly opened high. There seems to be no relief at hand, for reports from all sections show scarcity of supplies, which the good season of demand now about to commence will not help any. A comparison of Toronto prices now and a year ago shows :—

Almonds—	1911	1910
Formigetta	16	14-15
Tarragona	15½-16	16
Shelled	35-38	35-38
Walnuts—
Grenoble	16½-17	15½-16
Bordeaux	15	14
Shelled	38-40	39-40
Filberts	12-12½	12½-13
Brazils	18-19	14½-15
Peanuts	11-14	9½-12½

Interest in Apricots and Peaches.

Dried apricots and peaches as the trade well know are extremely high in price. Last year was bad enough. This year is worse, and prices are nearly prohibitive. Some jobbers say that the price is so high they are not handling them at all. However, even at the high price, there will, no doubt, be sales made. This table shows how much higher they are than last year :—

	1911	1910
Apricots—Choice	23-24	16-17
" —Fancy	25	19-20
Dried Peaches	17-18	9½-10

Larger Prunes Higher.

Prunes seem to have ascended out of the boarding house class, especially last year and this. A look over the comparison below brings out the fact that while small prunes are about on a par with a year ago, the prices of the larger sizes are much higher. This is explainable by the fact, that while last year large prunes were comparatively quite plentiful, this year they are a decidedly scarce article. Wholesalers' stocks of anything below 60's are generally quite small, while they can hardly be had on the coast. If the state of the primary market is an indication, prune prices can well be expected to hold, especially in the larger sizes, already in such small compass.

The following is a comparison :—

Prunes—30 to 40's	16	12½-13
" —40 to 50's	15	11½-12
" —70 to 80's	10	10½
" —80 to 90's	9½	8½- 9½
" —90 to 100's	9	9

LOOKING AFTER CREDITS.

Work of Canadian Credit Men's Association—Forming Adjustment Bureau.

Winnipeg, Nov. 22.—The Canadian Credit Men's Asso. Limited, has evolved from the Canadian Credit Men's Association which was born in Winnipeg 18 months ago. H. H. Piggott is president, R. R. Wilson vice-president, and Henry Detchen the secretary. Now that the association is incorporated, the adjustment bureau will go into immediate effect. The only difficulty standing in the way, is the securing of the services of a satisfactory adjustor. This department will look after the investigation of weak accounts, and the handling of the proceeds of sales carried out in accordance with the Bulk Sales Act; the control of businesses where extensions have been granted and the liquidation of estates that have become insolvent. It is hoped that when this branch of the association is running, that considerable saving will be effected for all concerned, and that prompter distributions will be made amongst the creditors interested.

There is at present in the hands of the printers the draft of a diary, which will be published soon, containing a digest of the laws affecting credit men with important decisions dealing with the Assignments Act, Bulk Sales Act, sale of goods, exemptions, Chattel Mortgages and Bills of Sale, partnerships Joint Stock Companies, Foreign or Extra Provincial Corporations, King's Bench Act, Prosecution of Fradulent Debtors, Mechanics' Lien Act, lien notes and conditional sale of goods, limitations of actions, interest, and various forms in daily use by credit men. The diary will also provide a space for daily memoranda, interest tables, etc. It will be the only book of its kind published in Canada.

Handling Confectionery Systematically

Results Obtained by Kelowna, B.C., Dealer—Advises Care in Weighing—Sells High-class Lines — Use of Silent Salesmen—A Splendid Profit-producer.

*By Geo. S. McKenzie, Kelowna, B.C.

A grocer should handle confectionery because it belongs essentially to his particular business; he should handle it because of the profits which accrue from a properly conducted department and he should handle confectionery, and good confectionery, because of the boost it will give his business in increasing his good trade and interesting his best woman patrons.

The usual way a grocer handles confectionery is to carry lines of candy which he displays more or less in pails or in a showcase and better lines in a showcase in the original boxes which cannot help but get mussy. Or he keeps it in the original boxes behind the counter or on the ledge and makes no effort to push sales.

Over-weight Given.

It is also customary to give too much for the money rather than appear "small" or stingy by weighing out each separate sale.

To my mind, the correct method of handling confectionery and making it a paying proposition is as follows: Have a good silent salesman with a top section for trays, in which empty your five pound boxes of best chocolates to sell at say 50 and 60 cents per pound "and put a price ticket on them." Adhere strictly to the price, weighing each sale and refusing to sell less than a quarter-pound.

Advises Showcases.

In the lower portion of the silent salesman display your package confectionery, pricing each variety. Have another smaller showcase in which display gross goods which appeal to the children and which yield a fair profit selling at one cent each. Have one or two small upright cases in which to display five cent goods, such as nut bars and milk chocolate. Besides this there are the ordinary cheaper varieties selling at about twenty-five cents per pound which can be sold in smaller lots of five and ten cents, such as hard chocolates, caramels, creams, etc.

Results Experienced.

We have followed this plan, having displayed the last mentioned in modern bin fixtures behind the counter with the following result: The sale of gross goods, nut-bars and other five cent sellers has increased a little (we used to display these openly and lost a lot from lifting). The twenty-five cent lines have remained about as before, whereas the package chocolates have increased about twenty per cent. But where I claim the profit on confectionery warrants a grocer handling it, if for no other reason, is the increase in sales in the better grade of bulk chocolates. We formerly handled one line at fifty cents. We now handle two lines at fifty and sixty cents and where we used to sell twenty pounds at a doubtful profit, we now handle one hundred pounds at a good, safe, fair margin.

Trade and Profit-getter.

Of course in an eastern town the result might not be so noticeable, but from my point of view, a British Columbia store handling high class goods and catering to the best class of customers, confectionery is an essential, a trade-getter and a profit-maker.

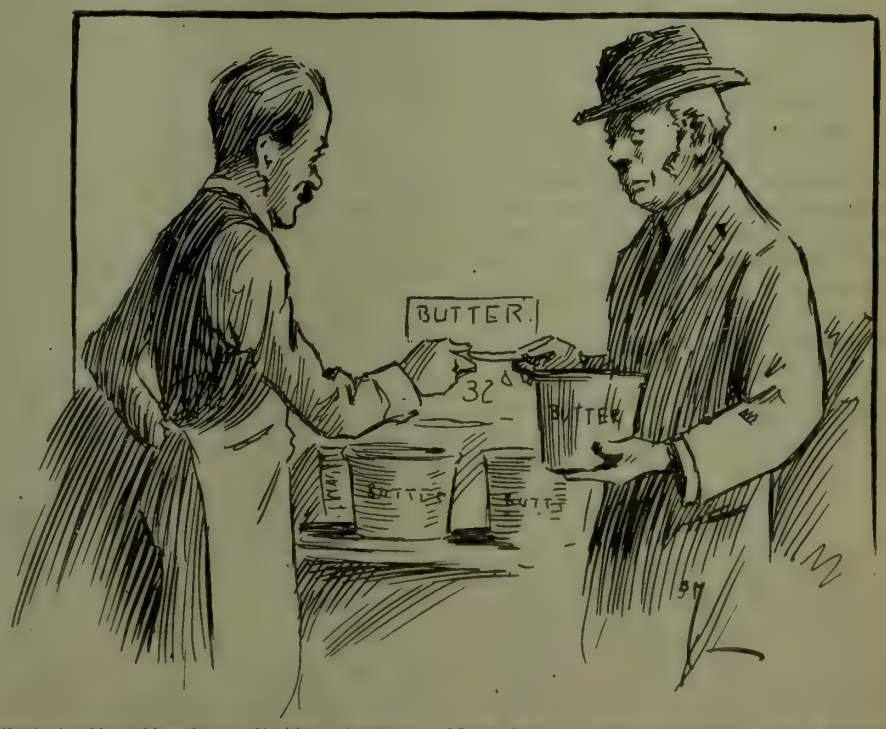
A RUN ON FIGS.

Montreal Wholesale House Experiences This Situation—Different From Last Season.



Montreal, Nov. 23.—(Special)—Why has there been a run on figs? Likewise, why was there a run on table raisins last year? and generally speaking why is the demand concentrated on one kind of dried fruit this year and on another, the year following?

These questions were asked by the representative of a wholesale house who remarked that the firm was sold out of figs although there had been no diminution in the orders for the year, and hat they could easily sell fifty per cent. more than they had already disposed of. Last season figs were a little off in flavor, at least they seemed to be, for this particular house offered a quantity at a reduction when the warm weather began to assert itself last summer. This did not affect their purchases this year, however, and now they are cleaned out. Another firm reports a good demand for figs, but states that the first shipments of Malaga raisins have been attracting particular attention and some lines are now exhausted.

The experience of the first informant is to the effect that last year it was table raisins that went particularly fast while the year before fruit was very slow in coming to its own and that it was not until after the holiday season that the bulk of the trade was felt and to such an extent that a large additional quantity had to be purchased.

Have any other firms experienced these situations?

George Lorenz, of Hanover, Ont., has sold his general store to E. H. Lorenz, his son, who has been connected with the business there and in Elmwood for the past twenty years. George Lorenz conducted the branch at Elmwood for 11 years, when it was under the management of Mrs. E. H. Lorenz.

Many Western Farmers Short of Labor

Although Value of Western Crops Greater Than Ever Before Several Farmers Have Been Held up Through Lack of Help—Splendid Building Prospects—$31,800,000 of Wheat Already Delivered.

(Special Correspondence.)

Winnipeg, Nov. 23. — Business and building prospects are very bright. A number of large business buildings are planned and there promises to be quite a boom in erection of residences next spring.

The cause of this expansion and of this confidence in the immediate future is the fuller realization of the value of the crop. A careful calculation as to the value of the wheat already marketed, or which has passed inspection, on the basis of current prices, during September and October, shows $31,800,000. This is a substantial sum for the preliminary deliveries of a big crop. There is no longer any concern as to the value of the crop being larger than ever before, but anxiety does exist with regard to the safety of many acres on which the stooks are still standing unthreshed.

Labor Difficult to Obtain.

The amount of wheat inspected, to the end of October, was 35,093,050, as compared with 33,106,870 last year. But though the harvested and threshed crop is heavy, there never was a time when so much grain still lay out in the fields waiting for labor to take it off. In Saskatchewan, outfits are idle in some cases for want of labor, and this seems regrettable in view of the fact of hundreds of men returning east. This migration homewards of so many laborers is due to the cold. They come to give their services in the normal harvest season when the weather is not cold. If they remain for the November threshing they will be put to the necessity of buying warmer clothing. This is but one of the excuses many of them make for returning home. Others feel aggrieved because of having to pay for their board during the time the weather makes threshing operations impossible. The net results of the labor shortage will be serious.

Railways and Crop Moving.

From the returns of the grain inspection department at Winnipeg, the distribution of the traffic is ascertainable, and a report issued by that department shows the amount of the crop that has been handled by the several Western roads as follows:

September 1 to October 31.

Road	Crop of 1911	P.C. of Crop
C.P.R.	19,979 cars	54.4
C.N.R.	12,687 cars	34.6
G.T.P.	2,881 cars	7.8
G.N.R.	1,165 cars	3.2

Total 36,712 cars.

Road	Crop of 1910	P.C. of Crop
C.P.R.	21,474 cars	61.6
C.N.R.	10,658 cars	30.6
G.T.P.	2,124 cars	6.1
G.N.R.	590 cars	1.7

SASKATOON'S POPULATION.

Saskatoon, Sask., Nov. 23.—The Government census figures did not at all touch a popular chord in Saskatoon. As a result they have taken the census under municipal direction and have carefully checked the results. In fact, the commissioner of the Board of Trade is now engaged in checking off a supplementary list of a thousand names. The final result will show Saskatoon to have a population of 19,000, in place of 12,002. Don't forget the two. As a small boy remarked to his mother: "Wasn't it a good thing that Mrs. Jones had twins to make up the two?"

The city took the census on October 25th, the actual count being 19,300.

Grocers Should be Put Right in Public Eye

Members of Association Think Effort Should be Made to Show Public They are Not Exacting More Than Fair Profit—Incorrect Prices Quoted by Daily Papers—Peddlers Not Made Obey Display By-law—New Members Added—Smoker in December.

Toronto, Nov. 23 (Special).—The Toronto Retail Grocers in monthly session at the Temple Building on Monday night discussed a number of problems of interest to the trade.

President Wm. C. Miller was in the chair.

G. W. Hall commented on the report of the Vegetable Growers' Association, in which they accused the "middleman" of exacting an exorbitant profit on their goods which went through his hands, and recommended that the council should follow the example of some United States cities, by buying these goods from the grower and make arrangement for distributing them to the consumer.

"I think these reports that are being sent out broadcast to the public should be denied," declared Mr. Hall, "for it is true that the grocers are not getting more than a fair profit on them."

Incorrect Prices in Papers.

"The market reports of nearly all the daily papers are also unfair to us. Because these reports go out to the farmers and producers, the figures given by the commission and wholesale men are generally clipped low and the city people reading them expect to get their goods at those prices."

D. W. Clark drew attention to one daily paper which had pointed out to readers that while certain berries were selling at 10 cents up town, they could be bought for 6 cents at the Yonge St. fruit market. That day he had paid 9 cents for his supply.

Neil Carmichael thought it would not be a bad idea to form a committee to approach the daily papers in an effort to get more correct prices quoted.

Display Law Violated.

Mr. Carmichael complained that while grocers were being forced to comply with the sanitary display law, the peddlers were allowed to travel all over the city without complying with the law in respect to them. He did not think it fair that only one portion of the trade should be obliged to comply with regulations.

"This new display law was enacted with a view of giving us redress by making the peddlers cover their goods," said D. McLean, "but apparently the peddlers are the ones who are being benefited by it."

On motion of N. Carmichael and R. Matthews, a resolution was passed that a committee wait upon the medical health officer. and ask that the law be enforced upon the peddlers as well as the grocers. The committee appointed consists of Neil Carmichael, D. W. Clark and J. S. Bond.

Need of Publicity.

It was also advanced by Mr. Carmichael that the grocers should put themselves right before the public.

"I think the public should be acquainted with the fact that in dealing with hucksters they are helping those who do not live up to the sanitary display laws, and are purchasing goods that in most cases are not properly stored or handled. I think that the grocers should institute a publicity campaign to let the public know they are trying to obey the law in every particular."

It was decided to hold a smoker in St. George's Hall on Thursday, Dec. 14. The wholesale and retail trade will receive invitations. The executive have charge of the arrangements, David Bell, R. W. Davies and Bailey Snow comprising the printing committee.

Membership Increasing.

The association organizer, Frank Johnston, proposed the following grocers for membership; G. J. Melhuish, Yonge St.; B. McHardy, Yonge St.; W. J. Gillespie, Crawford St.; T. F. Gibbs, Shaw St.; J. W. Garner, Shaw St.; D. Knox, Shaw St.; W. Ross, Yonge St.; A. O. Gibb, of Gibb Bros., Yonge St.; A. Snider, Roncevalles Ave.; R. A. Dutton, Roncesvalles Ave.; W. A. Island, Dundas St.; S. Bone, Davenport Rd.; R. A. White, Church St.; R. Bell, Yonge St., and A. Good, Church St.

Comments.

"The peddlers are handling everything," said one dealer. "They are even selling haddie now."

"Customers are getting very particular about their goods," said C. F. Thorne. "A lady who was ordering haddie over the phone the other day, wanted to know if there was any dust on it."

"This is the first meeting I have attended," said Charles Page of Yonge St., "but the association has every appearance of being a live one and I intend to attend every meeting."

Preventing Customers Escaping Payments

In Some Stores a Customer Can Purchase in Provision Department and Leave Through Store Proper Without Settling—How a Montreal Store Overcomes This—Cashier's Office Looks Out Into Both Store and Department—Value of Cash Register—A Handy Refrigerator.

Montreal, Nov. 23 (Special).—On the subject of cash payments in a grocery store with an adjoining provision department, Albert Bouthier, manager of the Park Provision Co., St. Viateur St., believes that it is next to impossible for a customer to avoid paying for goods he or she purchases in either the store proper or in the provision annex.

The plan of the store as shown herewith is quite similar to those already referred. One marked exception is the office which is both in the store and in the provision department. There is a pay window looking out into each and the separating partition is almost entirely glass.

Hears Cash Register Ring.

Besides, there are two cash registers, one in the store proper, and the other in the department. When a customer makes a purchase of meat or provisions, the clerk gives her a ticket from the cash register and the payment is made at the office. The cashier has the entire place under her eye and if she suspected that people were trying to evade paying she has the warning ring of the register.

Again, those who make a purchase on either side have to pass before her to reach the other part of the store and, in addition, the office is close to the two street entrances.

Plan of The Park Provision Co. Store in Montreal. Note the Location of Office Between Grocery Store Proper and Provision Department.

However, as before stated mentioning this subject is merely a hint to the retailer to arouse his attention to any loophole of this nature that may be costing him money.

The Refrigerator.

The refrigerator system in this store is worthy of comment. A glance at the diagram shows its position relative to the store and the meat department. It is built in the storeroom and receives ice on that side. The iceman draws up to the back door and fills the refrigerator without having to pass through the store proper. This work is done from the rear.

The refrigerator has two wide windows, one looking into the department the other into the main store. These windows are raised up and down and anything required is obtained without confusion. Besides, the articles contained therein are displayed to the entire view of customers. It will be admitted that this refrigerator has been well placed. It simply does the work of two and is close at hand to clerks in the store or in the provision department.

Buying Poultry.

Poultry forms an important part of the fall, holiday and winter trade in the meat department.

Mr. Bouthier stated he made provision ahead for his supplies, and was thus prepared for special demand. Quality in fowl is a necessity. People who depend upon their grocer for their goods expect consideration, and sales of old birds only acts as an obstacle to future business. As with other articles quality should be a first consideration.

Bright Fixtures.

The fixtures of this store are bright and attractive. There are more show cases than is usually found; confectionery and cakes, meats, in glasses, choice preserved fruits, etc., have their special silent salesmen, and there is another for tobacco. The shelving is well arranged, is attractive and there are no conspicuous vacancies caused by the neglect to replace goods that have been sold.

A concluding reference may be made to the fact that Mr. Bouthier endeavors to give the store customers a quick delivery, believing that satisfaction rendered in this manner is appreciated.

Jas. A. Macness, Chatham, Ont., who has been conducting two grocery stores, one on St. Clair St. and the other at the corner of Grand and Vanallen Ave., has closed the former, which was his original store, and moved his entire business to the Grand Ave. store. Mr. Mackness purchased his first business on the demise of O. I. Dolsen, a couple of years ago.

NEW MANAGER APPOINTED.

D. B. Gillies, for the past four years business manager of Industrial Canada, published by The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, has been appointed manager of The Canadian Grocer.

Previous to his engagement by The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Mr. Gillies was connected for a number of years with The Canadian Grocer, first as editor and later as manager.

Mr. Gillies is familiar with the many problems confronting the grocery trade in Canada having called personally on the trade in every province of the Dominion.

We have outlined a progressive policy for 1912 and will add a number of new features which will make the paper more interesting and more instructive than ever before.

DRIED FRUIT SITUATION.

Those who purchased dried fruits early in the season have without doubt gained considerable this year. That is on the whole. There may have been an odd line which fell back slightly since the opening price, but these were the varieties which were high in price, and were accordingly dealt in cautiously. In general, the markets on dried fruits have been taking on a stronger tone since the first opportunity was presented to purchase.

Those who bought sparingly, or deferred purchases until now, will in several instances, have to pay higher prices than ruled earlier in the season.

A review of conditions in different commodities both here and in primary markets will be of assistance to dealers in deciding on their action if they have not as yet purchased what they consider will be necessary to run them through the season.

Valencia raisins are already held quite firmly on Canadian markets. They cannot be bought now at the figure they could earlier in the season. The market in Spain has been slowly but gradually rising in price from opening figure, and values there are about 2 cents above what they were at one time this season. With sellers in Spain even now firm in their ideas, it is only natural to expect a firm tendency here. Currants are also held with confidence, especially with a month of strong selling just ahead.

Prunes show no signs of wavering. They are in greater abundance than a year ago, but prices are still quite high. The pack has run into the smaller sizes, making the larger sizes, comparatively scarce, both spot and on the coast. The primary market would seem to indicate continued strength. While considerable purchases were made by Canadian houses earlier in the season around a 5½ cent basis they are now ruling at 6½ cent basis on the coast and 50s to 60s and larger ruling above that.

Peaches and apricots do not create a great deal of interest. They were not purchased freely, and only small stocks are held on Canadian markets. At the moment, on the coast, apricots are steady and peaches just slightly easier. The production of both this year was comparatively small. This would indicate firmness unless the high price curtails selling and causes prices to ease to force sales.

California seeded raisins have been easy for some time, and are now. The fact is, they opened quite high. Just how far seeded raisins will have to go before the market begins to react is a question. With the big sales in prospect spot goods should hold steady at least over the festive season. Seedless varieties show no weakness in values.

Figs have so far this year met with good reception. Some houses, on account of the "off" season of last year, bought sparingly, so that the future appears quite firm. The markets have been cleared up pretty well on old dates and the new stock has been eagerly awaited.

As usual there has, on the whole, been some wide fluctuations since opening prices. The markets now, however, appear more settled. On the whole, the future appears firm, and Valencia raisins, currants and prunes already bought look like good property, while others appear almost as much so.

SEASON TO PUSH LEMONS.

From the time the warm weather begins to slacken off in early fall, there is a tendency among grocers to give little or no attention to lemons.

The fact of the matter is that once the temperature begins to drop back it needs to swing to the opposite extreme in order to again revive the demand for lemons. The weather must be either hot or cold.

The weather dial has now swung far enough in the direction of the zero mark to warrant dealers again giving attention and prominence to this line. With changeable weather now prevailing, colds are not infrequent and the good old remedy, hot lemonade, is resorted to.

Again in many sections, poor water causes an increased consumption of this drink. The favorite lemon pie also assists in the consumption of lemons, so that, everything considered, the grocer has good reason to push sales of this line just now.

New crop Messina lemons of good quality are now on Canadian markets. The fact that "the new lemons are in" should also help to some extent in their sale.

NEW DATES ARRIVE.

After some delay, the first shipment of new crop dates has arrived at New York and has been brought on to Canadian markets. Old stock had been pretty well cleaned up, so that the first steamer was awaited. Jobbers had a good-sized portion of their shares of first arrivals sold ahead. Retailers are now featuring this line to good advantage.

Prices on Persian dates are considerably higher than last year, the highest in fact for several years. This is due in the first place to the short Persian crop and secondly, the Turko-Italian war has so greatly increased risks in Eastern water shipments that shippers of dates have had to pay much more on insurance and freight charges than in normal years. Thus, the higher price to the retailer. One redeeming feature however, is that the stock is of excellent quality.

The new dates now held are of the advance shipment. The larger and later shipments will come at a slightly lower figure, about ½ cent below the first. The second steamer will arrive about December 8.

A SIDE-LINE FOR WINTER.

During the winter months some grocers make a Saturday special of sausages, with good results in most cases. Arrangements are made with some manufacturer for a supply on Saturday morning, and on Friday afternoon the clerks tell customers about the supply for the morrow, and orders taken then are among the first filled.

The success of the attempt will depend largely upon the location of the grocer, and upon the manner with which he takes up the proposition. The writer knows of several grocers who built up quite a Saturday trade in this article. It did not amount to a very great deal, but it amply paid for the extra effort, and customers came to like the easy arrangement by which they could secure this change of meat diet. Most of the sales were apparently for the Sunday morning breakfast.

ANOTHER UNINFORMED.

No less a personage than C. C. James, Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, has come out against the retailer dealer. He urged elimination of the middleman at a meeting of the Ontario Beekeepers' Association held recently, and thereby classes himself among the mass of uninformed on trade conditions.

Mr. James recommended the beekeepers "to go in with the consumer by organization and thus share the middleman's profits between them."

As The Grocer has emphasized in the past, business done through the channel of wholesale and retail dealer has been proven to be the most economic method.

"Share the profits of the middleman!" says C. C. James. Does Mr. James stop to consider that if the beekeeper went direct to consumer he would have to figure on a much higher expense in marketing his goods; that he would continually be up against hundreds of "poor pays" whom now the much abused dealer has to contend with? Has Mr. James any idea of the extra work, worry and expense the beekeeper would experience in distributing his product; in looking after accounts, bookkeeping, shipping, expense in postage, stationery, etc.?

If the beekeeper is wise he will continue to sell through established trade channels where he is practically sure of his money, where work, worry and expense is reduced to a minimum and where he has plenty of time to attend to his bees.

There has been altogether too much talk lately about "eliminating the middleman." And what is it all about? Merely for effect. The masses hear and read about it and think there is another champion of their rights established.

The dealer—if he is called the middleman—will never be elimnated. If the consumer stops to think about it he will be the last man on earth to attempt to do without the "family grocer"—the man around the corner ready at a moment's notice to supply his smallest want.

KEEPING PACE IN COLLECTIONS.

Some grocers state they have not found collections better than ordinary years. There has been work for every laborer during the past twelve months, and during the summer vacancies went begging for men. This would lead one to expect the average family is possessed with more money than is usually the case.

Business on the whole has been heavy throughout Candada, showing that more money was spent this year, but several Montreal travellers have remarked that the trade they meet are not enthusiastic over conditions. Collections are fair, but not as good as might be expected. The people have earned more money, but they have likewise spent it almost as readily as it came in. Clothes, excursions, picnics and other outlets could account for a great deal of the money that was made. The wise grocer pressed for his money while it was being made, and he begins his Christmas trade with a sense of security.

There is no pessimism expressed, for there are no grounds for it, but some retail grocers have remarked that while the people made more money during the past year they spent more than usual, and while generally speaking they are in a better position with the beginning of winter, a little more thrift would have left them even better prepared for the season when outdoor labor is almost out of the question.

ASSISTING THE CLERK.

"I often tell my clerks to take The Grocer home with them and read it carefully. There are many good things in it that would be useful to them. I obtain many good points from it myself, especially in regard to the markets."

This statement, coming from a prominent grocer in eastern Quebec, Ernest May, of May & Houlahan, Sherbrooke, can be read by many of the trade throughout the country with profit to themselves. The education of the clerk should receive the proprietor's careful attention. He owes it to the young man who has chosen a walk in life which is admittedly none too alluring at the start. Besides, the trade in general is uplifted with every improvement in the individual, and, lastly, the grocer himself is a direct beneficiary. As his clerk advances the employer may expect from him better salesmanship, a keener interest in the business and a better comprehension of groceries and the grocery trade. Mr. May has the right idea, and it is suggested that others may profit by some encouragement to their clerks to improve themselves.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Grocery dealers, in common with other retailers, sometimes complain of the inroads the department stores make into their business. It is worth noting that all the large Montreal department stores advertise their grocery department well, while but a small number of the regular dealers consider it worth while to let the people know what special Christmas lines they are carrying.

The Canadian dealer should give every attention to the quality and purity of the goods he buys. He should know definitely whether any food is adulterated, by what and how much. He owes it to his customers to sell them pepper when pepper is asked for, and not shells and pepper.

A Cash Business as Opposed to Credit

Can it be Successful in Town of 4,000, Where all Other Grocers Give Credit?—Prominent Merchant Says it is Possible in Any Town if—— — An Interesting Patent Medicine Experience.

*By Henry Johnson, Jr.

Henry Johnson, Jr., Canadian Grocer:—

Dear Sir,—Referring to item in Grocer of Oct. 20, "Advice on Changing to Cash Business," would you please answer another question? In a town of 4,000, where all the other grocers give credit and time, ranging from a week to several months, can a man make a success of a strictly cash grocery business without cutting prices on some lines or giving a cash discount on some lines? I think the above will be of general interest to readers of The Grocer.

Yours very truly,

C—— H—— N——.

It is difficult to answer such a question intelligently and helpfully without knowing the town; but I may hazard the statement: Yes; but it depends on the man. One can make a success of a cash business in any town, provided he has in himself the elements of success. The fundamental error into which merchants are apt to fall lies in the intention to radically and suddenly change from credit to cash. Any sudden change is dangerous—even a change for the better. Maybe I can exemplify this by one of my experiences.

Handled Patent Medicines.

For upward of 20 years Johnson & Son carried a line of patent medicines and family remedies. It began in 1882 with a few of the staples of that day, and continued until 1905, when the department was sold out. The original stock did not exceed a dozen items, but we made it a practice to obtain new items as they were introduced, so that after a few years we had an assortment of probably 300 odd remedies. Of some we bought and sold heavily, handling jobbing quantities when we could obtain them. I have bought 2½ gross of some of the dollar preparations and sold them on special offerings for 79c, 81c, 88c, etc. The druggists' associations and the manufacturers often made it hard for us to get the goods, but we kept on for over 5 years after we had really serious trouble.

When I decided to do away with the department, the decision was based not on the trouble we had experienced but on two other important considerations. First; we had grown into a very high-grade, high-priced, exclusive credit trade and the "patents" partook of a kind of bargain department not in keeping with our general business. Second, the fact that we had difficulty getting supplies put us in the embarrassing position of being constantly out of goods which we professed to keep.

Its Loss Was Felt.

The change was not made until after careful, thoughtful consideration; for we felt its importance. Here was a peculiarly clean department. We bought a dozen and sold a dozen—practically no waste or loss—about 96 per cent. of the goods were sold for cash without delivery—making the department very economical. Thus the 20 per cent. we averaged on the sales was very clean money—so it behooved us to think before we took that radical step. However, as I say, we did it; and, little as it amounted to in comparison with our whole business, we were immediately very strikingly astonished to note what a hole was apparently left where the department used to be. The great trade in "patents" was in the evenings; and, after doing away with the sale, for a considerable time it seemed to us that all our evening business had been patents. It was many months before we ceased to feel the loss of that trade.

Now note the points about that experience: Beginning in a small way that department had grown to be an integral part of our business. It was just as much a portion of our stock in trade, as much an item in the minds of those who knew us well, as was flour. Then, even after such difficulties as might have served to discredit that end of our business with part of our customers, after many had suffered disappointment and gone elsewhere for supplies, after careful thought of all consequences, we discontinued—and then suddenly we knew how much of a factor it had become.

An Important Decision.

If, now, this is the case with such a minor matter as one department which in no way hitches with the grocery business generally, does it not seem to you to be infinitely more serious to think of making a fundamental change which will inevitably affect every portion of your business?

It can be done, but first

Make SURE you want to do it and, second,

Go about it slowly, with careful thought for the future.

All of which may serve to explain what I mean when I say that one can make a success of a cash business in any town. The point I wish to dwell on is, that such business must be built up on Cash lines, not jumped into by anybody. And the way in which it will be built up, the character reflected through it, will determine its measure of success. I am sure that a man can make just the same kind of success of a cash business as he can of a credit business, for the difference is not nearly so great as we are often inclined to think it is.

All in the Man.

You will immediately think of the big cash dealer of whom you have more or less intimate knowledge and information and you will be apt to say that such a man shows that the cash business is the right business if you know how to run it. I answer that the same man you refer to is successful because he is made that way and, had he done a credit instead of a cash business, he would have stood just as high above the rest of us as he now stands. It is the man—not any magic in the method.

Specifically to refer to the question of cut prices: Yes, you will make some special prices if you sell for cash, but actually you will not make more of them than you would as a live credit-giving man. When we sold "patents" we sold them on the average for 85c for the dollar preparation, 40c for the 50c preparation, etc. But this was actually about the range at which the druggist sold. The difference was that we displayed and advertised these things while the druggist cloaked himself in more or less mystery and pretended to get regular prices. I noticed only a few days ago an offer of a dollar-and-a-half article at $1.10 for which we always got $1.25. The actual cost was $1.06, which is surely worse than anything even the cash grocer will do on sugar.

Profits Must be Watched.

What I want to get out of your mind is the idea that you can have such an immense leverage on price, if you are going to make any money for yourself. Suppose you do $12,000 per annum, of which $5,000 is presently credit. In the way of actual expense, what can you save through changing from Credit to Cash? Counting all time taken on those accounts and all wasted time on these matters, can you actually figure that you would save $30 a month? If that is the extent of your saving, you have 3 per cent. to use in the way of a general reduction in your prices. Where will you put that percentage to make it show up strikingly to your trade? You can see it does not amount to anything.

You can do a cash business or a credit business anywhere, and the same ability which will make you a success in one will aid you in the other. But the same firmness of character which is absolutely essential to your success in the cash business—the ability to say NO firmly yet without needless offence—will see you safely through the credit business. From which you may gather that it is my opinion that if you are not successful with credit you will not be successful with cash.

*The writer of this article is one of the most successful dealers on the continent. He has spent almost 30 years in the retail grocery business and is well equipped to answer questions and smooth out difficulties with which others may have met.

So, with your eyes open, with careful study of the question from all standpoints, after thoughtful consideration of ALL factors in your local situation, decide which kind of business you want to BUILD UP and then proceed carefully and industriously to BUILD. You cannot successfully PLUNGE or JUMP, and you will have some trouble and discouragement in either.

Retailers Want Standard Package Law

This Was Asked of Specialty Manufacturers at Convention in New York—The Reasons Why—Some Manufacturers Criticised for Advertising Goods to Consumer at Price Showing no Profit to the Dealer—Offering Bonuses to Wholesalers' Salesmen.

New York, Nov. 23.—(Special)—The convention of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association held on Thursday and Friday of last week considered some important questions affecting the trade. Among these were, "National Legislation on Weights and Measures," "Food Legislation from the Standpoint of Justice," "Elimination of the Jobber," "Standard Package Law," "Free Deals to Jobbers," "Contract Selling Plan," "Leaders at Cut Prices," etc.

The new officers elected were :—

President, Walter H. Lipe, Beech-Nut Packing Co., Canajoharie, N.Y. ; first first vice-president, Louis Runkel, Runkel Bros., Inc., New York ; second vice-president, A. J. Porter, Shredded Wheat Co., Niagara Falls ; third vice-president, W. M. McCormick, McCormick & Co., Baltimore ; treasurer, Louis H. Soule, the Bon Ami Co., New York.

The Dealer's Profit.

Secretary John A. Green, of the National Association of Retail Grocers referred to package goods advertised to the consumer at cost or below it by some manufacturers.

"I have received more than 50 letters from various sources complaining about these advertised goods. They hurt the retail dealer because the consumer sees them and demands to have them at the cost price. The retailer has to explain. The consumer, as like as not, smiles cynically and takes away his patronage. He may owe a bill, too. This matter of advertised goods at cost as a flyer is an injustice to the dealer. We as retail grocers are the outlet, the medium through which the goods of the manufacturer are distributed to the consumer.

"I have sought a conference with manufacturers and jobbers, and I believe that a meeting between all of us would be of benefit to the entire trade. I have looked into the co-operative system of doing business in Europe, and God forbid that we should try those methods here. In this country you cannot eliminate the jobber. He is here to stay."

To Offset Political Talk.

"It is your duty, and it is my duty to see to it that the consuming public is protected," said George B. Wason, president of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association. "Our vocation in life is not only to make money out of our business, but our special line gives us the opportunity to help our neighbor, our state and country ; by so doing, we elevate our business to a high plane— a plane beyond criticism. It seems to me that it is up to the manufacturer and wholesale grocer to show the common people just why food products are higher, instead of letting a lot of politicians lay the blame on us. No legitimate manufacturer or jobber is getting excessive profits on the goods he handles. I believe the people to-day are, and have been for years, wasting the natural resources of this country.

"The tendency of the times is for our people to flock to the city and become consumers and not producers, and if we cut our producing force down 50 per cent. and raise our consumption it is easy enough, and it will not need a very great mathematician to figure out that food products must be higher, for it is an undisputed fact that the farmer feeds us all."

A Standard Package.

"I believe a federal law," declared Jno. W. Lux, president of the National Association of Retail Grocers, "compelling the use of standard packages for goods sold in cartons or packages would greatly relieve the honest manufacturer and protect the consumer as well. The present plan of manufacturers to start in a 16-ounce package, then to reduce it to 14 ounces, and finally to 12 ounces or less, is ridiculous. The idea of the manufacturer boosting the sale of the short package by giving a premium should not be permitted. Some of our most vicious trusts have killed honest competition by the use of these tactics.

"I believe it would pay the business men of this country to take a day off and help Congress establish a uniform standard of weights and measures for this country, and a law compelling the use of that standard with penalties for violation as heavy as that for counterfeiting the coin of the realm.

"The oil and the tobacco trusts are the most greedy the retail merchant has to purchase from, because they generally sell the consumer and retailer at about the same price. They maintain retail stores in nearly every city in the country. If the other manufacturers of the country adopted the tactics of the trusts mentioned, the end of the present year would see the end of the retail business in this country, with perhaps higher prices to the consumer, as they take all the consumer will stand now without driving him on the warpath."

Would Stop Free Deals.

J. H. McLaurin, president of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association, said that bonuses and free deals represent only two of the many ills in the problem of the distribution.

"This is a propitious time to put before you the injustice and irregularity of the free deal. A free deal is the method by which some manufacturers seek to secure a wider distribution of their product. The free deal is more often than not unprofitable to the jobber. The handling of it causes him loss, and is furthermore of no advantage to him. Therefore he does not take kindly to it. We believe the manufacturer is broad-minded enough to see when injustice has been done, and he will not needlessly burden the jobber with things that are unprofitable. Our association has gone on record as refusing to handle the free deal packages. This is our policy. We shall stick to it.

Bonuses to Jobbers' Salesmen.

"The matter of bonuses to jobbers' salesman," he said, "is unjust and unbusiness like. It is the passing over the head of the jobber by the manufacturer who desires the salesman of the jobber to do a special service for him for compensation. The salesman who accepts the bribe of the manufacturer is dishonest to his employer, the jobber, and serves to demoralize the sales force."

B. F. Kastner, Sebringville, Ont., has disposed of his business to John Taylor and J. Barthel.

Nova Scotia has a large crop of apples this year and not only does it almost constitute a record as to quantity but the quality is good. It has been estimated that 1,500,000 barrels will be the total crop.

Canned Fruits—Some higher prices

Montreal, Nov. 23.—A feature of this week's grocery markets is the continued activity in all lines of dried fruits. The demand is heavy and deliveries amount to substantial total these days. There is a firmness in fruits that is worth noticing. A sharp advance in prunes during the past week and the promise that prices are practically certain to reach a higher figure during the coming week are facts that the grocer cannot overlook no matter how well supplied he may be.

Another point worthy of notice is the tendency of preserved fruits to assume stronger feeling. It is known that jams are pretty well exhausted, at least this is the report of more than one house. Just now canned strawberries, raspberries, Lawtons and others are firmer and —well it is a long time until next June when the new fruit will be on the market. The fact that jobbers are refusing to dispose of their stocks of strawberries at good lump sums is in itself an indication of what may be expected. The grocer who is not well supplied in dried fruits and canned goods will hardly gain anything by a further delay in the purchase of his requirements.

Sugar.—The market continues unchanged. The U.S. market gave evidence of weakness of late, but locally the opinion holds that prices will scarcely change for a time. Buying seems to be of the hand-to-mouth variety.

Syrups and Molasses.—Another advance in the price of molasses testifies to the strength of this market. The new crop will not be ready for delivery before February. Recent heavy sales have been made at a figure 50 per cent. higher than last year's opening price. Molasses have been influenced by the high price of sugar and the fancy grade is firm. Advances locally have been made for both fancy and choice, and there is every reason to look for their maintenance. The corn crop in the Barbadoes has been a good one, but sugar has been holding on so well that molasses was bound to be firm. The demand for syrup is seasonable and steady.

Dried Fruits.—A number of features are noticeable in this market. Prunes are higher and there has been no voice to suggest that this fruit will not continue to go higher. Some shippers were unable to fill their orders to a greater extent than 75 and 80 per cent. and supplies are limited. Thirties to forties were short in supply some time ago and the small grades were fairly plentiful. Now, conditions are reversed and there has been a run on the smaller varieties. Europe has bought heavily of the United States crop and Italy has been heard from with a strong demand for the smaller fruit. This is unusual and is an evidence of the failure of the Bosnia crop to meet the Italian demand. Last summer, it will be remembered, that 90-100's sold as high as 18 cents. Where, it might be asked, will the price be at the same time next year? A prominent dried fruit man holds that the best value in raisins can be secured this year by buying fancy seeded raisins and remarked that his customers seem to be of the same opinion. The market is unique in the fact that the grades usually quoted at a low price are higher than those which in an ordinary year command a high price and which are now easier. Currants remain firm, peaches, apricots and pears are steady and of good quality.

Tea.—Firmness prevails in the tea market. Prices are stiff and the supply is limited. The manager of one firm, illustrating this condition, pointed to his Japan tea shelves, stating that he had only four samples instead of two shelves of tins as is usually the case.

According to consular reports, black tea shipments from Ceylon to the United States for the first nine months of 1911. totalled 6,465,645 pounds, an increase of 1,309,932 pounds over the same period last year. Canada received 4,384,187 pounds, an increase of 305,671 pounds and much of this quantity was for the United States.

One report on Ceylon tea says the shipments to the United Kingdom up to October 2 were 1,500,000 lbs. below the shipments for the same period last year. During the three last months of 1910, shipments were small indeed, and there is but little doubt that last year's total will be reached before the end of December. Considering that the total crop for 1910 was behind the previous year to the extent of 8,000,000 pounds, it would have been serious for distributors of Ceylon tea had this year's crop again shown a shrinkage; as it is, with probably the same quantity as last year forthcoming, the present high prices are almost certain to be maintained for many months to come.

Coffee.—Market conditions are practically unchanged. Prices remain high, but there is a good steady demand reported from the trade. The primary market shows slight changes, but for the most part nothing has occurred that will affect the retailer.

Spices.—Spice grinders report a brisk business with prices firmly held. The trade is now passing through a good season which accounts for the keen interest being shown in the market.

Brooms.—Still another advance in the price of brooms. This time it is 25 cents a doz., and the market is firm at the rise. Those who have followed this market remember the references made to it but a short time ago.

French Alimentary Pastes.—An advance of three francs per 100 kilos has been announced in French alimentary pastes. The kilo is equal to 2 1-5 lbs. and the franc has a value equal to twenty cents for practical purposes.

Rice and Tapioca.—Reports from Rangoon say 363,000 acres under rice have been destroyed by heavy floods in Lower Burma. There may be 100,000 acres replanted. The acreage of the crop from which exports are being made amounts to 7,485,853, the total quantity being about 2,500,000 tons. There will probably not be over 2,000,000 tons available for export when the present crop matures. The supply of rice now available for export is nearing exhaustion on account of unprecedented demands from China, Java, and other countries. Only small quantities are available for export. Any attempt to purchase 5,000 tons or over would cause prices to go up still higher. There is grave danger of a rice famine in Burma until the new crop is harvested. Retail prices have advanced 50 per cent.

Canned Goods.

Montreal.—There is a noticeable firmness in certain lines of canned fruits. For instance, rhubarb, strawberries, raspberries, and Lawtons, are all at a price much in advance of the opening figures. Spinach, beans, tomatoes, corn and peas, are vegetables that have left the opening prices behind, and as the season advances changes in prices may be expected, as various lines become exhausted. There is a good demand just now, and the shipping of canned goods is an unbroken labor. The grocer with a liberal supply of canned goods foresees a stock which will certainly not become cheaper. In fact, he is in a position to make money out of this department before next summer comes, if prices continue to advance as they have done this early in the season.

Toronto.—Price changes in canned goods have been lacking this week. Deliveries of late canned goods still continue, and the retailer having his winter supply feels more secure. Already there are many lines which could not be duplicated at the price at which he bought. Most noticeable in this regard is tomatoes. Peas, beans, and corn, are other vegetables that have left the opening price. In fruits, strawberries and raspberries have advanced the most. There are none of these lines but which wholesalers consider goods worth having. With the situation in tomatoes and peas so well known, with jams and berries in small supply, and with the small pack of sockeye salmon and other features that have been mentioned before, general canned goods are good property. At least, this is the general opinion of the wholesale trade.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Evaps—Easier.

Dates—New stock arrived.

Valencia Raisins—Continue firm.

Canned Goods—General steadiness.

Toronto, Nov. 23.—If there is any lack of new business with the local wholesale houses, it is well made up in the business of getting goods previously ordered, out to the retail trade. There is a rush at present to get what orders that are left, out before the close of navigation. Transportation companies are setting the dates of the closing of acceptances of goods over water routes. The total amount of goods going out from the wholesale houses reaches a big figure.

Wholesale grocery travelers report a general healthy trade throughout the country districts. Merchants are now planning and arranging to care for the Christmas trade. Farmers are now reaping the proceeds of their summer's work and with the good prices that have ruled for butter, eggs and other commodities, money appears to be fairly free. At least, wholesalers report that collections are quite good, which is generally a reflection of existing conditions in the finances of the farmers.

"Just as bad as ever" is the report in reference to the slow delivery of goods by the transportation companies, which is causing wholesale houses considerable trouble and delaying the shipment of certain lines to the retail trade. One wholesaler said he has had five cars of goods here for over a week and has not yet received them. Others report conditions equally as bad. Needless to say, the railway companies are getting their "calls" from the wholesale men for not being able to handle their freight with greater rapidity.

Sugar.—The market shows little change from a week ago. United States prices continue to adjust themselves to the new conditions, but Canadian prices remain stationary. Indeed, in Europe, the market is a little stronger than 10 days ago. The Brussels Convention on Dec. 8 to consider export of surplus sugar from Russia apparently holds the key to the situation. Even if Russia is allowed to export her surplus supply, some believe that no difference will be felt here until first of the year, while others look for an immediate weakening. Perhaps the most important feature this week is the dispatch that Great Britain is preparing to withdraw from the Brussels Convention unless the powers concerned agree to let her have more sugar. Present increase in price of sugar in England has aroused considerable protest among British consumers and the foreign secretary announced that unless the powers permit Russia to export at least 500,000 tons of sugar westward during current season, the British Government has decided not to adhere to the convention after September, 1913, which is the earliest date at which she can withdraw.

The prospects for the Cuban crop continue favorable.

Syrup and Molasses.—A good seasonable trade is reported in syrups, both corn and maple. Molasses are moving about as well as usual. The market at least shows no weakness. Prices have been expanding elsewhere but no change has taken place here, quotations still being within the ideas of wholesalers.

Dried Fruits.—The decks had been pretty well cleaned of old stock dates and the new season's supply which came in this week, were welcomed. Most jobbers had a considerable amount sold ahead for delivery on arrival. The quality of the new crop is good, and retailers are featuring them to good advantage.

General lines continue steady. Valencia raisins following conditions in the primary market, are most noticeable in this regard. Prunes have taken on a stronger tone at some other points, but prices are unchanged here. Large sizes are not plentiful and this helps to stiffen the whole situation. The strength at other points should make prunes well worth watching.

Figs are firm in the primary market and difficulty would be found in repeating earlier values. Evaporated apples continue easy at 8½ to 9 cents.

Tea.—Tea continues to hold a position of steadiness. The average of the sale prices of India tea at London Auction for October was 9½d. per lb., as against 8½d. per lb. for the corresponding month of last year. In Ceylon tea the average was 9¼d. as against 8½d. per lb. last October.

An important feature to be watched is the fact that shipments from Ceylon for the month of October show an increase of 2,000,000 lbs. over the figures for the same period of last year, and the estimated shipments for November are no less than 3,000,000 lbs. more than the actual shipments of November in 1910, and should this estimate be realized, it is quite possible that this year's production will be quite equal, if not rather more than last year, which result was quite unexpected, even a few weeks ago.

Coffee.—While New York coffee options continue to fluctuate, spot coffee varies little from its high position. A fair demand from retailers is reported, and consumption is apparently holding up pretty well against the high price. Local prices continue steady.

MANITOBA MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Unchanged.

Syrup—Weak.

Coffee—Strong and active.

Winnipeg, Nov. 21.—Sharp cold weather has been prevailing during the week with temperatures ranging from zero to 40 degs. below over the entire West. Such conditions following the heavy snowfall of last week assisted materially in handicapping threshing operations. In spite of this, however, many outfits have been busy, yet many acres will be left untouched till the spring in stacks before a single grain is shelled. These unsatisfactory conditions combined with the unreadiness of wholesale firms and railroad companies for severe winter weather, has tied up the movement of incoming and outgoing freight at many points through the West, and Winnipeg is as bad as any. Wholesalers report that at all terminals these conditions exist, but that conditions in Winnipeg will be straightened out before any damage has been done to trade or to the supplies in transit.

In the general lines the situation is identical with last week. One of the largest wholesalers this morning in discussing conditions said briefly: "No change whatever in conditions. The various markets remain unchanged and in the same condition as they were last week."

Sugar.—Market remains in its weakened condition and some surprise has been expressed that lower figures have not been quoted by now. The demand is light, in fact just enough to keep retailers fairly well supplied, while stocks in the city are low.

Dried Fruit.—An active demand has been in existence for new figs, which arrived on the market last week. Wholesalers report first week's sales to be very encouraging and expect to do a large volume of business before Xmas. Valencia raisins are also moving rapidly and many late orders have been received during the week.

Live Poultry.—There is much speculation as the size of stocks that will be available for the Christmas trade at the present time. Dealers complain that so far receipts of local poultry are not much more than 50 per cent. of what they were at this time last year. They attribute this to some extent to delayed threshing and look for an immediate increase. One large wholesaler who in former years has always visited eastern points to secure his Christmas supply pointed out that in his opinion it would now be a question of marketing the birds in time rather than quantity of available supply. As regards the last respect he believed there were twice as many birds in the country this year, and he was going to take the chances of securing his supply from local stocks.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Nov. 23.—Dealers report for past week continuation of quietness which characterized market of late. Few changes of interest have taken place. Business, however, is quite satisfactory and no complaints are heard from trade in general. With many dealers in northern section of the city the business during the last few weeks has been particularly encouraging, because of the approaching close of the up-river traffic, which is not expected to last much longer than a week at most.

Weather has set in cold and increased business is reported on this account as well as from the desire of up-river people to receive their goods before the close of navigation. Orders are being received in goodly quantities, and collections are encouraging.

Although molasses has been firm and with tendency to advance demand is good, and the same is the case with syrups. People are buying no more sugar than is absolutely necessary for immediate use, and because of this sales are none too brisk. There is possibility that sugar may be easier before long, although this is only a conjecture.

ARGENTINE WHEAT ESTIMATE INCREASED.

Late predictions of Argentine wheat crop are that it will reach over 50,000,000 bushels more than the bumper yield of 1907. The U. S. expert, B. W. Snow, cables from the Argentine that Republic is capable of producing 250 million bushels of wheat this year, if present conditions continue till harvest, around the first of January. The record crop of 1907 was 192½ million bushels. The basis for raising the estimates was a belief that the acreage had been calculated far too low, although figured at an increase of nearly one-sixth over 1907.

The yield in Argentine will have a considerable bearing on the world's situation of wheat, and, accordingly, flour.

Want Sunday Closing Rigidly Enforced

South Vancouver Dealers Seek Aid From Candidates for City Council—Manufacturers and Wholesalers Selling Direct Again Severely Criticized.

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 23.—(Special.)—The recently-organized South Vancouver Retailers' Association, at its first meeting took up several local problems of interest. That the meeting was a satisfactory one indicates the need of organization, for it is only in co-operation that successful effort can be made to right things.

One of the subjects for discussion was Sunday closing. The law has been laxly observed in and about Vancouver, and it was stated at the meeting that ten retail stores, carrying full lines of groceries, were believed to remain open Sundays. This action was criticised, and the secretary was instructed to write to all candidates for the council at the coming election, with a view to having practice stopped.

Another subject was the canvassing of the consumer direct by wholesale and manufacturing houses. This trouble crops up from time to time in different places. It was pointed out that these canvassers went to various lengths to obtain orders, and it was thought that this was not altogether fair. A motion was passed that the association go on record as opposed to all canvassers going around among the customers of retail stores.

R. D. Dinning, secretary of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association, was present at the meeting and told of the working of the collection department recently installed by the city grocers and of how successful it had been so far. It is not unlikely that as the South Vancouver Grocers' Association is affiliated with the city organization that this collection department will be utilized by them.

NAME ON SIDEWALK EXPENSIVE.

New Westminster, B.C., Nov. 23.—(Special).—The city council of New Westminster will not permit a merchant to have his name stamped in the cement pavement in front of his store. The dealer took advantage of the plastic condition of the cement when it was being laid, and gave himself an advertisement. The city refused to take over that square, and the merchant was arraigned in court on the charge of having unlawfully damaged property. He was fined $5 and costs, and ordered to pay $12, the cost of replacing the damaged section of the walk, which the city demanded from the contractors free from blemish.

W. E. Forbes, Richibucto, N.B., has completed an addition to his store making it now 125 x 40 feet. A large refrigerator is among the additions to equipment.

Ruppell Brothers, Listowel, Ont., have purchased the grocery business of N. Krotz who is retiring.

A. A. Farrar, Tweed, Ont., has opened a grocery store in the stand recently occupied by L. P. Trounce. This will be a "no credit" store.

It cost Montreal $1,700 to seize and examine the now famous Chinese eggs. The analyst gets $1,200 and the consulting attorney $500.

E. Jackson, has purchased the business at the corner of McDonel and Aylmer St., formerly operated by the late J. M. Donovan, at Peterboro, Ont.

But do you know this, Mr. Retailer?

Our oysters are produced in the freshest waters on the Atlantic Coast, in Long Island Sound. They are beautiful, large, wholesome stock with a delightful salt sea flavor.

Or if your trade prefers or uses a smaller oyster, why not try our Virginia stock? They are just as choice as Long Island stock, but the oysters do not average such a large size. They are much cheaper, but no better value is given in oysters to-day.

MAKE PROVISION FOR QUICK FOOD TEST

System Organized by French Analyst—One Can Have Milk Tested Before Breakfast—Expected to Reduce Sales of Adulterated Goods.

Paris, France, Nov. 23.—The director of the Paris municipal laboratory, M. Kling, has organized a system of rapid analysis mainly for the purpose of providing a means whereby retail tradespeople can test the goods they deal in before offering them for safe. It offers at the same time to the private consumer an opportunity of testing the quality of the food he buys.

Samples are to be accepted every morning except on Sundays and holidays, between the hours of 7 and 9, and the results of the analysis will be given within a few hours to the depositors. Attention is to be given to specially expedite the milk analysis, so as to reduce to a minimum any delay in delivery.

Elaborate directions are given as to the manner of presenting the samples. In the case of milk, the bulk is to be well mixed, so that an average sample can be obtained. It is believed that the new regulations being so simple and easily put in operation, will be the means of detecting quickly all inferior food products, and thereby greatly reducing the possibility of the sale of adulterated goods.

The new system is not, of course, intended to replace the existing method of making a complete analysis. The latter will continue to be made gratuitously, but as it necessitates a delay of several days, the above plan has been devised to provide the trade and public with a quick means of protecting itself against the extensive adulteration of food going on in Paris at the present time.

Are Comparing Business on Cash and Credit Basis

To judge which is the better method of conducting a store, on a cash or a credit basis, is a difficult question.

Burr Brothers, Rockford, Ill., are operating both. They have for a long time conducted a credit business. Now they have opened up another store on a strictly cash basis.

It is a cash store, no delivery, no phones, none of the "expensive" expenses. The other and older store has all the usual expenses that go with a good profitable credit business. Business is good at both of the stores.

The two cater to two different classes of trade. The woman who buys for cash, watchful always of the price, and the woman who orders the best she can get, over the phone and wants the goods delivered.

The inauguration of a cash store by these merchants in a town where they have done a successful credit business for many years, is proof of the statement that it is a difficult matter to say which is the better, a cash or credit plan.

The delivery system at the new store is varied and unique. Baby carriages boy-size express wagons, go-carts, the madame's electric, father's tired arms, etc., carry away the goods.

Keith Account System

As convenient to operate as a roll-top desk.

In Case of Fire which would you rather say, "I might have saved my accounts," or, "I am glad I have saved my accounts?"

WOULD YOUR ACCOUNTS BE SAFE---NOW?

Of course, you may never have a fire' but you can never tell--that is why you pay out a little each year in Fire Insurance to protect the money you have in your stock of goods.

One-writing. Selt-Indexing. Fire-Proof.

Your goods are converted into accounts---almost the equivalent of money---then, why should they not have even equal or greater protection?

The "KEITH SYSTEM" Solves this problem

It begins where Fire Insurance leaves off.

It protects your accounts fully and without costing you one red cent.

This sounds almost too good to be true, don't it? But it's the plain Gospel truth and we can prove it.

Let us send you positive evidence on the fireproof feature along with catalog "H," which will show you how simply and perfectly this system works out its cost, and then continues to make and save money for you.

The Fluctuation in Live Hog Prices

Values are Changeable—Many Movements in Market Since May—New Laid Eggs Extremely Scarce and High in Price—Storage Stocks Going Out—Butter Also Firm—Lard in Good Demand and Holding Steady.

Live hog values run up and down with the same inconsistency as the thermometer during the fall season. The changeableness must indeed give some trouble to the farmer who is trying to sell his supply at the high figure. The price goes up and about the time he decides to market his hogs, values begin to decline. Take, for instance, on the Toronto market. At the end of May quotations by Toronto dealers at country points were $5.75. Then values began to ascend and, backed by a high English bacon market, had reached $7.70 around September 1. Then market broke and prices hit the toboggan slide for a total drop of $2, bringing them down to as low point as they had reached in two years. Stinted supplies checked downward rush and started values moving again in opposite direction. Last week as high as $6.70 was reached, and this week values are again back, now ruling at $6.50.

Eggs still continue their upward trend and new laids certainly border on luxury class. Supplies are extremely small under usual inactivity of the hen during this season, which is very marked this year. Storage stocks are moving out freely for the housewife must have eggs.

Butter is in same boat with eggs. The production is becoming smaller, and prices are still firming up. Closing of cheese factories has as yet brought little more butter to market. There seems to be better feeling in England in this line, and it is thought that British demand may set in again, as the Australian and New Zealand shipments are falling behind those of last year.

High butter is having a strengthening tendency in lard. Housewives who use butter in cooking, when the price gets too high, naturally turn to lard, At any rate, there is good sale of this commodity and prices are ruling steady. Pork products are on the whole moving freely. Naturally, demand for smoked meats is not particularly brisk, but other lines are doing well.

MONTREAL.

Provisions—The sales of lard are quite a feature of provision market. Pork is also moving freely and hams are fairly active. The present trade is well maintained with prices showing no change for the week. Live hogs are a little firmer here.

seems to be no improvement either. Apparently on account of high price of feed, farmers have allowed the poultry to hunt for their own. Then, again, in some cases they have not been starved previous to killing, as is essential in order to have the finished product the best. The merchants in the country who ship poultry should advise their patrons on the best way of preparing poultry for the market.

The general situation shows little change. One dealer in close touch with the situation says that there will be ample supplies of poultry for Christmas. According to information which he has gathered, turkeys are plentiful and of good quality, although they are small in size. Other lines seem to be in good supply, but it is hoped that farmers will see to proper feeding.

Flour Markets Steady but Unchanged

Same May be Said of Cereals—Export Trade Still Slack—Reports of Damage to Argentine Wheat Crop Instills Some Firmness Into Market—Visible Supply Increases in United States.

"Markets steady, but unchanged," is the way in which the market was summed up by most millers this week. The general situation has much in common with a week ago. A satisfactory activity is generally reported in domestic trade, but fault is still being found with export trade in flour, which still continues slack.

Damage reported throughout the entire wheat belt of the Argentine Republic had a bullish effect on wheat prices at the beginning of the week. The Argentine crop has an important bearing on the world's situation, and up to last week conditions were reported favorable. The crop damage now reported is alleged to have been inflicted by last week's storms, which in some places were said to have been more or less of hurricane character. Prices responded to the damage report, while further firmness was maintained, owing to world's shipments being only about half as large as a year ago.

However, the visible supply of wheat in the United States exhibited a decided increase, while there was disposition in some quarters to somewhat discredit the stories of big damage in the Argentine, so that market still lies in the balance, awaiting further movements to affect a change.

Canadian visible wheat decreased 638,000 bushels last week, as compared with a 840,000 bushel decrease a year ago. Canadian total wheat is 15,427,000 bushels, as against 12,382,000, last year.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—There is but little to report from this market. Flour is one of the staples receiving special attention just now. The local demand is good, and the district is also adding a large share of the trade. Flour is not exactly plentiful and feed flour is scarce. Prices are firm, in sympathy with upward tendency of the price of wheat.

. Cereals.—Condition of the cereal market remains unchanged. Rolled oats are moving steadily before a good seasonable trade. Cornmeal is also attracting considerable attention. Millers report almost the limit in activity. The primary market in oats is slightly firmer.

TORONTO.

Flour.—There is little change in flour situation from a week ago. Wheat quotations are a little higher, but otherwise there is no change. Domestic demand can hardly be found fault with, but conditions are otherwise in regard to export trade, which still continues slack.

WINNIPEG.

Flour.—The domestic or home trade in flour continues to be active and encouraging, but export trade has fallen off considerably during the last two weeks. Millers attribute this to enormous demand that has existed in Great Britain for feeds, and say that British millers have been able to sell by-products of mills for almost as much as they paid for the wheat. To meet this demand for mill-feed they have overstocked with flour and as it has cost them little they are offering it at low rates. Prices on the local market remain firm as follows:

1st Patents	2 85 2 90	3rd Patents	2 50 2 55
2nd Patents	2 60 2 65	1st Clares	2 25 2 30

Mill Feed.—The situation shows little change from what it was two weeks ago and the demand continues fairly active. The most noticeable feature is the decline of $1 per ton in bran and chopped oats. The trade with Germany has eased off somewhat and domestic demand is now the chief market. Prices prevailing to-day are:—Bran, $22 per ton; shorts, $22 to $23; chopped barley, $29 to $30; oats, $27 to $28; barley and oats, $29. Rolled oats is still in active demand at $2.15 per sack of 80 lbs.

South Vancouver, British Columbia, has organized its grocers' association, which will affiliate with the central organization in Vancouver. The officers are:—President, F. J. Rolston; vice-president, E. Stigent; treasurer, J. Norbury; secretary, E. Boswell; directors, E. Dudmen, Mr. Robinson, Mr. Hicks, A. C. White, and Mr. Page.

Think of it from your customers' point of view. People don't know why they dislike a store, but consciously or unconsciously, they avoid a poorly lighted one. On the other hand, in a well-lighted store, customers stay longer, do their shopping better and buy more.

Please your customers and increase your sales by having the best lighted store in town. R-K Lighting System will make it bright as day at a less cost than any other method of lighting. Can be installed anywhere—no matter where you live. You own your own gas plant, always ready to light. Each lamp produces from 500 candle power up, of pure white, brilliant light at an average cost of one cent per hour.

You need a light like this in your store. Write to-day for Booklet "M"—It's free—a postal brings it.

Not an Enterprise for the "Quitter"

"If there is one enterprise on earth," says John Wanamaker, "that a 'quitter' should leave severely alone, it is advertising. To make a success of advertising one must be prepared to stick like a barnacle on a boat's bottom.

"He must know before he begins it that he must spend money—lots of it.

"Somebody must tell him that he cannot hope to reap results commensurate with his expenditure early in the game.

"Advertising does not jerk; it pulls. It begins very gently at first, but the pull is steady. It increases day by day and year by year, until it exerts an irresistible power."

Potatoes are Holding a Firm Position

Prices Already Considerably Higher Than Last Year—Yield Eight Million Bushels Below Last Year—Light Crop in Ontario —Christmas Cranberries Will be High—Late Valencia Oranges About at an End—Navels a Little on the Green Side.

There is a general firmer feeling in potatoes of late. While it is more marked at some centres than others, the general tendency is one of considerable strength. While the fact of the arrival of colder weather and the storage of supplies by farmers may be held accountable for a portion of this, ideas on values are on the whole firmer.

Values are already much higher than a year ago. On the Toronto market for instance $1.40 to $1.50 per bag is quoted as against 85 to 90 cents a year ago. A report from Ottawa estimates the yield in Canada 8,000,000 bushels smaller than last year. In Ontario the crop was light; although small, they were of good quality, being practically free from rot. In New Brunswick, a brisk demand from outside points has been firming prices, while in Manitoba, on account of the cold weather, deliveries are light.

Cranberries are holding up in price, and this associate of the Christmas turkey will be high in price. The production this year was much smaller than was expected at the beginning of the season.

There are some markets, at least, finding fault with the quality of the California navel oranges that have come forward so far. This season has been later than usual, thus accounting for the present supplies being slightly immature. However, it is hoped that this fault will shortly right itself. Florida oranges are selling fairly well. Late Valencias are becoming pretty well cleaned up on Canadian markets. Prospects are bright for a fair supply of good oranges for Christmas trade.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—Lemons are easier in price on local market, and oranges are showing an improvement in enquiry. Malaga grapes and grapefruit are two other lines that are moving well just now. Apples are steady, and with a good demand prices remain unchanged.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits.—Late Valencia oranges are all but done. One firm says they still have 96's and 288's. Others have absolutely none. There have been more arrivals of California navels. In some instances, at least, the quality is not at all pleasing to dealers, on account of lack of ripeness. Floridas are, perhaps, a little better matured, although the color here is none too good. Some Arizona navels are expected within a week. They are well matured, although high in price.

Cranberries hold high in price. Fancy Cape Cod are quoted as high as $12. Nova Scotia stock is offered at $8.50. Imported grapes with the domestic cleaned up, are in fair demand. Snow apples are a scarce commodity.

Vegetables.—Potatoes, as suggested would be the case last week, continue to strengthen up. New Brunswick under a firmer tendency in that province, are quoted at $1.50, while Ontario stock rules around $1.40 per bag. Perhaps one reason that offerings are not quite so free, is that farmers are beginning to store them away. At any rate there is a firm feeling.

Parsnips are held higher, while carrots are also slightly higher. Boston cucumbers are quoted at $2.25 per dozen, and head lettuce at $1.10 per dozen.

The estimate of the yield of potatoes in Ontario as sent out by the government is 3,918,698 bushels, as against 21,927,804 in 1910. Carrot estimates are 815,129 bushels, as against 1,049,348 in 1910, and turnips 39,664,275 bushels, as compared with 49,425,472 in 1911.

Fish - Oysters

Advent Now Only One Week Distant

First Big Season of Fish Demand Opens on December 3—Increased Activity Anticipated—Dealers Preparing for a Good Trade—Oysters Should be Given Attention—Fish Situation in Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland.

Sales of fish have been running along at a good clip for some time, but another week will bring them into the heat of the race and increased activity is expected

Advent which marks the beginning of the big fall season of sales is now but one week away, Dec. 3 being the opening day.

Already good volume of orders has been coming in for delivery before that date. Dealers are evidently expecting good consumption of this line during next few weeks.

This is the season of the "oyster supper" and dealers will do well to give attention to this line, more especially for the next couple of weeks.

Nova Scotia reports that the arrival of fresh fish last week was light, owing to the stormy weather. Finnan haddie are in good demand both from Canadian and export points.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—Orders have been coming forward for delivery in time for the first week of Advent, beginning December 3, and there is evidence of an increased enquiry for fish throughout the country. Some report their sales to be heavier now than they have ever experienced. Supply of smoked and prepared fish is fairly good, but is continually changing with the result that on some days the situation approaches a shortage. However, the season is getting away to a good start, and it should continue to increase during the next few weeks. Oysters are moving steadily with a heavy demand reported. Enquiry for oysters in the shell is also encouraging.

Toronto.—There is good volume of teade in evidence in fish and, for the season of year, dealers are apparently well satisfied with sales. Advent which is now but one week distant is expected to instil even greater activity into this line. Oysters are also moving out freely.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

St. John's.—Herrings have struck in around different parts of the island in large numbers and fishermen are obtaining good fares which they are salting down, as no American or Canadian herring vessels have as yet arrived to buy them. On account of fine weather conditions the fishermen along the coasts are obtaining good catches of cod-fish with hook and line. Cod fish still appear to be plentiful.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—Owing to stormy weather during the past week, the receipts of fresh fish have been light on the local markets. Mackerel are selling well. Shippers are paying $15 per hundred for them. The most of these fish are iced and shipped direct to Boston. There is keen competition among the cold storage companies for fresh mackerel and they are buying up all the fish offering.

Large stocks of herring are being laid up. These will be used by lobster fishermen for bait as soon as the season opens.

Haddocks are more plentiful on the grounds when the opportunity offers for the fishermen to set their trawls. Large quantities of these fish are now being cured and smoked and placed on the market, selling as finnan haddies. These fish sell well and the exports are quite heavy. Kippered herring in boxes are also selling freely for export and the sales of "Digby Chickens" are also large.

The first smelts of the season were placed on the local market last week. The quantity was not sufficient to supply the demand. Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick are shipping large quantities to U.S. markets, principally New York.

Oysters are selling freely in bulk. The high price of the best oysters in shell restricts trade to some extent, but nevertheless the sales are reported to be good. While this is the season that halibut is scarce, there is sufficient quantity on the market to supply the local demand from dealers.

Here and There Throughout Grocerydom

Odds and Ends for the Busy Dealer—St. Louis Women Want Goods Handled in Sanitary Method—English Grocers Want Size of Cheese Reduced—Pickle Vegetables Not so Plentiful in the United States This Year—Chop Suey the Latest Canned Article in Chicago—Other Interesting Notes.

Women of St. Louis, Missouri, have formed the Women's Food Association which has for its purpose, the betterment of food purity and of the stores in which food is dispensed. It threatens to accomplish its object by a boycott of grocers who sell impure food and who fail to keep their stores absolutely sanitary.

Chop suey in the Chinese style is the latest in canned goods to be put on the market by a Chicago house. It can be served either hot or cold.

At the quarterly meeting of the Grocers' Association of the United Kingdom, a resolution was passed that the Canadian Government be approached as to the increasing size, year after year, of cheese. They considered the lack of uniformity of weight from 62 to 94 lbs., unsatisfactory, and recommended a uniform size around 56 lbs., or twins 30 to 40 lbs. each.

It was complained that there has been a tendency in recent years for Canadian cheese to grow larger and larger, until now, instead of the old sizes which were convenient to handle, they had got to weigh 90 lbs. The matter will be taken up with the Canadian Government.

"Vegetables used in the manufacture of pickles," says a United States writer, "are not so plentiful this year as they were a year ago. The dry hot weather during the summer months was bad for cucumbers. In particular sections the late yield has been good. Packers are holding for better prices which they feel they will be able to get later." Canada imports considerable cucumbers for pickling from the States.

A fund is being raised by Missouri grocers for publicity purposes, that is to carry on a campaign to show the public that the retailer is not the cause of high prices existing in foodstuffs. This fund will be used to not only present the retailers' side before the public, but for the purpose of teaching the housewives how to practise economy in the kitchen in buying and preparing foods for the table.

They hold that a comparatively small percentage of the salary of the average wage-earner is spent on the table. They claim there are two chief causes of the high cost of living; the increase of consumers over producers and the extravagance of the average American family.

The population of Japan is increasing faster than the increased output of foodstuffs. The population has been increasing at the rate of 1.2 per cent. per annum. The output of rice, the principal foodstuff of the Japanese has also increased of late years but it is evident that the supply of rice will gradually fall short as the population increases. There seems no prospects of any great increase in the production of rice sufficient to meet the increasing demand in Japan, and it is therefore necessary to look to the colonies Formosa and Korea, for a supply to make good the deficit.

The name "orange" is from a Latin word meaning golden or of golden color. The first oranges were a small bitter berry, little larger than a good-sized cheery, and very seedy. In the eighth century the fruit was considered a poison and it was not until the 16th century that oranges were extensively cultivated in Italy, Spain or France. The Spaniards improved the product and succeeded in cultivating it in the West Indies, from which it found its way to Florida, California and South America. Luther Burbank, the plant wizard, is credited with having invented the seedless navel orange.

Toronto City Council is asking for tenders for 90 tons of molasses. This does not mean that the city is going into the gingerbread business. This commodity is to be used as part of the diet of the horses employed in the street cleaning department. This should suggest to the grocer a sideline which it should pay him to carry—molasses for feeding purposes. There are many grocers who already have a considerable trade in this line. Those who have not would do well to look into the matter.

"Killing two birds with one stone," was what the merchant called it.

A customer who lived about a mile out of town and who had a phone rang him up and asked him to have an order—not a very large one—delivered. The order in itself would hardly pay for the delivery but to oblige the customer he would do as requested.

Then an idea, and let it be said that ideas are what make a success of business, struck him. There was another customer who lived near the same place, and who also had a phone. He rang this one up, said that he was going out that way, and asked if there was anything they would like brought. There was, indeed, a very substantial list of goods which was at that moment required.

The order was taken, two birds killed with the one stone, and the delivery turned into a profitable operation.

B. C. POTATO PROSPECTS.

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 23.—(Special)—British Columbia's recent win of the big prize for the best potatoes grown in America, indicates possibilities of soil in this province. Although the best can be grown here, they are scarce in the market for the reason that enough of them have not been produced. Not that they are not a paying product, for the quotation now is $28 for locals and $35 for Ashcrofts. They are not scarce just at present, though the prospect is that before next year's supply comes in, the price will be high and the stock will be small. This happens each year and will for some time, until the people on the land grow more potatoes.

Vancouver had a foot of snow on November 9th, and a sharp bit of weather. This will mean a stiffening in the price of potatoes and probably an increase. Many potatoes are in the fields, and if they escape from being touched by frost, it is not improbable that potatoes in transit, and many car loads are on the rails, will be damaged slightly.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE

No Weak Link There

No Profits Lost

See how it works, Brother Grocer.

A woman is ready to buy from you 50 bags a year, maybe more.

But she will not purchase the 50 bags unless the last bag be as good as the ones that have gone before.

If the first bag be right—and the second—and the ninth—

She purchases the tenth with confidence.

Your sales keep increasing, you see. Your profit is continuous—because of Steadfast Quality.

But if the tenth bag be bad, will she purchase the eleventh?

Will you continue filling her flour requirements?

No—your chain of profits snaps at the tenth purchase.

You have profited only on ten bags when you might have profited on the total amount of her yearly purchases.

Don't you see NOW what Uniformity means to flour sales?

If sales are greater than ever, it's because FIVE ROSES flour yields uniform results both in store and kitchen.

Each bag or barrel starts a chain of Permanent Profits.

Five Roses is packed to suit your trade in barrels and halves. Also in bags of 7, 14, 24, 49, and 98 lbs.

Daily capacity, 10,500 barrels.

And each sale is a sturdy link, without flaw or weakness.

This also is true, that the constant effort made in the big mills out West to maintain the integrity of FIVE ROSES, assures to YOU permanency of profits.

This is the only flour that is unreservedly guaranteed—

Simply because it needs no guarantee.

Sell quality, Brother Grocer, not in one barrel, or two barrels, but in each and every barrel.

Sell FIVE ROSES—sell it NOW.

Write your Jobber—or our nearest office.

CHEESE AS A FOOD

The following, no doubt, will interest many people who hold the idea that Cheese is indigestible. Secretary Wilson of the United States Department of Agriculture has made 184 tests recently and has now given to the public something of great interest, not only as to Cheese being of great food value, but as a cheap and easily digested food. This applies to children as well as adults. True, there are many kinds of Cheese, many of them made and consumed before they are properly cured and ripened. When care is shown in the proper development of Cheese, naturally the Cheese will not only be better Cheese as food value, but more easily digested. MacLAREN'S IMPERIAL CHEESE in jars, and MacLAREN'S CANADA CREAM CHEESE in packages have held a premier position in the world as Cheese products for the past twenty years.

A total of 184 Cheese experiments were made at Wesleyan University, and sixty-five subjects, most of them college students, took the opportunity to live on free Cheese. The amount of Cheese eaten varied somewhat, according to the appetite and preference of the subjects, but the average ranged from ½ lb. to 1 lb. a day. They were not confined to an exclusive Cheese diet, but had a few slices of bread and some bananas. A record of the health of each subject was kept, and also notes on how the partaker enjoyed it. On the whole, says the report, the Cheese was very palatable, and with a few exceptions the amount given was not considered excessive by the person eating it. A number of the subjects wanted more of the Cheese. They were about equally divided in the preference of a mild or strong Cheese. Secretary Wilson says that a pound of Cheese has nearly or any other fresh meat. It is worth as much as a pound of ham and is more digestible, and is equal to two pounds of eggs and three pounds of fish. In price, it costs about the same per pound as the cheaper cuts of meat, and practically the same as smoked ham or bacon. Secretary Wilson urges as one means of reducing the cost of living a liberal portion of Cheese in the daily fare.

"THE AGRICULTURAL GAZETTE."

CREAM CHEESE FOR CHILDREN

Cream Cheese is an excellent thing to give the children now and again. It makes a most welcome change from butter or jam, and is very nourishing and digestible.

It should be eaten alone, not with butter, and the children should be encouraged to help themselves liberally to salt with it.

Remember that the small white Cheeses which shopkeepers call "curd" are not so nourishing as those which look more yellow and are called "Full Cream."

"MOTHER AND HOME," Sept. 9, 1911.

is reported as having expressed the following in an interview given to a Philadelphia reporter.

"Do you know that I recently read an article by a well-known scientific man to the effect that Cheese is an excellent article of diet? I wish I had read that article a long time ago. I had been afraid that Cheese had a tendency to produce indigestion and for that reason never touched it. Now, I find that its effects are directly contrary, and I eat a great deal of it, and find it agrees with we. Take my advice, eat Cheese, eat slowly, and have outdoor exercise, and you will enjoy good health."

More than 75 per cent. of his customers voted in favor of The McCaskey System. This merchant, Mr. O. Zimmerman, of Jamestown, North Dakota, writes:

"Desiring to learn the wishes of my customers in regard to a system to handle their credit accounts, I submitted to them a choice between a monthly itemized statement and a statement furnished with each purchase, the latter being the principle of The McCaskey System. At the close of the experiment, I am glad to say that a large majority of my five hundred customers expressed themselves in favor of The McCaskey System, which entirely eliminates disputes and improves our collections, enabling us to do a more careful credit business."

Preventing Inroads of the Dead Beat

Make Use of the Association, but Also Remember Your Own Obligation Likewise to Help Your Neighbor—Definite Policy to Pursue When an Application for Credit is Received—Arrange for Date of Settlement and See That the Money is Paid.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

Here is a pertinent inquiry:

Henry Johnson, Jr., Canadian Grocer:—

Dear Sir,—Can you give me any information on how we can head off the dead beats? We have an organization of retail merchants in all lines of business and we shall be very thankful if you can furnish any information on the question.

Respectfully,

R—— L——.

There is one practical, effective mode of procedure which will save any lot of merchants from the depredations of the dead beat. It is simple, too; but its operation calls for patience, persistence and courageous loyalty to each other, and to all others, on the part of the associated merchants. But, seeing this is strictly in the interest of each and every individual merchant, any man who can look ahead and take a broad view of things, will see that it will be dollars and cents in his own pockets to be loyal, and patient, and persistent.

To begin with, you must follow out this plan YOURSELVES, as many of you as stand together now in your association. You must not wait until "all come in" or "the rest agree," for that hoped-for time will never come. There will always be some hangers-out, some who do not think as you do and who are entitled to their own opinions, however wrong they may seem to be. If there are only 50 p.c. of your merchants who stand together, then 50 per cent. must do; if only 25 per cent., than 25 per cent. must be called enough; if there be only 5 per cent., then 5 per cent. must begin the work; and if, as a last illustration, you stand alone, then you alone can make the beginning and save money for yourself even though no other merchant joins you. I know—for I have been there to see; and mostly alone, at that.

Get Money at Time Agreed.

First—Fix it in your mind that personal credit is a favor to the man who gets it; that such favor has value and that it has natural limitations which are to be well defined at time of granting the favor; that the goods you sell on credit are worth the price charged in honest dollars which you have earned just as honestly as if you had swung a pick and heaved a shovel to get them; that, all this being so, you must secure to yourself the fullest possible protection for these dollars which you are about to loan.

Make Date of Settlement.

Second—Open no account with anybody until you have given the applicant's record full and careful investigation. Be frank about this. State that you do a credit business and are anxious to secure all the good accounts you can get; but that you must feel reasonably sure this applicant will pay his bills in full at the end of the agreed period. This, as you will see, means that there are to be no balances left over after the monthly or weekly payment agreed upon.

Your method of investigation is to be simple, according to common sense. Get the applicant's name in full—correct spelling and initials and address. Then you will ask where he has been trading, and some other questions for reference. If a workingman, you will find out where he works and when he gets paid. If a business men, or contractor or builder, you will not only learn what his business is, but, generally, get acquainted with him. Right here let me say that if the applicant gets impatient over your minute questioning you do not want his account. No honest man will ever object to giving such information and honest people are the only kind you want to trust with your property. Get that? YOUR PROPERTY. You want to get used to the idea that when you extend credit, you part with the control of some of your property; and you are not going to let any stranger have the privilege of handling property that is yours—are you?

Take Time to Investigate.

Third—After you get all this information, say that you will be able to give an answer on the application day after to-morrow, in the case of a resident of your own town, or next week, or two weeks hence, in the case of a stranger from another city wherein you must take time to communicate with merchants in other towns. You can judge the requisite time in each case. Then proceed to investigate. If reference has been made to other merchants in your own line, or other lines, in your home town, ring up by phone and ask for information. You may find that the hardware man has sold the party a set of flat-irons which were paid for in two days, but otherwise nothing is known of the applicant. You may have to phone or talk with half a dozen men before you get any really satisfactory details about the party. But do not stop until you have gone the entire round,—and then do not accept the account unless the record is clear and straight as a string. This caution is needful because sometimes you will learn of cases where a dead-beat has traded with one merchant for a month, paid up promptly and then gone to another merchant, giving the first man's name as reference. The second merchant has asked the first and been told the account was good, whereupon he has taken the account and got 'beautifully done;' whereas, had he gone to one or two others, he might have avoided the loss. I have known of just such cases.

Get Full Protection.

Fourth—Finding the account to all appearance good, accept it. Then keep it strictly within limits. It is a mistake to suppose that you make friends or do yourself any kind of good by allowing your bills to run in slipshod fashion. At the end of the agreed period, insist on full settlement. Get every cent due you. Do not sell another item on that account until the bill to date is paid. I do not mean that you shall ask a woman to come to your store in a snowstorm or in the rain to pay your bill. But that, at the first reasonable opportunity after the end of the month or week, you shall expect to see her with her money, failing which, the bill must stop forthwith.

Now, what is the result? The deadbeat may get into you ONCE, by some ingenuity which all your precautions cannot circumvent; but, under this plan, he cannot get into more than one merchant in your town. If you refer frankly to each other and are loyal to each other, you will tell each other the exact situation, as you know it, in each case. Then the merchant to whom application has last been made says plainly to the customer: "No, I cannot trust you. You owe my neighbor, Macpherson, a bill; and until you have paid him, I cannot let you have anything, except for cash." The result is that this particular deadbeat either goes and pays your neighbor or else trades everywhere thereafter for spot cash. You are preventing future losses so far as he is concerned, and the average loss among merchants is this way reduced to a minimum.

Merchandise is Money.

It has been well said that very little money would be lost if men would only realize that one of the best ways to make money is to KEEP IT. For "money" read "merchandise" and you have the present application of the saying.

The Wind Up of the Year's Business

Opportunities for Big Business for Live Dealer During December—Chance to Roll up Record for Year—Christmas the Main Attraction—Advent Season Opens—What Lines Should be Given Prominence—Pushing Sales Between Xmas and New Year's

We are now on the threshold of the last month of 1911, and it is the desire of every merchant to wind up the year with a record sales sheet.

To the dealer whose total sales have fallen behind past years, let this be a call to put up a strong determined effort to pull up during the last month, while to those who have kept even with other years, let this be an incentive to roll up a record which it will be well worth trying to overcome next year.

What Xmas Brings.

Christmas is the main wheel around which trade will revolve this month. It is the main trade creator of perhaps the whole year and the live merchant is undoubtedly benefited by it. The planning and work entailed will be great, but being properly conducted, results are well worth the efforts. Let it be impressed upon the merchant that December is one of the months in which considerable advertising should be done. Dealers have an important theme for advertising—the Christmas season.

Sell Best Dried Fruit.

The housewife is now busy with her Christmas cake and other cooking for the festive occasion. The dealer should now be giving prominence to those goods which enter into the make up of this most important product of the baker's art. Impress on customers the advisability of buying the best procurable in raisins, currants, peels, etc. Window, counter and advertising space should be given freely to display of these articles.

There are special lines such as mincemeat for the famous Christmas pie, cranberries for the sauce, oranges, Malaga raisins, grapes and other articles that all have to be given due prominence.

A Month for Fish.

December instils extra activity into another line handled by the grocery, namely fish. Advent, the first big selling season opens on Dec. 3 and those dealers who handle fish should give some extra attention to this line. Those dealers who have not already added a fish department would do well to consider the proposition. Properly handled, a good profit is secured while now with the weather cool, the trouble in handling is reduced to a minimum.

Nut and Candy Season.

By the second week in December, the grocer should begin to put nuts and candies to the front. If he intends to do any decorating, it should be arranged by the second week if not before. It might be well to say just a few words on the advisisbility of doing some Christmas decorating. There are some merchants who point to the expense incurred but the store can be put in a Christmasy appearance for a comparatively small sum and it tends to put customers in a Christmas purchasing mood. Those novelties and specialties which the dealer handles at this time should be pushed early in the month. Try to crowd as much business as possible into the first two weeks. It will help to reduce the rush of the last week.

Take Advance Orders for Poultry.

The arrangement for the supply of poultry should not be left until too late. Take as many orders as possible for Christmas poultry early in the month, so that you may be able to form a more definite idea of the amount that you will require. Buy so as to have as little as possible left over, but be sure not to disappoint any customers who are depending on you.

The week between Xmas and New Year's should be a busy one. The holiday spirit still reigns supreme. People are in the mood for buying fruit, confectionery, and kindred lines. See that you display them. If you have any lines left over which will be unsalable after the New Year, make an effort to clear them out during this week.

December presents the most excellent opportunities that could be desired for an extra large volume of business. The live merchant will get the biggest share.

After your advertisement is written, go over it carefully and try out each sentence to see whether any reader could possibly misconstrue it.

Unsweetened biscuits to the amount of 17,347 pounds were brought in from Great Britain in September. Sweetened biscuits of 94,791 pounds were brought from Great Britain in the same month.

Chatham Dealer's Commendable Method of Satisfying Customers—Sensational Advertising Criticised — Separate Parcelling Department in Cape Breton Store—A Store With Many New Fixtures—Vancouver Dealer Who Gets Business Above Actual Demand.

Wants Customers Satisfied.

Chatham, Ont., Nov. 30.—That every customer should be satisfied in every detail, is the policy adopted by Wm. Anderson, grocer. Exceptional care is taken in the making up of all orders, and close attention is paid to deliveries. With each order Mr. Anderson sends out the following slip :

"To Our Customers :

Our aim is to send out every order absolutely right. Should there be any article in this order not first-class, we assure you that it is an oversight, and you will do us a great favor by promptly calling attention to it, then it will be cheerfully replaced.

Give us a chance to correct errors.

WM. ANDERSON."

Not only does the sending of this notice create an excellent impression, but it is a reminder to the customer to check over his goods at once, and, in the very rare cases when there is anything overlooked, reporting any shortage.

Separate Parcelling Department.

Sydney, C.B., Nov. 30.—The main store of Harrington's is devoted entirely to the transient trade. Customers are not compelled to wait while orders for delivery are being made up. This latter work is done altogether in the parcelling department. The shelves of this are always lined with newly opened boxes of tinned goods, biscuits, spices, etc. This ensures customers fresh, clean goods, and saves time of clerks and handling of goods.

On the second floor is the china department, a model of neat and tasteful arrangement.

Does Not Favor Sensational Ads.

Ottawa, Nov. 30.—"A good advertisement is certainly of great assistance to the merchant," remarked a local grocer the other day. "The trouble with many advertisements is that the dealer wants to have something altogether out of the ordinary. Something sensational, that will scare someone into a fit, and he will be able to rush in and sell the goods before they recover.

"There are others with high sounding words and phrases, apparently put in to impress the reader, but which fail in their main object—that of interesting the customer in a way that will sell goods. The correct way in my estimation is in simple language, such as you would use to a customer who visits your store.

"If you wanted to interest a man who was in your store, would you approach him and say, 'the most sensational, record breaking, unheard of, below-cost selling ever known anywhere within this county.' No, you would not; then why do you use similar language in an ad.? The ad. that tells the required story in as short and simple a manner as possible, just as if you were talking to the customer is the one that I believe will bring results."

A Believer in Modern Fixtures.

Toronto, Nov. 30.—That the value of display is fully realized by the Higgins grocery store on Yonge St., north, is shown by the arrangement of the store and the various display fixtures, which have been brought into use.

The first thing that strikes a person is the long range of display windows, which are given careful attention. Several mirrors improve their appearance, while at different portions of the interior of the store, mirrors have been installed also. There are counter-bins, in which dried fruits, nuts, peels, etc., are shown, while close to the meat department, a silent salesman shows canned meats. A "U" shaped silent salesman counter shows confectionery to good advantage, while there is another silent salesman for the display of bulk goods. The pull-out biscuit display arrangement for showing fancy biscuits is also used. Two round glass refrigerators show flowers and butter respectively, and besides are an attractive fixture.

A Dealer Who Creates Demand.

Vancouver, B. C., Nov. 30.—"I always make a point of doing that," was the remark made to The Canadian Grocer by a dealer, who had just come from the telephone. It seems that he had just received a few new lines, and remembering the customers who called for them when the season had been in previously, he called some of them up on the phone. The result was, that he had to put in a new order to the jobber.

"Not only does it pay in the handling of the goods," he went on to explain further, "but I find that customers appreciate the fact that I remember what they like. Many of them hardly ever call at the store, doing most of their ordering by telephone, and often my notification is the first they hear that their particular article is on the market again. Of course, this necessitates one keeping in close touch with patrons, but this is done by going over the day's sales slips.

"My own method is to do the telephone work myself, that is the receiving of orders, and this gives the added assurance to the customer of dealing direct with the one in charge. It takes time, but it pays, although half the day is thus taken up. In this way I am in contact with the majority of my customers, and am getting to know their little wants and peculiarities."

RAILWAY DELIVERY SLOW.

From Montreal, Winnipeg and Toronto comes strenuous complaints from wholesalers of the slow delivery of goods by the transportation companies.

This is a problem of interest not alone to the wholesale houses but to retailers all over Canada. Shipments to the trade are being delayed—not through any fault of the jobbers but of the poor service by transportation companies.

This is a serious drawback to trade and relief is badly needed. Apparently the volume of business has increased much more quickly than railway facilities while it is quite evident that cartage facilities are far from adequate. Wholesalers are receiving letters of complaint daily from the retail trade and while their goods may be on the track they are unable to get them.

The railway companies contend that the wholesalers are themselves partly to blame, that wagons are kept standing a great deal longer than is necessary before they can be unloaded at the wholesale houses and that this had added considerably to the congested condition. While this may be true in some cases, it is quite evident that the number of horses and wagons are far from enough.

GOOD MONEY ON BUTTER.

Mr. Bender, New York representative of The MacLaren Imperial Cheese Co., related an interesting incident to The Grocer last week. Incidentally it demonstrates the value of advertising in this paper and the far-reaching results that sometimes accrue to both advertiser and reader.

About a year ago, Mr. Bender explained, an importer came into the office in New York and picked up a copy of The Canadian Grocer. Looking up a quotation on butter, he found that the Canadian price was just 24 cents a pound, whereas the price in New York was 36 cents a pound. He took the next train for Toronto and purchased a large quantity of butter at 24 cents a pound and after paying the duty and freight was able to dispose of same at good margin of profit.

Some of the Toronto commission merchants, no doubt, made big sales to this man and were not aware the business they secured was due to The Canadian Grocer.

CANNED GOODS NOT DELIVERED.

Some wholesalers are complaining of some canners agreeing to give them certain quantities of canned goods and not living up to their agreements. This was in all probability due to the general increase in value of these goods since prices were first named.

One wholesaler not at all pleased, and justly too, with a representative of a certain house who had promised him 2,000 cases of a particular line expressed himself in strong terms. "Wait till that fellow comes around here next year," he said "and I'll kick him out on the street."

It certainly cannot be considered good business to break an agreement of this nature, no matter whether verbal or written. It is a good example of poor service and such acts never tend to business building.

"FAKE ADVERTISING" COMMITTEE.

In another page of this issue is the report of a polished scheme on the part of a trade paper canvasser in Chatham, Ont., which should be carefully read. It shows that he went about from merchant to merchant taking subscriptions for mythical trade newspapers at $1 per year and at same time each subscriber was entitled to receive 200 lead pencils with his name, address, etc., stamped on them.

The free deal had the effect of enticing a number to subscribe, but, although a month has passed there is no sign of either publication or pencil.

This sort of fake can easily be prevented if there is a smooth working association in the town and if the association has a committee with power to deal with all such schemes.

When a merchant is canvassed by a salesman for any proposition that might be of a questionable character, he could then be in a position to send the canvasser to the secretary of the committee on "Fake Advertising." If the approval of the committee were given, the merchant could suit himself whether he purchased or let it alone.

If, however, the committee after investigation determined that the scheme was a fake or against the interests of the association, the canvasser would know at once he would have to pass along to other fields of operation.

That there is bound to be periodical visits to various centres by men with questionable propositions is beyond a doubt. Merchants should have some means of combating them and a "Fake Advertising" committee in a local association is one of the weapons that would accomplish the result.

THE FIRMNESS IN RICE.

A short crop of Louisiana rice is now reported. That planters figured on 15 per cent. bigger yield than they are harvesting is the statement of one authority. The shortage prevails throughout Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas.

There is an increasing demand for rice produced in the United States because of the shortage in eastern countries. Brewers are taking 50 per cent. more of the southern rice than previously owing to this shortage abroad.

Besides foreign countries are endeavoring to keep their supplies for home consumption.

SELL OYSTERS NOW.

During December, grocers have a good opportunity to sell oysters to many of their customers. They will appeal particularly to those who observe Advent and any attempt to attract the latter will doubtless bring many of the general public.

With Wednesday and Friday fish days to a certain number of people, oysters will sell themselves to a certain extent, but with some selling effort behind them during the next three weeks there should be a big trade and the grocer will find his oyster business profitable and more extensive than he probably expected. This is an opportunity that should not be overlooked.

SELLING BAD WALNUTS.

If a customer asks for some particular article, is it wise policy to give her a poor quality, even supposing that it is the only one of its kind in stock? Or would you prefer to miss the sale, and tell her the actual fact—that while you had it in stock you could not recommend it?

Here is a case in point, which came under the observation of the writer. A housewife in purchasing her usual supply of groceries, ordered some mixed almonds and walnuts in the shell. When they were emptied into a dish, the proportion was found to be about 10 to 1 in favor of the almond This looked suspicious to the purchaser, and these suspicions were quite justified, when it was discovered that not one of the walnuts was good. All were worm-eaten almost into a sawdust.

Did not the grocer know their condition? Evidence indicated that he did, else why should he be so careful to give but a few of them in comparison to almonds? He must have had many complaints. Yet he still persisted in handing out worm-eaten nuts.

Is this business building? Is it likely that when new walnuts are on the market, many of his present customers who have been "taken in," will buy from him?

One of the essential features of a strong business is giving the customer the quality expected. While it may be poor policy considering present profits to decline to sell an article asked for on account of its quality, yet, such a policy wins out in the end, by gaining the confidence of the public.

The trade in Toronto regretted to learn of the death last week of J. J. Ryan, wholesale provision merchant, of that city. Mr. Ryan was familiarly known as the "Potato King." His death was quite sudden.

Lesson 8---Complete Course in Cardwriting

The Edwards Short Cut System — Showing One of the Speediest Brush Stroke Letters Used in Modern Cardwriting — The Slant Roman

(By J. C. Edwards. Copyright Canada, 1911.)

The greater speed a cardwriter can attain and yet turn out a neat, clear card, the more valuable he is, for in this day of hurry and scurry, the man who gets there first is the one who wins his spurs first.

In the accompanying plate we show the fastest practical lettering that the cardwriter of to-day will be called upon to do and yet it is as legible as its mate, the Brush Stroke Roman.

The greater speed lies in the slant which is the natural tendency or position for fast forward movement. For instance, a bicycle rider leans as far forward as he can when he is racing ; a horse, in running, leans in the same way and it is so in most things when speed is desired. However, this gets away from card-writing and from the real reason why this lettering is more quickly made than the straight style.

Card showing application of letter here described.

When you first started lettering, did you not find your lettering had an almost irresistible tendency to lean over to the right ?

This is accounted for by the hand taking its natural untrained course as regarding card-writing and its training from infancy in writing.

Now that the student has mastered the straight up and down style of showcard lettering so far, we will give a little instruction in the more speedy brush work.

The beauty of this style lies almost entirely in the degree of success in getting a uniform slant to the letters and in the sharp clean spurs.

The best way to start is to take your practice paper and rule it in a series of pairs of lines. Then note the angle of the first stroke in letter B, not A, for the first stroke in A is necessarily at a greater slant than is necessary in most of the other letters owing to the two slanting lines coming together to form the letter face. Place your square or any ruler on the card or practice paper at the same angle as the above mentioned 1st stroke B, and draw parallel lines faintly between each pair of cross lines at intervals of two inches or so. This will give you guide lines to regulate your angle until you get it thoroughly fixed in your mind. Practice making parallel lines with the brush at the above slant. Don't be afraid to practice.

You will notice that, while this style of lettering is very much the same as the preceding brush stroke Roman of plate 6, there are a few points of difference which tend to add speed.

Take for instance the letter C and compare the brush stroke, second, or finishing stroke, in the above plate with the corresponding stroke in plate 6, and try to make both. You will find it requires more effort on your part to manipulate the brush to execute the last one.

Then look at the centre stroke (No. 5) in the E and compare it with the series of strokes (5, 6, 7 and 8) in E of plate 6. The same applies to F. You also gain time on stroke 2 of the J, strokes 2 and 3 of the S, and stroke 3 of the G.

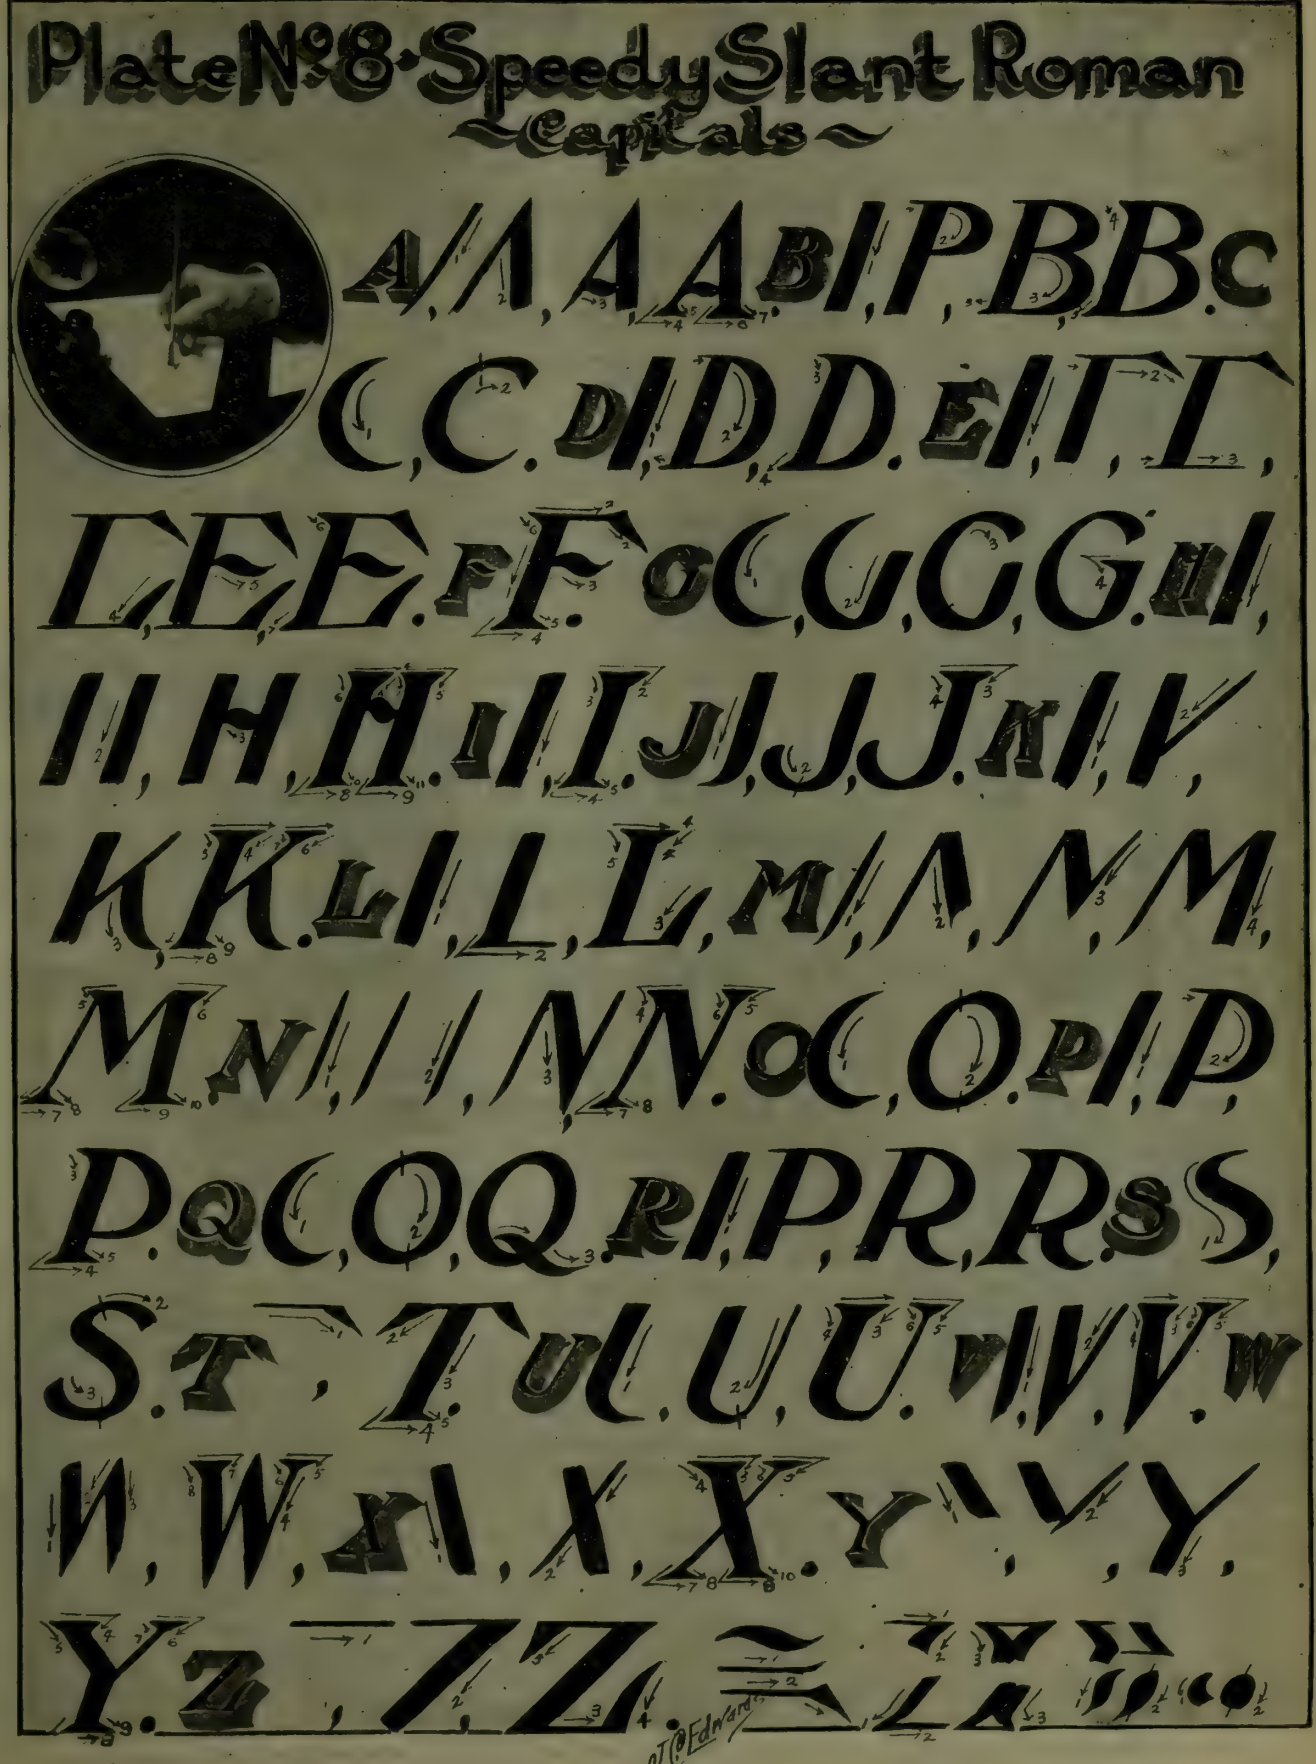
It will be noticed that a few of the details are worked out in the lower right hand corner of the plate. This shows the spurs in detail, also the formation of the top of the T, E and F.

The shading shown in this plate is the right hand lower style, and is one that is not commonly used but is merely demonstrated here to give variety.

It is harder than the left hand lower as shown in plates 6 and 7, and is also more difficult than the right-hand top shading previously shown. We do not advocate its use on this style of lettering as it is not speedy enough. However, practice makes perfect and speed is the result of perfection.

The brush must be held always at the same angle to ensure correct shading. You must take for granted that the light falls on this letter from the left hand top corner of the card which would throw a shadow as indicated on the plate.

The accompanying card shows the speedy slant Roman put in actual use. The decoration consists of a large $ mark in grey, forming a relief for the lettering.



The dollar mark carries out the idea of the inscription and strengthens it to some degree.

The speed slant lettering is particularly well adapted for use on price cards and general quick store work. Practice the straight slant strokes until you have perfected them, and got the angle firmly fixed in your mind.

For particulars regarding brushes, etc., write to The Canadian Grocer or to the author, J. C. Edwards, care of MacLean Pub. Co., 143 University Ave., Toronto.

Good Crops in Northern Manitoba

Wheat Yield Turning Out Better Than Expected—Early Cold Weather Chased Home the Eastern Canadian Laborer—Considerable Threshing Yet to be Done—The Usual Optimism Prevails.

(Special Correspondence.

Minnedosa, Man., Nov. 30.—The business situation here in Manitoba north is better than south. Around Hamiota, Miniota, Rapid City, Minnedosa the crops are good, and turning out better than expected, going 30 bushels and over per acre in wheat and oats running up to 100 per acre.

There is very much grain, however, not yet threshed, and it is slow work getting it done now on account of the cold, the thermometer going considerably below zero at night. Another difficulty is the fact that large numbers of the men that came up from the east for the harvest hustled for home as soon as the cold weather came. Not because there was no work, for there is plenty of it, but they do not relish threshing and hauling grain with a caboose for a boarding house while the thermometer is hovering around zero.

These conditions caused the "Tenderfoot" to seek shelter beneath the paternal roofs in Ontario and the Maritime provinces, preferring the reproach of having deserted the western farmer in a time of need, rather than high wages and the cold weather.

Hard on Threshing.

This has very much hampered the threshing operations, the traveling gangs being broken up, so that the farmers have to unite in local gangs and help one another out as best they can. In Northern Manitoba there is probably more than 40 p.c. of the threshing yet to be done, and in Saskatchewan a still larger percentage, while in Alberta there is probably 60 p.c. yet in the stock, or still uncut, or lying in the sheaf not stooked yet.

The flax crop, of which there has been a large area grown, is a fair crop generally, but there are thousands of acres still standing, and thousands more lying upon the ground. In this country very little flax is bound, but is simply cut, left on the field and then gathered up and threshed.

Not Bothering Westerners.

This condition of affairs would seem alarming to eastern farmers, but here it is viewed with apparent little concern, beyond the delay and inconvenience attached. So long as the weather keeps dry, and it is not likely to rain with the thermomether at zero, little harm will result so far as the crop is concerned. It is, however, a handicap to business, as the farmer wants the money to pay his bills, and the merhant to meet his obligations. However, the spirit of the west, ever optimistic, is quite buoyant and confident of a favorable outcome.

Ups and Downs of the Provision Market

Prices of Hog Products at Present About Same as This Time, 1910—Reasons for Variations—How Live Hogs Moved Backward and Forward Since First of 1911.

Provision prices at the present time are about on a level with a year ago, but lard just now is considerably below the quotations ruling at this time last year.

For instance on the Toronto market pure lard is now a full two cents lower. This is accounted for, partly at least, by the fact that hogs this fall are fatter and are producing more lard.

During the year as is only natural, there have been many ups and downs in the price of pork products. Prices tend to follow values of live hogs but there are also other features which help to rule the market. For instance during the summer months there is a big sale for smoked and cooked meats and they accordingly become more valuable property. At the same time trade in lard eases up, which has a depressing effect on the value of that line.

Here is how the Toronto prices of the present time and a year ago compare:

	Dec. 1, 1911	Dec. 1, 1910
Light hams, per lb.	16	16
Medium hams	15½	15½
Large hams	15	15

Cooked hams	24	23

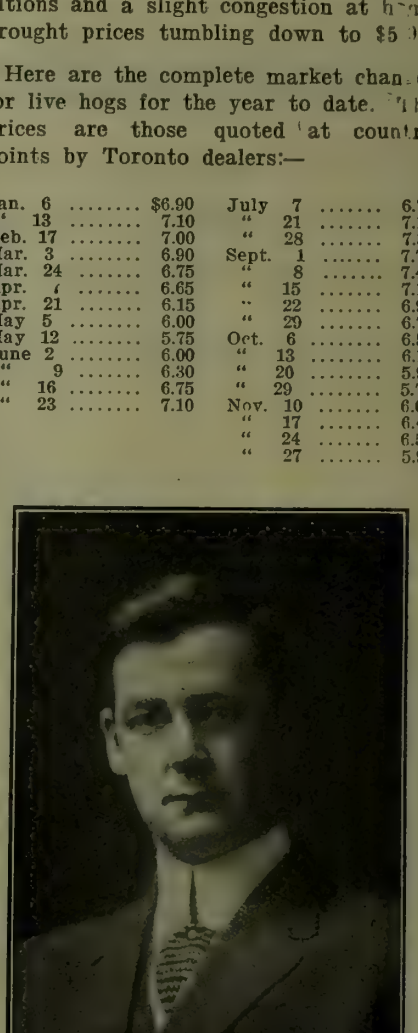
Lard, in pails	12	14
Lard, compound	9¼	12

High Prices of 1910.

The hog market during the past couple of years has been a series of ups and downs. In April of 1910, under the extreme scarcity of offering, prices reached the top notch. Toronto dealers quoted $9.60 per cwt. at country points. Supplies became more plentiful as the year advanced and the price was down to $8.25 in August, continuing on the down grade until $6.75 was reached a year ago.



This year fluctuations in the supply and price of live hogs have been by no means rare. Quite early in the season arrivals began to increase and the low point of $5.75 was reached in May. Then the English bacon market began to soar and under only a normal run of hogs, prices had reached $7.70 on Sept. 1st.

Another Tumble.

Again, circumstances combined to depress the market. The English bacon market sagged. The delivery of hogs increased. Under this pressure prices tumbled downward, coming to the end of their tether only when $5.75 had been reached. The market again reacted upward and two weeks ago quotations were at $6.50, but last week foreign conditions and a slight congestion at home brought prices tumbling down to $5.90.

Here are the complete market changes for live hogs for the year to date. The prices are those quoted at country points by Toronto dealers:—

Montreal, Nov. 30.—The best method of judging the business of the month that ends to-day is to compare the figures with those for November, 1910. One house, it is learned, expects to show an increase of $100,000, for the month alone. This conveys at least a slight idea of how busy the wholesale trade has been during the past thirty days. November last year was a good month but it has been eclipsed entirely. It is hoped that retailers will be able to show a proportionate increase in business by the time the year is ended. There have not been many changes during the week, but the amount of business has been just as heavy.

Jobbers have been more or less annoyed by delayed shipments during the past month or two. First, canned goods were slow in arriving, some lines of dried fruits were late and other goods were delayed in delivery after they had reached the local port. Business became so congested that this delay was probably unavoidable. Still it was felt and it did not help matters.

Split peas, pot and pearl barley, buckwheat flour, peel, Sultana and Valencia raisins, pickles, canned goods and other lines are firm and, in some cases, scarce and dear. The whole grocery market is active and generally satisfactory.

Sugar.—The market is still unchanged and as far as the last week is concerned, is featureless. One jobber said he did not expect a change until January and there are some who would not be surprised to hear of it before that time. There is a fair trade passing, although of the hand-to-mouth character.

Dried Fruits.—There has been no special change during the week. Prunes remain firm in the position last noted. There has been a heavy demand by European buyers for the smaller prunes which have thus become firmer in the primary market. The larger fruit are still strong in position with a good demand. Dates have been delivered during the past ten days or more. Although figs are reported scarce by some firms, others that bought more heavily are well supplied. The California raisin situation is unchanged. Sultana and Valencia raisins are firm. This market has been steady during the week with but little change noticeable.

Nuts.—Supplies are arriving steadily and there is a good holiday demand. Valencia almonds are firm but otherwise prices are fair. Peanuts are a little easier in its figures. Shelled walnuts for January delivery are quoted by some at 28 cents. It remains to be seen, however, whether prices will decline to that extent. New Marbot walnuts are on the market and jobbers have now practically all their supplies for the Christmas trade and are filling their orders to retailers.

Coffee.—What is to be said of coffee? Business continues at a good figure but there is nothing new to offer the trade. The market is just where it was. Prices are firm at their high level, and the public is buying in spite of the market.

Tea.—All reports indicate similar market conditions, firmness and higher prices. One review of the market says: —"At this time of the year when arrivals are heavy and the weight of tea to be dealt with is great, it is no unusual occurrence to have somewhat easier markets, but there has been no indication of this, prices having shown a steady tendency to harden right through the month." A local house report their medium quality Ceylon teas up one cent per pound.

There is practically no change in the Japan tea market since last report. There have been a few parcels sold from first hands at full prices and several import enquiries from jobbers for tea "for price," but latest cable advices say that the home market is now quite bare of teas of every description. Stocks now in first hands are small.

Peel.—There has been a heavy demand for peel at firm prices. Five cases of citron, for instance, were shipped to Halifax recently at 14 cents, f.o.b. Montreal. This indicates in a slight manner just how firm prices are. There seems to be a scarcity, for shipments were rather late in coming and fresh supplies have been going out rapidly. The bulk of the buying has been for the holiday trade.

Rice and Tapioca.—The rice market is firm at the last advance and with a steady trade reported. It is believed that prices for the old crop will remain unchanged but that prices for spring delivery will weaken. The reason is that the next crop promises to be large. Tapioca is a little firmer in price and is bringing a steady demand just now.

Canned Goods.

Montreal.—Market is rather active with a good general demand for various lines of canned goods. The week has brought no particular change, and prices remain practically at the firm figures quoted last week. Tomatoes are said to be selling at from $1.45 to $1.65 with a fair offering at the former figure. There is good opportunity to sell canned goods during December for several reasons. One is the approach of the holiday season and the other is the season of Advent. Grocers should not forget that in a number of fruits there was a short supply and home preserving was therefore considerably curtailed. This in itself will create a demand for canned goods.

Toronto.—Features in the canned goods market are not plentiful this week. The position of salmon is perhaps best shown by the fact that one firm is asking 5 cents per dozen higher for Clover Leaf and Horseshoe salmon, despite the high price already ruling. This advance while not large shows which way wholesalers' ideas point.

The position of lobsters has been pointed out before. The pack was small. The supply on the market is said to be generally small. There is more than one jobber who predicts an early clean-up of stocks. Quotations now rule from $2.75 to $2.85.

A good seasonable demand for canned goods is reported from the retail trade. Canned vegetables are enjoying their usual December demand. Fruits are in good request, while salmon and other canned fish are not lagging in this particular.

One canner of preserved fruits states that the demand has been unusually heavy this year, so much so that it has taxed them to the utmost capacity to keep anywhere near in pace with it. The greatest difficulty experienced by canners and jam manufacturers, they say, is in getting sufficient labor, especially for strawberries and tomatoes. Thus, shortage of help may make it difficult to produce enough strawberry jam and canned tomatoes.

Toronto, Nov. 30.—Wholesalers are busy. Immediate orders are satisfactory in volume, while there is considerable quantity of goods ordered earlier in the year that is now being shipped out to the trade. It will not be long until navigation will close, and jobbers are hustling goods over water routes to their destination. They are somewhat handicapped by the fact that transportation companies are still slow and there appears to be no improvement in delivery to wholesalers here, who complain that transportation facilities are inadequate for the business being done.

Pick up orders for the ingredients of the Christmas cake and Christmas cooking are now coming in. A good trade is being done in table raisins. They are quoted all the way from $2.75 up to $6 and $7 per 22-lb. box, according to quality. One wholesaler reports a good demand for 1-lb. boxes. Then there are fancy dates and figs, fancy package teas, biscuits, etc., all of which are receiving their share of attention.

There are some lines in demand for Christmas that the grocer in the rush does not want to forget. Among other things might be mentioned sage, savory, poultry dressing, icing sugar, cake candies and decorations, cider, mincemeat, canned plum pudding and a sufficient supply of confectionery and fancy biscuits.

There is a general firmness apparent in groceries, with a number of staple lines included. "A big demand," "a growing consumption," "small stocks" and "a long time until new goods" are some of the reasons assigned why a number of articles at present prices are good property.

Sugar.—No particularly new features have developed in sugar during the past week. The market is a waiting one. On Dec. 8, the Brussels Convention will convene to consider the question of Russia exports of surplus raws. What the outcome will be is uncertain. In some quarters it is believed that the matter in question may be left over until regular meeting next spring. European beet prices have reached the low point, namely 16s 3¾d, but futures are on higher plane. New York has just about adjusted itself to new conditions. Willets & Gray last week said that the future of Cuba prices depends largely on the disposition of Europe to enter or keep from competition with our refiners for these sugars when the time comes for deliveries of the new crop. Canadian refiners are operating on a hand-to-mouth basis.

Syrup and Molasses.—Present is considered a good season of sales for syrups. Briskness reported in this line bears out this contention. Molasses maintains the position previously reported. A report to a local broker from Barbadoes says that the weather is at present favorable for the growing crop and that there should be an average yield the coming season. "However," continues the report, "under the present conditions, prices will rule considerably higher than those that have existed."

Dried Fruits.—It has already been reported several times that large-sized prunes were in rather stinted supply. Now there has been a run on the smaller sizes, thus injecting greater strength into the market. The demand for the smaller sizes has come from Europe, due to the failure of the Bosnia-Servia crop to produce small sizes. Sales have been heaviest on 100s and smaller. Even the percentage of large fruit in Bosnia and Servia is said to be below the average and with French prunes scarce and packers making pro rata deliveries on their contracts, even at the present price, prunes are considered good property.

Sultana raisins are firmer and fancy stock have been advanced in price by local wholesalers. As can be expected, Valencias are firming and 8½ cents is generally asked this week. Seeded, following conditions on the coast, have shaped slightly in the opposite direction.

Peels are firm at the present price. Lower values cannot be looked for. An upward tendency as supplies become in smaller compass towards the Xmas season would not be a surprise.

One firm quotes figs in umbrella boxes at 14½ cents, in glove boxes at 11 cents, and bon bon figs in 5-lb. boxes, at 75c for 5-crown and 65c per box for 4-crown. Many retailers are giving these lines special attention previous to Xmas.

Tea.—The tea situation continues to maintain its strong position. Reports from primary markets reflect same strength as has already been emphasized. It is not unusual at this time of year to have values ease somewhat, but this year the situation is just the opposite. One firm selling package teas has found it necessary to increase price of their brands. Some of the grades have been made 5 cents per pound higher to the consumer.

Coffee.—There are no new features to coffee. Neither is there any lower tendency in price. Demand, while mostly of a hand-to-mouth character, is quite fair.

Nuts.—While new walnuts are not yet in the hands of the jobbers, they are not far distant. Their arrival will practically complete the list of Christmas nuts. Old stock shelled walnuts are quoted lower at 35 cents. New stock are worth 37 to 38 cents. With heavier arrivals the first of the year prices will ease off. One jobber quotes 30 cents for Januafy delivery.

Almonds hold steady. Peanuts have a tendency to easiness. Brazils are firm and scarce. Jobbers in some cases are finding it necessary to buy from one another to fill their orders for immediate delivery. Hickory nuts are quoted at 6 cents and Italian chestnuts at 12½ cents. Trade is good.

Winnipeg, Nov. 30.—Mild weather which has been prevailing during the week, has to some extent made up for the severe spell of the week before. Threshing operations have been continued throughout the country, and while there are still many thousand bushels of grain still covered with snow in stack and stook, conditions are, nevertheless, a little brighter than they were. In the grocery business, a similar condition of affairs exists, and wholesalers report an increase in trade this week. The presence of the Christmas season close at hand, undoubtedly, has some effect on this, and reports indicate that all Christmas lines are moving actively, both wholesale and retail. Many of the retail stores in the city have already started to decorate and display their Christmas goods, and others are making preparations to do the same.

Congestion of cars still continue to prevail in the local yards, and unsatisfactory service is still being reported by wholesalers. One large firm stated that it was many years since such conditions had prevailed, but that the railroad authorities were making all efforts to regulate traffic.

Sugar.—There is little change in the sugar situation from last week, the market being still weak, but no decline. As stated before, wholesalers refuse to stock with such conditions prevailing, and consequently, the supplies on hand are light.

Tapioca.—The market is firm at the present time in tapioca, and wholesalers report this line is hard to get. The demand is good, but only normal. Prices prevailing are 7⅞ cents per pound, in sacks of 150 pounds, and 7¼ cents per pound for lesser quantities.

Dried Fruits.—There has been an active demand for all lines of dried fruits during the week. New figs are moving rapidly but as stocks are heavy at present time, there is no danger of there being any shortage before the new year. Prunes show no advance but the demand still remains strong. Stocks are light at the present time. An advance of 1c per lb. over last week is reported to have taken place in currants. This is due to shortage in stocks which resulted in strength on the southern markets, and as our prices follow pretty closely those in New York, prices advanced here also. There is some difference prevailing between prices quoted on raisins by different firms, the difference amounting in some cases to as much as 25c per box. This is stated to be due to the quality being offered. The prices quoted are the highest or for the best quality. Xmas orders are already arriving and a large trade is being conducted, especially in layer raisins.

Peels.—A reduction has taken place in the price of peels, quotations at the present time being lemons 8½c per lb.; orange 9c, and citron 11½c.

Nuts.—New nuts have arrived on the market and are moving rapidly. The quality of the stocks which have just been received are considered to be very good, in fact very much better than last year. Six lines are being offered at the present time, quotations being as follows:

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Nov. 30.—A quiet week prevailed in local markets, and there were practically no changes of interest recorded, in so far as prices were concerned. Most lines are firm, however, and in some there is a tendency to advance. Barley is one commodity which has gone up remarkably, $7.50 being now asked for it wholesale. This time last year it brought from $4.75 to $5 a barrel. Indications are that it will be still higher. Local grocers have to rely almost entirely upon the United States market for their supply of tomatoes, and the demand for them being as brisk as is generally the case with popular canned goods, the importations are quite extensive. Citron and lemon peel will be higher for the Christmas trade, already showing an inclination to advance.

Some lines of nuts, among them Brazils and peanuts, may be slightly higher this year, and almonds are also firm.

GOOD POTATO YEAR FOR NEW BRUNSWICK

Upper Canada a Better Market Than Usual, While Shipments to Cuba Have Fallen off—Delawares and Green Mountains Among the Best Known Brands.

St. John, N.B., Nov. 30 (Special).—The potato crop in New Brunswick this year was a source of keen gratification and encouragement to those interested in the sale of this vegetable, although, in spite of the fact that the harvest was the largest on record in this province, the price was high, much in advance of what had been expected and has a tendency to be much higher than at present. All local wholesale dealers who have had considerable experience in this branch of the business in former years are practically a unit in declaring that this year's crop far surpassed any of past seasons both in quality and quantity, and they predict that provided the atmospherical conditions next year are as encouraging as during the past summer, the potato crop of 1912 will be very much superior to that of the current year.

There are many kinds of potato grown in New Brunswick. It is a recognized fact that the demand for "Delawares" has greatly increased of late, and not only dealers, but farmers as well, are quite aware of this. On this account popularity of some other lines of potato is dwindling, and the more extensive growth of the "Delaware" is being encouraged. They bring a good price because of their superior qualifications. It is also known that the yield from this potato is more beneficial to the farmer than any other, and some farms where it was grown this year have been known to produce 150 barrels to the acre in the river counties.

Ontario Buying Freely.

So far as other brands or species are concerned the fact that they are known as "New Brunswick potatoes" seems to ensure their being satisfactory and there is a strong and steady market for them not only locally but in Upper Canada, and Cuba. The Cuban market has fallen off recently, however, but shipments to Ontario and other parts of Upper Canada are encouraging, and good prices are being paid. The "Green Mountain" tubers are splendid sellers, and another brand which has sprung into favor is known as the "Canada." The Red Rose, Snowflake, and other kinds all have their share of market appreciation but are not grown in such large quantities as the "Delaware."

More Interest in Potato Growing.

While the potato crop last year was fairly good, it cannot be compared either as regards quality or quantity to that of 1911. A well-known dealer said when spoken to concerning the matter, that farmers who had never in other years produced more than enough for their own use, could this year dispose of from fifty to seventy barrels for outside markets.

It was thought that the demand for potatoes in the Cuban trade last year and the splendid run on the market encouraged the farmers this year to go more extensively into their production, but in that market this year they were slightly discouraged, although the Upper Canadian business has been brisk. The average wholesale price up to recently has been $1.50 per barrel, but it will likely be higher before long, and in fact it is difficult to buy in St. John at present under $1.75. Last year there was a difference of about twenty or thirty cents as compared with this year's price, which is that much more. Many local dealers have large quantities on hand, and are satisfied that they will "make good" on their purchases. The season thus far has been remarkably good, and indications are that it will be known as the best on record in every way.

CHATHAM MERCHANTS VICTIMS OF SWINDLE

Smooth Canvasser Taking Subscriptions for Various Alleged Trade Papers Offers 200 Lead Pencils With Year's Subscription —Visited Chatham Month Ago.

Chatham, Ont., Nov. 30 (Special).—What appears to be a very smooth advertising swindle was worked on a number of merchants in this vicinity a few weeks ago. That the victims are only now "getting wise" to the game is due to the fact that the man who worked it took very plausible precautions to explain away his failure to deliver the goods.

Towards the end of October, a number of merchants were canvassed by a young man who represented himself as subscription agent for a trade paper. He invariably accommodated his representations to the particular trade in which the intended victim was engaged. Thus, a leading meat dealer was told that Mr. Canvasser was representing a Chicago butchers' journal. To an upholster he was representing an upholstering journal, also published in Chicago—and so on down the line.

To the victim, Mr. Canvasser broached a novel advertising proposition. The merchant paid $1 for a year's subscription to the trade paper. As a premium he was to receive 200 lead pencils, with his name and address printed on them. These he was to distribute for advertising purposes.

In a number of instances the victims nibbled at the enticing bait. The $1 was paid over, the canvasser writing out a duplicate order, signed with what purported to be his name, and giving a street address in Chicago. In most cases the merchant reasoned that the pencils alone would be worth the $1, irrespective of the value of the trade journal accompanying them.

The subscription was to begin a month later, while the canvasser explained that the pencils would be forwarded as soon as they could be printed —probably in a couple of weeks, as the firm had quite a few orders ahead. This gave the canvasser plenty of time to make a safe getaway to other pastures.

So far as can be learned, the grocery trade suffered no serious loss as a result of the man's operations. Some years ago the local Retail Merchants' Association adopted a resolution against patronizing advertising schemes of this sort; and though the association is no longer active, merchants who were members at that time are, as a rule, pretty chary of making use of any but legitimate advertising mediums.

CYSTERS ARE VEGETARIANS.

The oyster is well nigh a vegetarian, says one writer, living almost exclusively on seaweed, including the minute pine pollen of the water. Smaller animals form only 5 per cent. of his food. He is a methodical feeder, always dining between the hours of 12 and 2 in the afternoon. When he wants his meals he simply opens his shell and lets the water flow in through a sort of gill, which retains the food, allowing the water to run out again. It is only in frosty weather that the oyster goes off his feed. In order to protect himself as much as possible from the cold he lies with bulging shell uppermost. In this position he cannot open his shell and must perforce go short of food. But he would sooner starve than let the cold water in to chill his delicate flesh.

M. J. Crowley, Peterboro, Ont., is erecting a new grocery store in the eastern section of that city.

Wm. G. Freeburn, Peterboro, Ont., has purchased the grocery business and building of Mrs. E. A. Harris, Lock street and Gladstone avenue.

Butter, Eggs and Cheese Hold Firmly

Prices on These Articles Well Maintained—Cheese Unusually High, With Nothing Apparent to Shape Prices Otherwise—Fresh Eggs Scarce—Slight Increase in Dairy Butter Receipts Did Not Break Prices—Live Hog Values Continue Irregular.

Live hog prices are erratic. The ups and downs of the market are many, and of late have been following one another with great rapidity. It will be remembered that last week the market exhibited an easy tendency, which has since continued, and prices have come in for a considerable tumble, as much as 50 to 60 cents per cwt., at some centres being recorded. A combination of circumstances has been responsible. In the first place, the higher prices brought out a big run of hogs, and besides, the English bacon market is weak and lower. Therefore, the market at the present is unsettled, but it is generally conceded that with the present price of feed, hogs should be worth over 6 cents.

Cheese holds a firm position, with prices now ruling at an unusually high figure. Along in early part of the summer, values were quite normal, but with a smaller production throughout the summer both here and in England, prices have been gradually on the ascent. In Montreal, for instance, large Quebec stock now is quoted at 16½ cents. One year ago, the price was 13½ cents. Still there seems nothing at hand to shape prices otherwise. The statistical position is strong, as indicated by the stocks in store at the principal centres, as well as in the country, being considerably below those of last year at this time.

Butter has lost none of its firmness. The closing of cheese factories has increased the production of dairy butter in some sections, but not enough to break the present firm position. Stocks are not heavy, while receipts on the whole show no increase.

Fresh eggs are still scarce, and prices for guaranteed stock are high. The result is a big sale of storage stocks, which are going rapidly into consumption, with a firming tendency in price.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—A decline in the price of hogs, live and dressed, is about the only feature of the market. Live hogs are down to six cents. Pure lard is unchanged in prices, but it is believed that price will be easier before long. Pork is selling fairly well just now, and will continue so throughout the winter. Trade in hams and bacon is ordinary just at present.

Butter.—Butter prices have remained unchanged this week, but the general opinion seems to indicate that higher prices will likely rule before long. Stocks are none too ample, and supplies are gradually diminishing. The present demand is steady and appreciable, and production is naturally curtailed. Some of the new stocks suggest fodder in its taste. Just at present the market is steady and firm.

Creamery	0 30	0 30½
Dairy, tubs, lb	0 22	0 25

Cheese.—Market is steady and unchanged. Exports have fallen off lately and the total shipments show a considerable decrease when compared with last year's figures. Total receipts for the season will also be less than those of last season. Stocks held here are lighter than a year ago, and the same is reported from country holders. This condition lends strength to the market, and the future is expected to bring new strength for these reasons.

Eggs.—The demand for eggs is quite a feature. There have been no developments during the week, but trade has been steady with prices well maintained. Receipts are quite liberal, but the demand is far above the supply.

Provisions.—In last issue we noted that hog values were not very strong. There has been a reduction in values of 60 cents, which brings the porkers at country points down to $5.90. Evidently the high prices of last week were responsible for a big run, which, backed by a lower English bacon market, brought prices tumbling down.

In consequence of this reaction of hog prices, pork products can by no means be said to be firm, with the exception of lard, which commodity some firms are quoting at ¼ cent advance this week. Long clear bacon is easier at 11½ to 12 cents. The demand for this line is not just as brisk as it was earlier in the fall. Trade in provisions on the whole is, however, reported quite satisfactory.

Butter.—Creamery butter has moved up another cent per pound this week, and fresh creamery prints are quoted at 32 to 33 cents. There have been larger receipts of dairy butter of late, due to the general closing of cheese factories. At some points throughout the province, supplies were increased to such an extent that prices eased off, but under a good demand, the general tendency is one of continued firmness.

Dealers here are apparently expecting prices to be maintained.

Eggs.—Range in price of new laid eggs is wide, from 40 to 50 cents. No further increase has been made over last week, but at present price, any further advance would certainly be unwelcome to consumers.

Cheese.—Cheese is apparently a little stronger this week. At least some dealers quote ¼ cent advance. The closing of factories and the end of production no doubt tends to strength. At a recent meeting of Board of Directors of Dominion Canners', the building committee was authorized to spend $500,000 to build new factories and extensions and improvements to present plants. The company intends to manufacture all kinds of canned goods, jams, preserves, catsups, etc. Authority was given to raise the necessary funds by issuing and disposing of additional stock and bonds of the company.

WANT HOG STATISTICS.

Toronto, Nov. 30.—Provision and produce dealers feel that in order to be able to correctly gauge the market and to arrive at values, they should have some accurate knowledge of amount of receipts of such lines as butter, eggs and cheese. That is, unless they know what quantity is coming in, the matter of setting prices is about guesswork. Montreal has such statistics tabulated for them by the transportation companies whose lines run into that city and find such knowledge of great value to them. This matter has been taken up in Toronto by some dealers through the medium of the Board of Trade but as yet the transportation companies on account of the work incurred have not agreed to supply the desired figures. It is hoped that enough influence will be brought to bear to get this valuable information.

Statistics recently issued by the Ontario Government show that on July 1st the number of swine in Ontario was 1,744,983 as against 1,561,042 on July 1, 1910, and 1,551,187 on July 1, 1909. This will account in part for the large arrivals during September and October that sagged the market, although there is no doubt that the high price of feed caused some selling. This report also says that the number of swine sold or slaughtered during the year ending June 30, was 1,963,937 as against 1,844,405 the previous year and 1,986,432 in 1909.

This same bulletin shows the number of poultry on July 1 as 12,942,293 as against 12,460,787 in 1910, and 12,086,432 in 1909.

A company has been formed to erect a large canning plant at Chamook, N.B., near St. Andrew's, for the purpose of canning sardines. The work will be pushed forward at once.

The California Almond Growers' Exchange will put about ten cars of almonds in packages or cartons this season. They expect that convenience of the method will make it an established seller hereafter.

A London, England grocer was fined 40 shillings for selling for "olive oil," an oil that was not pure. The bottle sold was labelled "Lucca oil," but the grocer had sold it for "olive oil."

Wife (to husband starting to his office)—"Remember, George, we are to have some Reindeer."

Husband—"Oh, I guess it won't rain before I get back to lunch."

Wife—"Go on, smarty. I didn't say rain, my dear; I said 'Reindeer'—'Reindeer milk' I meant for baby."—Advt.

Xmas Confectionery Now in Demand

Dealers Anticipate Good Christmas Trade in This Line—Orders Reported to Have Been Well Booked Ahead This Year—Flour Situation Shows no Particular Change—Good Domestic Trade, but Export Business is Slack—Approach of Close of Navigation Steadies Canadian Wheat Prices—Cereals in Good Demand.

Confectionery is at present in the limelight. Not only is a good early winter trade already in evidence but the approaching Xmas season is directing more than ordinary attention to this line. True it is that confectionery travelers have been showing Christmas confectionery for a considerable time and while this year orders are reported to have been booked well ahead, there are always orders to fill in just previous to the festive season and there are always dealers who hold off in their buying. However, there is nothing to be gained by holding off, as the grocer should know his requirements now, as it will not be long until he will need to bring them into special prominence. Prices, as can naturally be expected, hold steady. The sugar markets at the present high tide maintain values on the sweetmeats in a firm position.

The conditions of the flour markets cannot be said to have changed much in the past week. It is evident that there has been more booking of contracts and there are some mills which report they are sold considerably ahead. Export demand for flour is slack, but from Montreal come reports of spring wheat being worked off for export.

Reports from Argentine have considerable weight in moving wheat quotations. Fine weather from that republic, coupled with an increase in United States visible and world's shipments greatly in excess of the estimates, helped to pull wheat prices down in Chicago at the beginning of the week. The approach of the close of navigation helped to keep Canadian markets steady.

Cereals continue in good request and mills are kept running to full capacity. A good consumptive demand is being felt by those dealers who are featuring this line.

The world's wheat shipments last week totalled 10,080,000 bushels as compared with 7,720,000 a week ago, and 13,328,000 a year ago. The Canadiaa wheat visible last week decreased 1,326,000 bushels. United States visible increased 1,446,000 bushels.

Flour.—The flour situation has varied little during the week. Prices are unchanged and general conditions are about the same. A good domestic trade is in evidence and in some cases mills are sold well ahead. Export demand for reasons that have been explained before is decidedly slow.

More Interest in Oranges and Lemons

Weather Favorable for Sale of Latter—Navel Oranges a Little off in Color—Late News Confirms Reports of Short Grapefruit Crop in Florida—Potatoes Hold Strong Position—New Brunswick Holders Firm in Their Ideas—Apples Somewhat Stronger in Montreal—Onions Higher in Toronto.

Navel oranges are improving somewhat in color. Such is the report from several centres of the Dominion. They have not, however, reached the perfection state. Late Valencias being practically cleaned up, Western Canada is depending mostly on California navels. Ontario and Quebec are receiving some good quality Florida oranges, while the Maritime Provinces are helped out by Jamaican fruit.

One report on the Florida orange crop says, that reports from growers would seem to indicate it was going to be short of last year's, at which time less than 5,000,000 boxes were shipped. The Florida Citrus Exchange has received returns indicating there will be at least 5 million boxes of citrus fruit shipped from Florida this year, one of the big interests gives the same figures, as do also the railroads. This estimate must be nearly correct, in spite of pessimistic estimates of the growers.

Late reports confirm earlier predictions of a short crop of grapefruit in Florida. Estimates are much below last year, with sizes running large. Jamaica grapefruit is now coming to eastern Canadian markets.

This is considered a good season for lemons. The weather of late has been favorable and the temperature is now getting down to a point that induces sales. Heavier arrivals of new Messina lemons on eastern markets have reduced prices but only slightly. Old crop lemons are pretty well cleaned up. In Western Canada where supplies are brought in from California, prices are holding steady.

Potatoes continue to hold a firm position, still greater strength being reported from some centres this week. Reports from New Brunswick indicate that holders of supplies in that province are firm in their ideas. Onions is another line that has been firming on some markets of late, most noticeably throughout Ontario, where supplies are small. Elsewhere, there appears to be no overplus.

California celery will begin to come forward to Canadian markets about the middle of December, and in time for the Christmas trade.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—The market shows a number of features worthy of attention. Apples are higher in price this week, principally because holders have been holding, instead of sending them forward. Spies that were quoted at $5 this week, are now up to $5.50. Fameuse are quoted at from $5 to $6 for finest quality, with a scarcity reported. The apple crop has been one of the largest, but it seems that supplies are being held back. Ontario is said to have 200,000 barrels that should be coming on the market. Just now oranges are beginning to receive more attention, and with other fruits should tend to weaken the apple situation. The total shipments of apples from Montreal for the season until the beginning of this week were 269,014 barrels, as against 163,907 for the previous year, and 581,206 for 1909. Late Valencia oranges are nearly exhausted; in fact, jobbers are cleaning up the last car of the season. The new navels, of which four cars have been received thus far this season, are of uncertain quality. They will show improvement as the season advances, but will hardly reach their best quality until the new year is turned. Valencia oranges are in good demand just now. Cranberries are moving well, and are firm with something of a hint that they may become short in supply. Cape Cods in barrels are reported nearly sold out, but are being offered in boxes. Thanksgiving Day in the United States has probably cut a large hole in the supply of Cape Cod berries.

Vegetables.—A scarcity in potatoes has boosted the price up to from $1.25 to $1.30 a bag, for Green Mountains. There is a scarcity reported throughout the country, and the present prices will likely be maintained. Some houses looking for other supplies have communicated with Irish firms, but it is a question whether any of their goods will be brought out. Nothing has been arranged yet, as far as is known. Celery, Spanish onions, etc., continue in good demand.

oranges have improved somewhat in color, but might be better. Late Valencias, with the exception of an odd case, are off the market. Some nice Florida stock is now arriving. A little more interest is being shown in grapefruit. There is both Florida and Jamaica on the market now. Cranberries are firmly held. New Jersey "long keepers" are quoted at $12 per barrel.

Vegetables.—Dealers are just beginning to realize how scarce Canadian onions are this year. Already considerable difficulty is being found in collecting any quantity. Just what quantity is reposing in farmers' cellars, is a question, but it is generally conceded that it is not large, as crop this year, on account of drought, was quite small. Prices have been on the climb of late, and $2 to $2.25 has been reached, as compared with $1.25 to $1.35 per bag a year ago. "I look for a general strong onion market," said one dealer, "the United States crop is in the same boat as the Canadian, and will afford no great relief. Valencia onions are also holding firmly."

Carrots, parsnips, and kindred lines, are also firmly held. The root crop in general as Grocer readers already know was decidedly adversely affected by drought this year.

Potatoes are steady, at last week's figure, with good steady sales in evidence. Cabbage are quoted at $1.50 per barrel, and at 50 to 60 cents by the dozen.

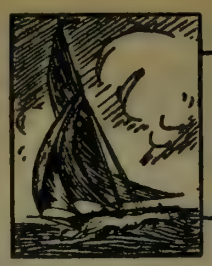
"Mrs. Coombs, sir."

"And the stale loaf—who bought that?"

"Mrs. Coombs, sir."

"And the margarine scrapings?"



"Mrs. Coombs, sir."

"Heavens! and the shop eggs that have hung fire so long, surely not—"

"Mrs. Coombs, sir."

"Great Scott! What's the matter? Are you ill, sir?"

"No, no!" moaned the unhappy grocer. "Only I'm going to take tea with Mrs. Coombs to-night," and with a groan of despair he collapsed on a sugar box.

Fish - Oysters

Advent Expected to Enliven Fish Trade

December 3 is Opening Day—Supplies Now Going Out in Anticipation of Heavier Demand—Oysters Moving Freely—Prepared and Frozen Fish Supply Leading Lines—Fresh Fish Coming to End.

The fish trade is now on the threshold of the first big season of demand. While trade has gradually been gathering speed during the past three months, the opening of Advent, with it's special fish days each week, will give added impetus to business. December 3 is the opening day.

Already orders are arriving at various centres for shipments to go out for opening of Advent. With supplies of fresh fish nearing an end, frozen are in good demand. Various kinds of smoked fish are also doing well. Oysters are moving freely.

Unusually bad weather along the Nova Scotian coast was responsible for a short supply of fish there last week, but shortage is expected to be soon made up. The supply of halibut on the eastern market is limited, and mackerel are scarce. The receipts of smelts continue light.

QUEBEC.

Montreal.—The week preceding the beginning of Advent has been marked by active business in the fish market. Dealers throughout the country are evidently determined on good sales from now until Christmas, and in fact, as soon as the holiday season is over, there should be a steady trade until the return of the warm weather. Prepared and frozen fish will probably supply the leading lines.

Fresh fish is practically done for, and supplies in this department will be mostly frozen henceforth. Cod, haddies, bloaters and fillets will attract a big trade, and of course, oysters will be a feature. Grocers who have prepared themselves for a fish trade, should take advantage of every opportunity to make their venture profitable.

Toronto.—The first special season of fish selling is all but here. December 3 marks opening of Advent, which means two extra fish days weekly. With favorable weather for the handling of this line, dealers are anticipating good sales.

This week, the fresh fish slate has been considerably reduced, supplies of fresh halibut, perch, trout and white fish, having come to an end. A good list, however, of frozen, smoked and pickled fish is provided.

Connecticut Oyster Company

Canadian Branch: 50 Jarvis Street, - Toronto, Ont.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax.—Fish have been unusually scarce on the local market during the past week. Weather has been unusually bad, and the fishermen could not get out to the grounds. Only one banker arrived, and she had less than 12,000 pounds of fish on board. Dealers say that the shortage will be relieved by next week. Several vessels sailed to-day for the fishing grounds, and will probably be back early next week with average fares. There was not enough fish landed to supply the demand. Some of the stock in cold storage had to be brought out. The few haddock that were landed, were fine fish, and found ready sale.

Salt codfish is in excellent demand, with firmer prices.

There is less dry fish in store in Halifax to-day, than for many years. An average winter stock, some five or six year's ago, was about 300,000 quintals. Last season this ran down to 120,000 quintals. This season something like 80,000, are lying in the warehouses.

Pickled herring are also advancing in price, and the advance has brought in most of the stray lots from shore ports.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

St. John's.—There is practically no change in fish prices since last report, except that some merchants are giving as high as $6.80 to $7 per quintal for large, and small merchantable and Madeira fish. This price is being paid in order to obtain full cargoes for foreign markets. Herring and codfish still remain in good supply around the coasts, and the weather is favorable for obtaining them.

Cod oil appears to be scarce, small quantities only having arrived to date. Low prices that have been ruling during the past few years, offer no inducement to fishermen to refine it.

Foreign markets for Newfoundland codfish still appear to be strong.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John.—Several days of bad weather were responsible for many light arrivals in fresh fish this week. Dry salt are practically all out of first hands. The market does not promise to be active for present at least, and prices remain about the same as last winter, with a tendency to be much firmer. A large quantity of nice bloaters of Newfoundland stock, are being offered at about 60 cents. Smelt are plentiful this season, and it has been some time since they have been known to be of such a large size, as is the case this year. One dealer said this week, that "this year's smelt were as large as herring." They are bringing 7 and 8 cents. Shipments in general to the Canadian West are favorable, and expectations are that this will keep up for some time. Shipments are now better than they were at this time last year

The Best Proposition!

Looked at any way you please, no line of goods holds out the same inducements to the Grocer as

UPTON'S
Jams, Jellies and Marmalade

First, they are made from the finest fruits in the world---Canadian Fruits---selected by experts and preserved and bottled in an up-to-date, sanitary factory, which is a model of cleanliness. Second, the "Upton" line never 'sticks,' because our extensive consumer advertising has created a demand for these goods; and third, selling "Upton's" specialties invariably leaves a satisfaction and profit-margin behind that makes trading a pleasure.

Are you featuring "Upton's"? If not, fall in line with the 'wise' ones.

One-writing. Self-Indexing. Fire-Proof.

Every one of these merchants had large stores in which buildings with contents were completely destroyed, but they all saved their accounts through the Keith Fire-proof System.

This positive evidence of the fire-proof qualities of the Keith Systems actually spreads all over the United States, and yet, strange as it may seem, certain manufacturers of drop-leaf systems who would first sell their system and would then afterwards sell you an expensive safe in which to store the accounts—call us fire-proof fakers.

They have an axe to grind.

We have given you facts backed by sworn affidavits, and we, therefore, feel safe in leaving this matter to your intelligence.

The fire-proof feature is only one of the many points of protection offered by the Keith System.

Creating Demand for Christmas Goods

Some Actual Experiences of Dealers Who Sell Goods Not Asked for—Instances of Elevating Standard of Goods Sold to Customers—Special Lines to Display, Advertise and Talk up Between Now and Xmas—Give Special Attention to the Window.

Now that Christmas is only a little over two weeks in the distance, the dealer is in the thick of the holiday rush. In addition to handing out the goods asked for, he must give time and attention to creating demand himself, if he is to reap the best harvest.

The power of suggestion around Christmas is one that must be taken into consideration. A word from the dealer or clerk at the proper time will sell some Christmas novelty, a pound of figs, a package of dates or will induce the purchaser to take a better quality article than she had originally asked for. One of the chief aims of every merchant should be to elevate the standard of goods sold. The purchaser will have to pay a bigger price but the satisfaction secured will be worth it. Good goods eliminate dissatisfaction.

Raise Standard of Purchases.

Now is a splendid time to develop raising the standard of foodstuffs. People have usually more money to spend just now, or if they haven't more, they spend more than they otherwise would. They are susceptible to the persuasive appeals of the grocer and can frequently be induced to purchase a higher class article than is their custom.

The best grocers make this a strong plank in their platform.

"Yes, we have the lower priced sugar," was a recent remark heard by the writer, "but for your Christmas baking I believe you will be well repaid by purchasing No. 1. You will be much better satisfied."

Sold the Better Bacon.

Here is another: "We have some nice bacon at 25 cents. Yes, we have some at 22, the same as you have been getting, but you are going to get more satisfaction from the 25-cent bacon than from the other. Notice the regularity of the streaks of lean and fat, and the flavor too is superior."

The result in both cases was purchase of the higher priced article. The price is generally forgotten if the quality is above the average.

Once a dealer begins to raise the standard of any article and sends home a satisfied customer, this task gradually becomes lighter. Development is rapid, satisfaction is ensured with every sale and prospects for future business much brighter.

Besides elevating the standard of goods sold, the dealer must endeavor to create demand. The best method is by using personal appeals to back up a counter, shelf, show case or window display.

Effect of Personal Suggestion.

After the customer has given her regular order for tea, sugar, butter, etc., suggest something else, something seasonable.

"Those Malaga grapes shown in the window there have a particularly nice flavor," is one instance noted; "they are sound and sweet and I know you would like them."

Here is another:—"We have a fine line of jams just in. This is a line we never carried before, but we have made a thorough test and find it superior to anything we have ever sold."

In both cases sales were made because the dealer had something worth while and which he knew would appeal to customers.

The Lines to Feature Now.

Where help in a store is not plentiful or when everybody is busy, the merchant must rely on other influences. The power of an attractively dressed window is great as is also that of a convincing advertisement in the newspaper. At present dried fruits, nuts, extracts, flour, plum pudding spices and peels should be given every attention. Show them in the window and talk them up in the advertising if you have not the time to personally refer to them. When Christmas Day draws nearer a little more attention should be given to oranges, confectionery, walnuts, almonds, Brazils, candy, Malaga raisins, mincemeat, dates, figs, bananas, cranberries, cheese, bacon, poultry, Malaga grapes, etc. Sales of these lines Saturday before Christmas will be enormous and there can be no doubt that the dealer who has the most attractive way of offering them will reap the greatest benefit.

Confectionery Very Seasonable.

Candy and confectionery, will, however be a pacticularly good seller from now on. Many Xmas presents are boxes of choice confectionery and a good display will mean extra sales. Lines that can be thoroughly relied upon should be stocked so that satisfaction will be guaranteed. Profits are good and the line is well worth extra attention. Some dealers for a month before Christmas place a special clerk in charge of the confectionery counter so as to get the maximum result.

Talk up Malaga Raisins.

More attention should be given Malaga table raisins. These should be on almost everybody's Xmas dinner table and if some attention is paid to them sales can very easily be extended. Suggest them as a wholesome diet; show them in the window and call special note to them in advertising.

Every late Xmas window should contain oranges. The Xmas eve stocking usually has an orange or two and the Xmas table is always adorned by them. Bananas are a staple but their sales can be materially increased also.

Don't Overlook Cranberry.

The Xmas turkey needs a number of accessories. There are spices for the dressing and cranberry for the sauce. Don't neglect mentioning both and particularly the cranberry. This is now practically the universal turkey sauce and suggestion is only needed in a great many cases to swing the customer's mind in favor of a purchase.

Sales can readily be increased in figs and dates. Now that the package article is on the market as well as the bulk, particular buyers are sure of a clean article. A feature should be made of the individual boxes of figs for eating purposes. One or two open boxes in a conspicuous place will do a great deal. Both dates and figs are healthy and there is little danger in giving plenty of them to children.

Talk Value of Nuts.

The nut department is a worthy one. Nuts contain oils of value to the body and are considered a splendid food. The most should be made of them for Christmas, for while they are good sellers all winter and sellers the year round, now is a splendid time to demonstrate their value. Don't allow a customer to leave the store without mentioning nuts. No one can be offered at this season, and the chances for making extra sales are splendid.

Extracts in the Display.

Many Xmas windows now shown do not contain extracts. The dealer should not forget them as they are an important ingredient for the baking. Include them in the list of suggestions to your customers and some will surely be found to adopt your suggestion.

Sell the Best Flour.

Flour is another article to push now. Even if many people do not bake their own bread they take pride in the quality of their Xmas dainties and don't usually trust them to the art of the baker or confectioner. Increase the sales of the flour you know to be the best in your store by window displays, advertising, and personal conversation. The fact has been demonstrated that the good dealer can increase the sales of any article he may be interested in. Pick out the best brand of flour you have and sell it now. After the festive season customers will come back for more.

Good Displays in Fall Number.

By referring back to the fall number of The Grocer (Nov. 3)—which everyone should keep on file—some Xmas window dressing suggestions will be observed. These are particularly good from some standpoints and no doubt will convey ideas that may be utilized. If special consideration is given to this department, sales above what people originally thought of will undoubtedly be made. Care should be taken with the window. Boxes of dried fruit, bottles of extracts, oranges, etc., placed promiscuously will not hold attention. The window should be symmetrical, clean and tidy. Bunches of holly, which can be secured from some of the advertisers in this issue, add to the appearance. A little money and time spent in decorations tends to spread the Christmas purchasing fever and to create a good will for the store.

Advertise for the early shopper, get the people coming early for their goods; crowd as much of the business into the next week and a half as possible and then throw all your energy and that of the clerks to creating demand among the late arrivals.

Grocers Selling Better Quality Goods

Manufacturers Finding That the Dealer Uses His Selling Power to Push Attractive Goods of High Quality—Dealer Anxious to Give Satisfaction and Encourages Purchasing the Better Goods.

If grocers would take the time to think about it they would be greatly impressed by the improvement in the quality and appearance of many of the acticles on their shelves. There seems to have been a general movement to raise goods to a higher standard and manufacturer, retailer and consumer have all played their parts with a willingness that has been very helpful.

No More Water-soaked Oysters.

A great number of examples could be mentioned to show just what has been accomplished in this direction, but every department has been invaded with beneficial results. Consider fish for instance. The water-soaked oyster is a thing of the past and the manner of display is about as sanitary as possible. The old-time salt herring is almost forgotten and the bulk of the trade runs into better lines and more appetizing.

Another example was noticed recently in dried fruits. Malaga raisins as packed by a certain Spanish packer, embraced practically all that could be desired in point of appearance and suggested quality. To begin with the box had a hinged top with a catch. It was a little less than two feet long, about a foot wide, and several inches deep. The corners are rounded, the packing was in good taste as was also the lightographing on the outside of the lid. The raisins were eight crown fancy Malagas and for fine large well colored fruit it would be difficult to find better. This will suffice for dried fruits, but it is only one of quite a number of illustrations of what has been done to raise their general quality.

Selling Mincemeat a New Way.

Considering seasonable goods, see what has been done with mincemeat. The wooden pail and its ladle used to be the only method of selling. To-day mincemeat is sold in glasses and tins with probably a preference for the former. A particularly tasty method is that of a firm who use a white porcelain container of various sizes, one being a little larger than a tumbler. It is very suggestive of cleanliness and exceptional quality.

Likewise, there is a good demand now for plum pudding in tins and linen bags and surely if anything might have been considered a doubtful success before a trial this might surely have been questioned. But the result has been quite the reverse.

And thus a wide range of articles might be mentioned. Look over the array of preserved fruits and vegetables in glass, at the jams and marmalades. Scarcely an article has escaped this elevation of standard.

On the question as to who is responsible for this improvement, the first decision might be given the manufacturer. He possessed an insight that encouraged him to raise the quality of his goods if that were possible and especially to give more attention to their appearance. He must have also judged that the people were able to pay for the extra cost thus entailed. But the care in preparation for the market made on the mind of the purchaser an impression of quality, and the exterior appearance proved an asset in that there was the suggestion of quality that could not fail to attract the attention of the customer.

Public Appreciates Appearance.

It might be shown, if it were necessary, that some firms have lost ground by not keeping up with the present day movement. A traveler for an international company whose product has been given wide prominence recently told The Grocer of how a competing firm had practically taken over their trade. One of the contributing forces to their capture of the market was the care they gave the appearance of their article and their attention to packing.

A grocer who uses selling power must have the assistance of an appealing or attractive appearance. It is one of his best assets in making sales. He is handicapped in the very beginning if he has to overcome a certain reticence on the part of the customer caused by a none too attractiveness of the article. The manufacturer who provides for this feature lends a great co-operative influence to the retailer and the result returns to the former.

The purchasing public have apparently more money to-day than ever and they are willing to pay for quality in their foodstuffs. Grocers maintain that the cost of living has not increased through their trade and that the onus of blame for this question must be placed elsewhere. Therefore, it would appear that even though manufacturers have shown more care in the preparation and packing of their goods the grocery bill of the people has not become heavier. Those who buy extensively of luxuries may not be included in this statement, but that is another matter.

Looking back over the past year there are visible signs of improvement in the grocery trade and the question of quality and suggested quality in exterior appearance and preparation for the market has become more important than ever through the progress made during the past twelve months. Manufacturers who have taken a forward step in this direction have found retail grocers ready and willing to accept their products.

In this regard the year has been beneficial both to the manufacturer and the retailer, and this co-operation should receive every encouragement by both parties

Three Xmas Windows

Herewith are three suggestions for the floors of Christmas windows. These are all of simple arrangement and yet can be made attractive with a little care and attention.

Dried fruits, of course, must be conspicuous in at least one Christmas window. Prominent attention has been given them in accompanying suggestions.

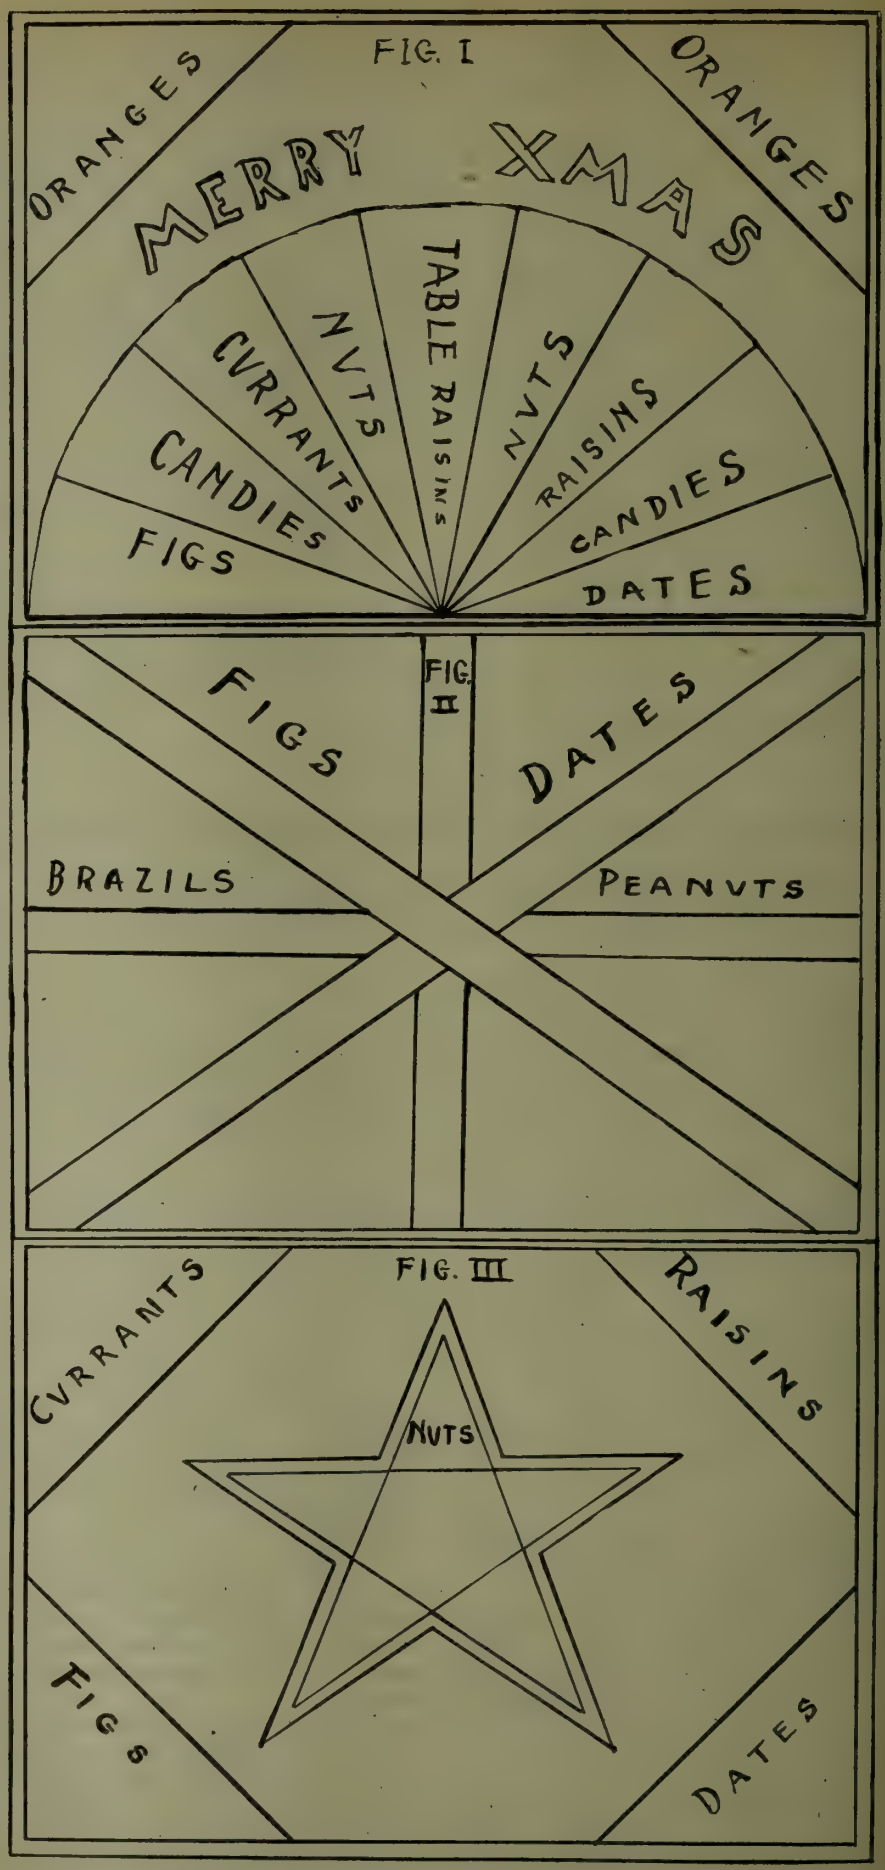
Arranging the Half Wheel.

Figure I. is the half wheel with space between the spokes filled with nuts and dried fruits as marked. The words "Merry Xmas" may be made of rows of peel inlaid in cranberries, cranberries in Sultana raisins or loaf sugar in currants. Neat piles of oranges at the back corners raised as high as possible set off this display nicely. If the window is large a background of open boxes of clean dried fruits on a keg of Almeria grapes could be used. Spaces separating the different fruits can be made of slats covered with tinsel paper. The sides and back of the window would of course be much improved by addition of bonches of holly, mistletoe or other evergreen.

The Flag Design.

In Figure II. we have the flag design which can with little trouble be artistically arranged.

The diagonal bars will look pretty if each is filled with a row of oranges. A large window would accommodate two rows on bottom and one in centre on top. Lemons and grape fruit might be selected for the horizontal and vertical bars. Brazils and walnuts on the left; peanuts and almonds on the right; figs and dates at top and currants and raisins on bottom complete the design.



The reference made to background and addition of evergreens in figure I. applies here as well.

The Appropriate Star.

The Star design as shown in figure III. is one often used and for the Xmas season is quite appropriate.

The points of the star might be filled with nuts of various kinds and the centre with table raisins. Currants, raisins, figs and dates placed in the corners of the floor will show these goods off effectively with oranges, lemons, grape fruit, etc., surrounding the star.

N.B.—For other good suggestions on Xmas designs, see Fall Campaign Number, Canadian Grocer, Nov. 3.

Make Your Plans Early for the New Year

Begin to Set Your House in Order—Take the Inventory Carefully, Honestly and Accurately—Build up a Surplus in Solid Cash and Add to Amount First of Every Month.

* By Henry Johnson, Jr.

December is generally considered the time of the grocer's harvest. This because of the Christmas trade, which is usually so brisk as to make us almost believe first, that our business is growing and, second, that the grocery business is not such a bad trade after all. Long ago I exploded this idea so far as I was concerned, because I found that my July sales exceeded my December sales. Thus do actual figures help us out of false impressions and notions based on fancy.

Sell off the Stickers.

But December is the right time to shape your store for the end of the year accounting. In that respect it is a most useful month. In it occur many days when things are slow, trade dull and there is lots of time for cleaning up. Do that. Spend all the spare time in shaping your stock so that it can readily be counted, weighed and measured. In doing this you will find many things you can bring forward and sell out. It is the golden time to get out stickers and these should be sold out at practically any price, to release the idle capital so you can put it to work again. You will note that this suggestion is opposed to the general rule, which is to buy heavily, if not recklessly, in December, close the year with a lot of stock which can hardly be moved until the following Christmas, and then work through a gloomy January and February with the feeling that "this is the slow season in any business—we cannot work up any enthusiasm again until spring."

Be Careful of Over-stocking.

No: work your stock down, not up. Remember that the three or four days of brisk Christmas trade will run to nuts, raisins, mince meat, figs, candles, holly and kindred lines. Replenish your stock of such goods sufficiently, but do not buy enough to last even until the end. Better be just a little short of some things and have to buy from your neighbors than carry over a dollar's worth of those goods. Of other lines, such as are more or less staple throughout the year, postpone the buying, except as you must have them for daily business. And remember that every sticker you clean out now will help to put you in clean condition to make January and February busy, profitable months, instead of periods of discouraging somnolence. Fix your mind on the future pleasure of cleaning up with a small stock and some ready money on hand January 1, and you will be glad you figured things that way.

The inventory is a most important thing. It is so important that it should be taken oftener than is the usual custom, especially for merchants of limited experience. Why should we stick to the custom of taking an honest account of stock only once a year? When I first took hold of my store, eighteen years ago, I took inventory at once. I took it again in sixty days; again in another sixty days; then in four months. By that time I was so familiar with the workings of it that I was safe to take it annually, as I have done ever since. But, should we have a period of depression again, or should I find reason to question some of my results, I should not hesitate a minute about shoving in an extra accounting any more than I would neglect to count my cash to see if I had what I should have.

Merchants Cheating Themselves

It has been said that the meanest man is he who will cheat himself at a game of solitaire. That is going some, but there are numbers of merchants who annually cheat themselves at inventory time. There is a peculiar temptation to make a good showing, so many points are strained, often unconsciously but often unconsciously but often also with a sort of guilty consciousness, to make things figure out well. And for what? It is like going on a spree—feels pretty good while it lasts, but one is pretty miserable on the proverbial "morning after." If you do not want any "rude awakening," be honest with yourself in these matters.

There is no sort of danger that you will work yourself any permanent harm through underestimating any of your possessions; but you can rapidly go broke through overestimating. For instance: Suppose your figures show that you have possessions which are worth $3,500 when, as a matter of conservative figuring, they would not show up at more than $2,500, do you think for a minute that the $1,000 of fictitious value will not be revealed later on? Do not deceive yourself, for it surely will. In the meantime, you will feel so good over it that you would not be human if you did not do some liberal, maybe reckless, things. But suppose, on the other hand, that you really have $3,500 in property and have made out your figures on the basis of $2,500, do you not know—KNOW as an absolute certainty—that the extra $1,000 will come to the surface later on? Indeed, you do; for after a showing which is not so glowingly happy as you had thought it was going to be, you will be exceedingly careful and conservative; with the result that you will inevitably not only conserve the hidden $1,00, but add to it for the next time of accounting.

Habit of Under-estimating.

I do not know how it happened, but it has always been my habit to underestimate. I have consistently worked against my business in every way when taking account of stock and other property. I am somehow like a friend of mine who put $5,000 into farm lands which promised big and rapid returns. Being wise, he carried that investment on his records at $1 valuation—wiped it all out as it were. Thus he was prepared beforehand for the period which followed—a time when farm lands seemed to be a drug on the market. But when the scheme worked out, as it did in after years, he got a good return for his money, and then he had not only the profit, but he found the original $5,000 again. The first few years I handled the business of Johnson & Son, I almost thought I must be a dub, because the showing was so poor; but it came along all right and I am glad I never worked any other way.

So be honest with yourself in this. Figure everything "down to the bone." Leave nothing in your final accounting which will not show up later on at full value during the coming year.

If you follow these suggestions, you will be in shape to take the next step—begin to pile up a surplus in cash.

Really and actually, you do not make any money out of your business until you have that money to show—in CASH or its equivalent.

It is all right enough to have more stock, more fixtures, more accounts outstanding than you had a year ago; but it is CASH that really counts.

There is just one way to do this—pull out the cash regularly, systematically, invariably, just as you would pay rent, and put it away where you can get it any time—and then do not get it!

If your business amounts to $6,000 a year, put away $25 per month. Do not stop to ask how you will do this; just gather it up the first of every month and deposit it in the savings bank at 3 per cent. or 3½ per cent.

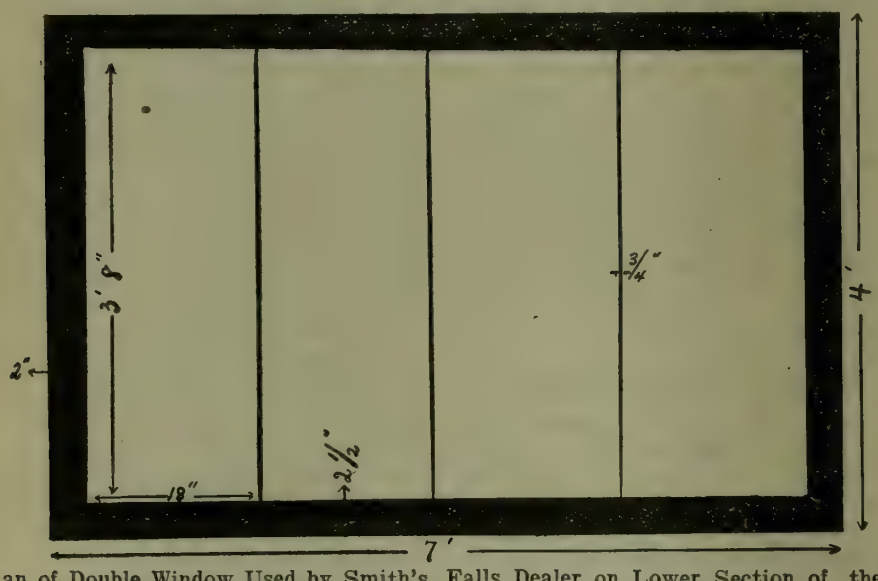
Keeping Frost from the Store Window

Original Idea of a Smith's Fall Dealer—Has Double Window on Lower Half of Outside of Plate Glass—Putty Joint Between Frame and Plate Glass—Leaves "Double Window" on Winter.

By Wm. Hyndman.



I was much interested on reading your article in Nov. 17 issue "Prevention of Frost on Windows."

Having solved this great difficulty some years ago, I would like to add my experience to your article. Seven years ago after having tried other methods which proved unsatisfactory, I had a frame made to fit on the inside of window frame against the plate glass. This was really a double window 4 feet high but placed inside. I made a joint with putty at the top to prevent leakage from above running down between plate glass and the frame. This leakage came from top part of original window not covered by the short window I added. The top edge of the frame was beveled that the water would the more rapidly run down and be carried away in the usual manner at the bottom.

Changed From Inside to Outside.

I found this method unsatisfactory as the putty joint separated from the plate glass, and the water from the upper part of glass ran down between causing ice to form. I then transferred the storm window to the outside and have had perfect results ever since.

I have this afternoon put this window in its place in the space of ten minutes where it will remain until spring.

WINDOW DRESSING AND AD. WRITING CONTESTS

Xmas Season Presents Good Opportunities Which Should be Taken Advantage of—Twenty-five Dollars in Prizes.

The Grocer has already had assurance from a number of clerks and dealers that they will enter our Christmas window and ad-writing contests. Full particulars of this was given on page 192 of our Annual Fall Campaign Number of Nov. 3, which every dealer no doubt has on file as a valuable trade directory.

The competitions are open to dealers and clerks. Photographs of windows must be sent to the publication office of this paper before Dec. 31. A contestant may of course, enter as many photographs of this year's displays as he desires. Prizes for the window dressing competition are as follows:—

Towns and cities over 10,000 population, first prize, $5; second, $3; third, $2. First, second and third prizes for centres under 10,000 population will be same as above. All windows must be product of dealer or his clerk.

Prize of $5 for the best written and best displayed Xmas advertisement will be given. It must deal with Xmas goods. Clip it from newspaper, mail and briefly outline your opinion of newspaper advertising.

N.B.—In sending photograph of window display don't overlook description in writing of this window. See that your photographer gets you a good picture. Don't allow him to stand too far away. Try to have him eliminate reflections. Get a picture that will show up to advantage the details.

Turned Back the Clock to Allow of More Shopping

(By A. H Harvey.)

After the first week in December business generally takes a spurt that necessitates longer hours for the clerks as well as the grocers themselves. It is inevitable. There are special holiday goods that must be brought out and made prominent, preparations must be made for the following day's business, the store is usually given a festive appearance and the great bulk of this work is usually done after hours.

It should be the clerk's part to lend as much assistance as possible during these weeks, for after the new year opens business will return to the routine. December brings the first skating, and outdoor sports vie with socials in claiming the evenings of the average youth. A clerk may, therefore, feel disposed to consider his own amusement in preference to the welfare of his employer and refuse to return for "overtime" work in the evening.

He should remember that the whole winter lies before him and that the busy period extends through only a few weeks.

This is an occasion when he can do a little extra for his employer, and the average Canadian grocer will appreciate any willingness to assist at a time when as much business as possible should be transacted. An interest in the business can be dishlayed by suggesting bright window, showcase and counter arrangement, and by generally entering into the spirit of the Christmas business with a whole-heartedness and energy that will be of real value to the employer. As an illustration, Christmas fell on Sunday a few years ago and a grocery clerk, knowing that his employer, who was a staunch observer of the Lord's Day, would lock the doors at midnight, turned the minute hand back twenty-five minutes when the correct time was 11.45 o'clock. He knew that Santa Claus was delaying many purchasers and thought it a shame to bar the door on customers that particular night. This is not fiction by any means.

The clerk should be interested enough in the business to do his share in making the last two weeks in the year the first, financially.

CARRY OVER NO DEAD STOCK.

Now is the time to get rid of all Christmas goods, novelties, etc., which will be practically unsalable after the New Year. Every dealer should make it a point to get behind these goods and encourage all his salesmen to do the same. When Christmas and New Year's are over the general public will have spent practically all their appropriation and will again fall back to straight, every day family necessities.

Make strong efforts, therefore, to sell all the straight holiday goods. If you have to advertise a little more than usual, do so; if an extra window or counter display will help, take the time to make one, and above all introduce all the customers possible to the goods you are anxious to move out. Personal suggestions of this character are bound to sell in many instances.

Better spend some time and money now in selling these goods than have dead stock on hand after the New Year.

"PARCELS POST IN THREE WEEKS."

"That a parcel post system will be inaugurated within the next three or four weeks is the prediction The World ventures to make at this date."

This appeared in The Toronto World during the week and should at once be given attention by every retail merchant in Canada As the World is likely to have some inside information into what the new Federal Government may do, the above intimation is serious. It should be a warning to retail merchants to at once voice their opinions strongly to local members on parcels post.

That the large mail order houses are behind the proposition and that they are the people more anxious to secure it than anybody else, is the firm belief of those who have gone into the question thoroughly. The mail order houses stand to gain everything and the retail merchant to lose. Those members of parliament who berate on and bemoan the rights of the people on what they consider economic questions, forget that the retail merchants are the backbone of the country. Wherever any new settlement or district is opened, it is the merchant who first appears on the scene; he begins the erection of the first buildings which are the foundations of future towns and cities; it is he who is entitled to a big share in peopling those districts and therefore to the increase in value of the land. Eliminate the straight merchant from any town and what is left?

Parcels post is a scheme that will enrich the few mail order houses in the larger centres at the expense of the communities from which that few draw the earnings of the people that should legitimately remain at home.

Wire or write your local member immediately. Tell him to oppose parcels post legislation and give him your reasons. Defeat the bill before it gets through committee stage. If every member receives a dozen or two curt telegrams, he will think twice before giving his influence to such a scheme.

SELLING PEEL AT A LOSS.

This is a pointed reason why some grocers fail and others remain poor.

A Montreal wholesaler calls the attention of The Grocer to the fact that a retailer was selling orange peel at 9½ cents a pound. Yet the best this wholesale grocer could quote to another jobbing firm was 10½ cents. It seems that reports such as these must exist, but it is difficult to try to understand why they should.

VALUABLE OIL IN NUTS.

Nuts should have a large sale in winter. A Montreal wholesaler who has studied the matter states that the oil contained in nuts is a good article to help provide the blood with material to counteract the cold. There are very few people, however, who take this sensible view in making their purchases.

This is one of the duties the grocer should strive to perform, the education of people in a real knowledge of the goods they purchase.

Of course, there will be a big trade in nuts for Christmas, but the trade should not rest content with that flash of business and an effort should be made to continue sales.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Great Britain, France, Germany and Italy are the European countries that have been the heaviest purchasers of California prunes this year.

The King's army in Canada is worrying over lack of funds to pay its grocery bills. This is due to the fact that when the late Government dissolved parliament to appeal to the electorate, the regular military supply had not been granted. The next pay day is Dec. 15, and hopes are expressed that something will be done.

Information from Smyrna mentions the formation of a combination in the fig industry. It is stated that there only remains the securing of a charter for the corporation to make the plans complete. In future the growers in the interior will not be able to get fancy prices for their figs and raisins, as one buyer will take the place of the forty or fifty that represented the chief packing houses under the old conditions. Europe and America, it is further stated, will have to pay more for their figs and raisins in future and therefore fig packing will likely once more be the profitable business it used to be.

Bank of Montreal, Montreal, 31st October, 1911.

The President's Address

The president, Mr. R. B. Angus, then moved the adoption of the Report, seconded by the Vice-President, Sir Edward Clouston, Bart. The President said:

I beg to move the adoption of the Report; and in doing so I have to call attention of the Shareholders to two important changes in the Annual Statement.

The one that was authorized by you at the Special meeting of 5th September and subsequently approved by the Treasury Board, provided for an increase of the Capital Stock by $1,600,000—mainly with a view of extending to that amount the right to increase the issue of notes in circulation. This appeared to be urgently demanded, as the circulation of this Bank has reached the legal limit, the amount of the paid up capital; and as other banks were much in the same position, it was feared that a great scarcity of currency would soon be experienced.

Another considerable change in the Statement at this time will be seen in the treatment of Bank premises account, which for years had been represented by the comparatively insignificant sum of $600,000, notwithstanding the large expenditure recently incurred for Bank Buildings and for providing suitable accommodation for the increasing business throughout the country. Your Directors have been frequently criticised for having charged the full amount of the cost under this head against the profits of the year, and it has been suggested that we should alter our system to conform to that of other Banks in the published statements. We have therefore had a conservative valuation made of the property, which results in the figures now submitted, namely, $9,088,000, land $4,735,000 and buildings $4,353,000, and have taken back less than half that amount or $4,000,000—more adequately to represent this item in the balance sheet. To adjust bank premises consequently the sum of $3,400,000 has been applied and the balance carried forward.

The calls on New Stock extend over a period of nine months and the payments being completed the capital will stand at $16,000,000, and the rest at a like amount.

On 15th September last we sustained a loss of $271,721.00 by burglary at New Westminster, one of our important branches, where a considerable amount of money had been provided for the payment of wages. A small portion so far has been recovered in addition to the insurance and the balance has been written off.

The business of the bank has been fairly prosperous during the year, although the employment of spare funds, in call and short loans, has been less productive than usual, the prevailing rates having been extremely low in New York and London during the whole period. The ordinary deposits show a gratifying increase, while those of a temporary character have to some extent fallen off, as we have been unwilling to encourage them at a higher rate of interest.

The money markets of Great Britain and the Continent of Europe have taken freely of Canadian bonds and stocks, municipal, railway and industrial. There was a brief interval of dullness but that condition seems to have passed and well vouched for securities are again in good demand. There is ample room for the employment of foreign capital in this rapidly developing country and it becomes the more imperative that no issue having any taint of doubtful value should be submitted to the foreign investor.

During the year under review Canada has enjoyed a period of great prosperity in almost every department of trade and commerce and has undoubtedly added largely to her permanent and productive wealth; although this has been more marked in the prairie provinces and British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces have not failed to participate.

The mining industry of British Columbia has taken on a new life, although the prolonged coal strike has seriously interfered with the operation of the mines and lessened their product. The mines in Ontario have been wonderfully productive. The iron and coal of Nova Scotia have had a large output and promise to be more profitable when their organization is more complete.

Manufacturers have been fully occupied and new industries of every description are springing up in all parts of the Dominion.

In immigration from Europe and the United States Canada has attracted 348,633 souls to her population, an increase over the previous year of 56,369. This item alone represents a very substantial gain, the value of each immigrant in money and property brought into the country has been variously estimated, and in the aggregate we know it must be very great; but still more to be valued is the advantage of the advent of so many additional hands, mostly farm laborers, who repair at once to the lands which lie open to their enterprise.

The increasing immigration, the consequent development of new acreage and the various climatic conditions make it difficult to estimate the result of the harvest. For instance the generally accepted figures for last year ranged from 80 to 95 millions of wheat, while the final outrun showed actually 118 millions in round figures. I have from a capable and well informed source the following estimate for this year: He says with regard to the Western crops:

Early estimates made by competent judges were in the neighborhood of 200 million bushels. However, since then, these estimates have been reduced to about 180 millions, owing to subsequent unfavorable weather conditions. While the quality this year, as a whole, is not all that could be desired, the average prices being paid for the lower grades are even better than the prices obtainable in many previous years for the higher grades, and consequently the net cash returns will be the largest ever obtained from our Northwest.

When considering the effect of the wheat crop in relation to its influence on the prosperity of our Dominion, the value of the other cereals produced in our Northwest must not be overlooked. If we accept the present estimates of the various important grains, which are as follows:

Wheat	180,000,000	bushels
Oats	200,000,000	"
Barley	35,000,000	"
Flax	7,000,000	"

the cash value to the farmer, at the average prices prevailing to-day, would be approximately over $235,000,000, no inconsiderable sum, considering that this is exclusive of the farmers' receipts from various other sources, such as live stock, hay, root crops and dairy products.

Railway construction, especially in the Northwest, continues to manifest great activity; and while in its immediate effect it benefits the country by the expenditure of money and the employment of labor, where the lines are judiciously chosen, it prepares the way for settlement and affords facilities for intercourse and ready access to markets.

Most worthy of note are the extensive irrigation works in the Northwest by which the arid lands are converted into fruitful fields destined to become the homes of a large farming population. As to the ready made farms they cannot be supplied fast enough to meet the wants of would-be settlers. While the railway took the initiative in this enterprise, it is being followed by large landholders and capitalists, of Great Britain, who, from patriotic motives in some instances, are making such investments with the view of supplying homes and giving a fresh start in life to the surplus population of the Mother Country. Experimental farms for the instruction and convenience of settlers are also of immense advantage and are gradually being extended to every province of the Dominion.

A review of the various branches of trade and industry throughout the Dominion is beyond my province, although the Bank in its widespread operations is vitally interested in the commercial life of the country, and touches it at every point. I, therefore, attempt but a brief summary.

The dry goods trade of 1911 has been somewhat unsatisfactory. In the spring stocks were heavy and the demand light, this being to some extent a legacy of the previous year. But a decided improvement has set in with much better prospects.

In Canadian cottons a largely increased trade has been experienced with firm prices, and imports are gradually decreasing.

Early in the year also our woollen and worsted manufacturers suffered from the competition of foreign imports. Goods intended for the United States, where the markets were overstocked, were, according to Bradford reports, sold in Canada at a sacrifice, but that condition of things has been overcome and the mills are now well employed in goods for next season.

Indeed, competent authorities report the wholesale trade to be at present in a comparatively flourishing condition and increasing in volume.

The iron and hardware trade and groceries are said to be decidedly good, although profits are somewhat curtailed by excessive competition.

In boots and shoes a large and apparently profitable business has been transacted, notwithstanding the high price of leather. A most remarkable change has taken place in the values of butter and cheese, as compared with those of a year ago. Farmers have been receiving 3c more per lb. for cheese, and 5c to 6c more for butter. The advance has been realized on a considerable portion of the season's make—indicating that the farmers have received at least $3,000,000 more for their exports of dairy products than for the corresponding period of last year.

The hay crop of the Dominion for 1911 was less than the previous year, but the farmers have realized from it a larger return by $2 to $3 per ton, and a good demand exists both in the United States and Great Britain.

The export of cattle continues to grow less each succeeding year, this being due in a great measure to the larger consumption of the home market and the increasing population both in the East and West.

The fisheries on our Atlantic Coast have been exceedingly prosperous and last year everyone who handled fish made money through the transaction. The fishermen had the biggest catch and obtained the highest prices recorded. This is true generally both in regard to our Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland.

With regard to the Pacific Coast, the salmon pack is reported to have been an average one. The market is active, and prices good. Other fishery conditions are generally satisfactory.

Recent changes in the tariff of the United States and the comparative failure of the water powers in that country have brought the pulp and paper making in Canada into prominence. Several of our mills have been successful in their operations; and with our extensive spruce forests and unsurpassed hydraulic powers this industry is sure to find a natural development in this country.

The lumber trade has been poor throughout the year especially in British Columbia, which has had to face the keen competition of the Western States whose lumber has been forced upon the Canadian markets in consequence of the almost complete paralysis of business in their own neighborhood. In the East and especially of late, there has been experienced a marked improvement both in export and local account. In the latter there has been an unprecedentedly brisk and profitable demand in consequence of the activity of building operations.

This leads me to remark upon the real estate transactions which in some districts savor too much of speculation. In Montreal and other large Eastern cities prices have long been in a measure dormant, until recently when the public suddenly realized the necessity of providing homes and commercial buildings for the vastly increasing population. Hence the rise in values which is not without justification.

The business of the port of Montreal shows a healthy increase. The total quantity of grain exported during the season of navigation is about 29,388,359 as compared with 26,349,514 bushels last season, while the exports of flour have almost doubled.

With the high prices of agricultural produce prevailing the farmers of Canada have had a profitable year, which is reflected in the satisfactory condition of the general business in all portions of the Dominion.

There can be no more certain indication of the business activity and general prosperity of the country than the rail-

Swing of Progressiveness P

Past Progress, Present Standing and Future Pr
Manufacturers—Extensive Factory Equipped w of Business Demands Greater Factory than has b

TO keep pace with the spirit of the advancing times is the aim of every business, large or small.

No finer example of progressiveness exists anywhere among Canadian industries than the business of The Cowan Co., Limited, Cocoa and Chocolate Manufacturers, Stirling Road, Toronto. Established a quarter of a century ago, this business has grown up with, and kept ahead of, the rapid strides of the grocery trade of the Dominion.

Its ideal location, its railway facilities, the modern plant, the finest cocoa and chocolate machinery in the world, the quality of its products, its liberal advertising and the progressive aims of the men at the helm, have all combined to make the name of COWAN a familiar and respected one among the Canadian trade.

Finest Machinery in Existence.

That there is no finer cocoa and chocolate establishment in the world is beyond a doubt. To go through the factory and see the smooth operations of the immense machines is an education to anyone.

The machinery is the finest and most modern in existence to-day. It is practically all new and of the largest type. Every known device for facilitating and perfecting the manufacture of the products of the company has been installed. It is absolutely impossible for any man to purchase anything more modern.

With such a splendidly equipped factory one can easily understand the enormous amount of business done, which, it is stated, is close to a million dollars a year.

Planning to Build Again.

Nor is that all. When the present large factory, shown in the accompanying illustration, was erected some six years ago, it was thought to be large enough to cope with the business for many years to come.

But business has increased so rapidly since that time, that plans are now under way for another large building, one about the same size as the present. This will be similarly equipped with the very latest in machinery and modern improvements and will insure an output double what it is at present.

The Shipping Facilities.

Situated as it is on the main line west of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and at the same time with the Grand Trunk Railway on the opposite side, the site is recognized as one of the best factory locations in Toronto. Railway sidings into a factory mean much in these days of advanced trade, and The Cowan Company, Limited, have long since experienced the value and necessity of them.

Business is done on a large scale by this company. All supplies such as the raw cocoa beans, sugar, coal, etc., are purchased by the carload and a great part of their output leaves the factory in the same way.

The Largest Water Tank in Toronto.

The Cowan Co.'s Building is constructed of Milton Pressed Brick. The Sprinkler System is installed for fire protection and is fed by the huge tank which can be seen in the illustration. This tank has a capacity of 50,000 gallons and is the largest in the city of Toronto.

If fire should break out anywhere, the sprinklers are automatically brought into operation by the action of heat on certain portions of the piping. A perpetual stream of water immediately begins to play upon the flames.

The building is further protected at night by the Patrol Signal Service. This is one of the modern perfected inventions which brings immediate aid, if through any mishap the night watchman fails to "touch the buttons" located in every department of the building, and which register the rounds of the watchman at the downtown central station.

Hardwood floors are found throughout the entire building. On a visit through the establishment, one is struck by the cleanliness of these floors and the order of things existing everywhere.

ts of Canada's Well-known Cocoa and Chocolate e Finest Machinery in the World—Rapid Increase Evidences of the Modernness of this Big Industry.

A good idea may be gained of the capacity of this factory when it is known that there are 111,115 square feet of floor space. This is now inadequate, as stated above, to meet present conditions.

Employees' Residences.

In other ways is the Cowan Co., Limited, more than keeping pace with the times. The firm has begun the erection of employees' homes on its own property. Two pretty little cottages are located on the south, as seen in the illustration and are occupied by employees. This idea of always having trusted employees close at hand in case of fire, etc , belongs only to the most progressive manufacturers, and the fact that this company have adopted such an advanced policy tends to place it among the leaders in Canadian commerce.

Delivery by Motor Truck Likely.

A fine new garage and stable is now in the course of erection. A south and east view may be seen herewith. It looks as if the company intends establishing in Toronto motor truck delivery system.

Clean, comfortable dining rooms for both girls and men add to their pleasure and comfort. They include every facility for enjoying luncheon and provide against employes having to travel long distances for the midday meal. In fact, it is plain to any observer visiting the factory that the employes of The Cowan Co., Limited, are unusually well treated and protected.

The immense steam plant, generating the power and operating the cold storage, is worth while seeing. In addition to steam power, motors were observed to be necessary on many machines to aid in turning out the many products of the company.

Prominent Men as Directors.

The strength of The Cowan Co., Limited, from a financial standpoint will be readily appreciated from the personnel of the directorate.

The president is Dr. Elmore Harris, the eminent Doctor of Divinity, and also one of the largest shareholders in the Massey-Harris Co.

Charles T. Stark, of Jno. Stark & Co., and also a director of The Dominion Radiator Co., is vice-president, and H. N. Cowan is the Managing Director. Mr. Cowan is a son of the founder of the company, the late John W. Cowan, who established the business in 1886. Ever since its inception the present managing director has been connected with it. The authorized capital of the company is three-quarters of a million.

A National Business.

The Cowan Co., Limited, does business from coast to coast. Branches have been established in Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver, thus presenting every facility for promptly supplying the trade. This is still another testimonial of this firm's ability to advance with the times and to keep more than abreast with commercial conditions.

Improvements to the factory and machinery are going on all the time. The best and most modern equipment is the watchword. There is nothing obsolete; nothing that will retard the greatest output possible, and nothing that will tend to diminish the service rendered the trade. "The best that money can buy," is the motto, as one can readily recognize from the hum of the great machines, their appearance and the ease with which they operate and turn out the Cowan products.

The Cowan Co., Limited, always in the forefront of progress, is pushing forward to still greater things. The new building under contemplation will be equipped with the latest machinery needed to cope with increasing trade from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Judging from the progress of the last 25 years, it needs no prophetic eye whatever to see this business continue to be in the forefront of Canadian industries at the end of the next quarter of a century.—Advt.

Bank of Montreal Report.

way earnings, which are phenomenally large.

I regret to announce the retirement of Sir Edward S. Clouston, Baronet, from the General Managership of the Bank. After 47 years of service, 20 of which have been passed in the Chief Executive Office, it is natural that he should seek some relief from the arduous duties of that position. I am happy to say, however, that his mature judgment and great experience will still be available to the administration, when required, in the less strenuous office of Vice-President.

He will be succeeded by Mr. H. V. Meredith, an able and well qualified officer, who will surround himself with such capable assistants as are always to be found on the staff of the Bank.

Sir Edward Clouston.

In seconding the adoption of the Report, Sir Edward Clouston said:—

As the President has dealt with the general business of the country, I will confine the few remarks I make to the statement, a copy of which you have in your hands.

To meet the wishes of the shareholders, expressed at several of our meetings, and to conform to the custom of the other banks in Canada, we have shown the amount expended on new bank premises during the year. We have also obtained valuations of all our lands and buildings, and I do not think we can be accused of overvaluation when we place the value in our statement at $4,000,000, somewhat less than the value of the land alone. In fact, to the amount of $9,000,000 should be added the cost of uncompleted buildings, making it $700,000 more. The increase of $3,400,000 over former statements has been employed partly to increase our Rest to an amount equal to our Paid-up Capital, and the surplus has been carried to our Profit & Loss Account. Speaking as an individual, and in no way as a mouthpiece of the Board, I would not advocate increasing, in future, our Rest beyond the Paid-up Capital. I should always like to keep the Profit & Loss Account at its present amount, as a Reserve, to be used when the Directors might see fit to do so in the interests of the Bank, and any surplus profits, after full appropriations have been made, I would suggest distributing among the Shareholders.

The shrinkage in deposits, as compared with last year, is accounted for by the fact that at that time we had very large special deposits, which were shortly after distributed. The regular deposit business of the Bank has been satisfactory. The increase in our Loans is an evidence that our Canadian business is steadily increasing. I think you will agree with me that the statement is a strong and satisfactory statement.

The President has mentioned that I have decided to retire from active Executive work. I have held the stage for a long time, for I find my service in the General Manager's position is more than double that of any of my predecessors. I have kept in mind, however, that while Corporations may go on forever, the men who manage them come and go, and with that in view I have always tried to arrange that the exit of any one man should not in any way interfere with the business of the Bank. In passing over the reins of office to my successor, I feel I am doing a good thing for the Bank and its Shareholders. Mr. Meredith has spent all his active business life in the service of the Bank, is familiar with its policy, is trained in its traditions, and has been uniformly successful in his previous appointments. I have no doubt he will be equally successful in the high office to which he is called, and I am quite satisfied your property will be handled conservatively.

The ballot for the election of Directors was then proceeded with, and without much delay the Scrutineers appointed for that purpose reported the following gentlemen duly elected, the old Board being re-elected :—

Messrs:—R. B. Angus, A. Baumgarten, Sir Edward Clouston, Bart, E. B. Greenshields, C. R. Hosmer, Sir William C. Macdonald, Hon. Robert Mackay, H. V. Meredith, D. Morrice, James Ross, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, K.C.V.O., Rt. Hon. Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O.

OFFICERS ELECTED.

At a meeting of the Directors held later, the Right Honorable Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., was elected Honorary President of the Bank, Mr. R. B. Angus, President, and Sir Edward Clouston, Bart., Vice-President.—Advt.

Prizes Given for Three Best Reasons

Should Merchant Accept Inferior Poultry From Good Country Customer at Price Paid for Good Poultry, or Not?—Grocer Reader Relates Interesting Experience.

The letter printed below from a reader of The Grocer brings up an interesting question, but by no means an uncommon one. It arises probably in every general merchant's and grocer's store in the country, where eggs, butter, poultry, etc., are bought from country customers. If the poultry is poor, unsalable stuff, but the customer offering it one who purchases freely, should the merchant purchase it or not?

Readers of The Grocer are requested to give their opinions as to whether the clerk in the store mentioned in this letter did the proper thing, and reasons for thinking so; or whether he should have bought the chickens at the price named in the circular.

The Grocer will pay $1 to each of the three readers giving best reasons for their opinions. Here is the letter :—

Editor Canadian Grocer :—The following incident happened this week, and would you kindly give me your opinion regarding it, whether I acted wisely or not, through the columns of The Canadian Grocer?

Our store is located in a good farming section with two other competitors. We sent out circulars soliciting poultry during the winter months. We had a good market for nice dry-picked and bled chickens, etc., and were offering a cent more per pound than competitors. Two young women entered the store and told the clerk they had chickens in the buggy. The assistant was sent out for them and took them to the scales. He called my attention to them as he thought they did not look up to the mark.

I examined them, and they were the worst lot of chickens I ever saw, small, had been scalded and their necks broken instead of bled; also, they were an unusual color and the flesh of some badly torn. I took them in myself and told the young women that we could not handle them at any price. I was very sorry that I had to reject them, and pointed out they were quite unsalable in the market we had, that we were pleased and willing to take all kinds our circulars asked for and that we were paying top-notch prices for good stuff only.

The young women made a few purchases and left, and upon inquiring I found they belonged to a family who had just begun to deal with us and were pretty good buyers. I never consulted the proprietor as he was busy with a traveler and I knew he put faith in my judgment, although he would have taken the stuff himself. I still feel uneasy about it, and if it is not troubling you too much I trust you will comply with my wishes.

A READER OF CANADIAN GROCER.

SELLING PRUNES A NEW WAY.

The prune is no longer to be considered as a boarding house joke. The price alone raises it to a new standard, but it is now put forward as a dainty. Here is the proof : "Glace Prunes, stuffed with walnuts, from California. This is one of the most tempting and delicious articles we ever sold yet. The demand for them is so great that the manufacturer never sends us all we order. If you want a treat get a box of Glace Prunes stuffed with walnuts, price 90c per box."

This is the description given them in a Montreal grocer's advertisement. Not only does it give the prune a higher standing in the fruit world, but it shows the writer possesses a fine idea of how advertising copy should be written.

Montreal, Nov. 7.—With the close of navigation wholesale grocers have delivered the most of the bulky goods that were on the order sheets in order to take advantage of the freight rate by boat. However, there is a general report of extreme activity and it is fully expected that business will be good right through the holiday season. Some grocers in the country delay purchases until the eleventh hour, others buy lightly and exhaust their supplies before the heaviest part of the rush and a large number of city grocers, of the smaller means buy practically from hand to mouth. Thus, there will be a good general trade up to the first of the year at any rate.

A noticeable feature of this year's business is the heavy demand for seasonable goods. "The demand has been phenomenal," said one wholesaler, and remarked that there must be a great deal of money in the country. Currants, raisins, peel, and a long list of other goods are going out in a stream; and it must be remembered that in the most cases prices are higher than usual. In addition many luxuries are showing a new activity. For instance Malaga raisins are a feature of the season in themselves. One firm reports they have oversold on them. Another has done the same with figs and now reports an advance of one cent per pound. A representative of one firm made the statement that they expected their business for 3 months to amount to one million dollars. November showed them to be well over the required one-third and it is likely that their estimate will be reached. It is now assured that the year will make a fitting close and the wholesale and retail trade should receive splendid returns for the season and the year.

Sugar.—The market declined 10 cents on Wednesday. This is the first decline since early in the year, and first change for several weeks.

Dried Fruits.—It is evident from the amount of business already transacted in dried fruits that the holiday trade will be exceptionally heavy in spite of rather high prices and the growing tendency to purchase mincemeat, plum pudding and fruit cake from the grocer. Package fruits are being shown everywhere and currants in packages appear to be selling as well as raisins in this form. Malaga raisins may be termed a "big seller" this year and generally speaking this fruit is of good size and color. Bosnia prunes have been arriving of late and the trade is now supplied with all the necessaries for the holiday business. This department remains steady with firm prices. New dates due in Montreal about December 10th or 11th are quoted lower than the first arrivals. These are from the S.S. Gorjistan and coming much later than the first shipments are thus quoted slightly lower.

Nuts.—Jobbers have practically all their supplies for the Christmas trade and most retailers have received their orders. Prices are steady and the demand is heavy from those grocers who did not send in their orders earlier. Tarragona almonds are reported scarce and prices are expected to hold their own through the season. A sharp advance in Brazil nuts was announced on Tuesday by importers, and at the time it was unknown whether jobbers would follow or not. The advance for first quality Brazils was exactly three cents over the former price. Thus, those who have already made their purchases are now three cents a pound ahead of former quotations. The reason is a scarcity of nuts and a heavy demand. Holders in New York are reported as having advised local representatives not to be too eager to take orders for the reason that the market supply is short.

Canned Goods.

Montreal. — Tomatoes are coming to be regarded as scarce in the United States. There are two reasons for this. Prices are higher and jobbers report light stocks. The market in Baltimore has been steady at 95c, but of late $1 was quoted and some even demanded $1.05. Thus there have been numerous sales at figures showing a considerable advance. Locally canned goods are rather quiet. Orders are still coming in but the bulk of the business was done for late boat shipment and the bulk of the retail trade should have supplies that will carry them well into the winter.

Toronto.—There is a present good demand for canned goods. The fact that green goods are scarce, as well as vegetables, works for a better demand for canned vegetables than would otherwise be the case. Canned fruits, jams and marmalades have become regular sellers and are moving out freely just now

If the situation in tomatoes here is to be gauged by that across the line from where considerable supplies have been brought, it can be said to be stronger. While not very long ago 3s in Baltimore could be had for 95 cents, now $1.02½ is being asked.

Other lines hold a steady position.

Toronto, Dec. 7.—The greatest feature of the week has been the break in sugar which declined 10 cents per cwt. on Wednesday, the first marked change since Sept. 8th when this commodity reached the highest point since 1889. Up to Sept. 8th, it had been steadily on the ascent from early in February.

The bulk of the goods that are in demand for the Christmas baking have gone out to the retail trade. There has been an excellent demand for currants, raisins, peels, spices, molasses, flavoring extracts and other essentials. Now sorting orders for lines that the grocer has run short of or which he thinks he will need before the festive season will be coming in. There will be the finishing touches, which are not in big demand until the day is near, such as icing sugar, cake candies, mincemeat, etc. Good sized orders are coming in for nuts of all kinds, confectionery, dates, figs and Malaga raisins. So far business has been of an appreciable volume and wholesalers are looking forward to a good wind up of the Christmas trade, and when the final count of the sales sheet is made, it is expected to show a goodly increase over last year.

Sugar.—The expected has come at last. Sugar is down 10 cents per cwt. This decline announced late on Wednesday is the first downward movement in sugar since February last. The trade for some time have been operating on a hand-to-mouth basis and were carrying only small stock. It brings granulated in Toronto down to $5.85. The situation is still easy, but whether any further declines will take place this side of the new year is a question.

Dried Fruits.—There is a good sale for various kinds of dried fruits. Retailers are filling up the hollow spots in their stocks for the Christmas trade. Raisins, currants and peels have been moving freely. The latter are inclined to scarcity, especially in better quality, and prices hold firm.

As we stated would be the case, the second arrival of Hallowee dates has brought lower prices. Supplies from the first vessel were well taken care of. The third shipment is due to arrive in New York on Dec. 20.

Prunes are in the same position as a week ago. Seeded raisins on spot are again a little easier, but late advices from coast denote slightly firmer feeling there. Valencia raisins and currants are both in steady position.

Dates, figs and table raisins are going out freely for the Xmas trade.

Nuts.—Nuts are certainly in prominence now. Orders are coming in freely for supplies for the Xmas trade. Wholesalers' stocks are practically complete. This week there have been a number of price changes and happily they have been mostly downward in keeping with new crop values. Bordeaux and Marbot walnuts are at lower price of new crop goods. New Grenobles are expected daily but the first heavy direct shipment will not arrive for a week or 10 days. Peanuts have eased off in price as suggested would be the case. Those who have been following up our market reports knew what to expect of Brazils. Prices are higher this week and are firm at the advance, for supplies are scarce.

Old shelled walnuts were pretty well cleaned up before the arrival of the new which are quoted at 35 to 38 cents. January arrivals will be lower in price.

Rice and Tapioca.—There are no new features to either rice or tapioca. Demand is of an appreciable volume in both lines.

Pot and pearl barley continue to increase in value. Not more than a month and a half ago pot barley was quoted at $3.50 per cwt. The present price is $3.90 to $4. Pearl is $1 per cwt. higher.

Brooms.—There has been no further advance in broom prices but the market is still strong. Broom corn still holds at the high figure and it is reported that 90 per cent. of broom manufacturers of Canada and United States purchased corn at from $140 to $200 per ton. "I certainly don't expect any decline," stated one manufacturer. "On the contrary I expect to see further advances after the turn of the new year." The trade well know where prices went to following the 1909 crop. In that year the acreage of corn in the United States was 55,574 acres. This year, it was only 49,395 acres and besides the latter part of the crop was poor, while there has been no help from foreign corn, as it has been a poor year in Hungary, Turkey and Italy. Indications are, therefore, for continued strength in this market.

Washboards.—An advance of from 25 to 35 cents per dozen according to grades has taken place in washboards. Manufacturers state that the increased cost of the material used in their manufacture is the cause. Prices are also higher in the United States. Lumber is higher, while zinc has also been advancing considerably during the past year.

Olive Oil.—Prospects for new crop olive oil still continue quite favorable. One report says "The demand continues very good; prices are unchanged; if anything hardening, while sales of new crop have been made at figures slightly above those asked last week. It does not look as if we shall see a very low market this coming season, although prices are expected to be reasonable in view of the good crop expected."

MANITOBA MARKETS.

POINTERS.—
Sugar.—Steady.
Coffee.—Strong.
Currants.—Scarce.
Prunes.—Strong.
Beans.—Firm.

Winnipeg, Dec. 7.—Another week of mild weather has assisted materially in making up for cold spell two weeks ago. In spite of this, however, there are yet many thousands of bushels that will not be threshed till spring and as a result collections have been backward and many retail merchants have been carried over by large wholesalers.

Tone of market at present time is decidedly strong for all lines, and in many cases advances are expected within the immediate future. In discussing this topic one wholesaler predicted an advancing market on all lines this winter. When asked as to present volume of trade being transacted he was very optimistic, and pointed out that general trade conditions were healthy, and that in spite of disappointment regarding collections, caused by delayed harvesting, orders were being received in large quantities, which at same time were conservative with conditions. This factor alone he claimed was very encouraging as it demonstrated that retailers realized that in view of the prevailing situation they were not justified in asking for large credit. The main drawback at the present time was the serious blockage that was existing in the freight yards in the city of all railroads for the last three weeks. Conditions were not better than last week and that cars were lying in the yards which should have been unloaded from ten days to two weeks ago. This neglect might be due to some extent to the effort to get as many cars of wheat to head of lakes before navigation closes. This should have taken place on Nov. 30, but an extension to Dec. 5 was granted by insurance companies, and in rush to get all vessels clear before midnight of that date, other lines of freight are simply being ignored. After the close of navigation the price of wheat usually drops about three cents. To give some idea of the enormous quantities of grain leaving the head of lakes it might be well to state that 3,095,000 bushels were loaded out in the 24 hours preceding midnight of Nov. 30.

In the trade direct all lines are holding steady and few changes are necessary. A rearrangement of prices will be noticed in some cases.

Sugar.—The situation in sugar is somewhat firmer than it was last week, and now that the Christmas season is on hand there is little chance of decline before the end of the year. Retailers have stocked up to supply the season's demands but they are still looking for lower figures and will not order more than enough to supply immediate demand. Prices remain unchanged therefore at last week's figures.

Syrup and Molasses.—Steadiness continues to prevail in these lines and while no rapid advances are taking place, yet the market is likely to go higher before the winter is out. Prices being quoted by the largest wholesalers in town are:

Dried Fruits.—An active demand still continues for all lines of dried fruits. New figs are active and moving freely. Prunes are perhaps of greatest interest this week and all indications point to an advancing market. One large wholesaler stated that 90 per cent. of the crop in California has already been shipped. Result is that this will mean bare market early in new year. Prices he predicted would range as high next spring for prunes as they were this summer. These conditions have been brought about by abnormally strong European demand. Two steamers had sailed from San Francisco for Europe last week each carrying about 500 carloads of prunes. Such a condition has never been known before and California growers are unable to account for it. As regards Mediterranean fruits the trade was watching the effect of the present Turco-Italian war with interest. It is the opinion that if hostilities continue much longer Turkey will order all exports to cease, which would consequently affect the price of figs considerably. All Mediterranean fruits will be scarce unless some change takes place. Prices prevailing at present are :—

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver, B.C., Dec. 7.—The seasonable Japanese orange is on the market again, the first shipments having arrived this week. They are of good quality this year, and give evidence of greater care in the orchards in the Orient. It looks as if the Jap, ever quick to learn, is profiting by the rejection of shipments two seasons ago, because of infection by fruit pests. Prices are 50 and 55 cents, retailing at 65 cents.

The price of eggs has climbed to its usual winter altitude, beyond the reach of the ordinary population. Strictly new-laid, the kind to be depended on, are not jobbed to a large extent, in many instances being sold direct to the stores. They are bought for 75 and 80 cents, and retail at 85 cents. Selected retail at 40 cents, with a lower grade at 35, the jobbing price being 32 and 33 cents. The 40-cent brand are good for general purposes and there are large sales.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Dec. 7.—General satisfaction prevails among majority of local wholesalers regarding the increased trade of late, largely due to preparations for holiday season. Money is circulating quite freely, and orders are steadily coming in. Travelers in general report good business through country centres of province, as well as in other cities. All outlying districts have been supplied for the Christmas trade in so far as large orders are concerned, and dealers are gratified with the results. Retailers are now buying sorting up orders.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, Dec. 7.—Orders now coming to hand for Christmas groceries are of good volume and trade this season gives promise of being excellent. Stores are making fine displays of dried fruits, and other goods for the festive season. All the dealers have the goods, however, and they will get them out in good time. The sales of dried fruits so far is above the average, particularly Valencia raisins, the stocks remaining in wholesale grocers' hands being small. This has caused an unusually heavy demand for California muscatel raisins which are going to the trade at 8½ cents per pound.

Provision houses buying poultry are advising country merchants to ship their turkeys early this month. One firm places date at not later than Dec. 19, as, it claims, there will likely be a slump in prices after that date.

NEW CANNING CONCERN.

Montreal Despatch Tells of Men Interested—Five Factories Contemplated.

Montreal, Dec. 7.—(Special.)—There is a report here of the formation of a new big canning company headed by C. H. Cahan and a number of Montreal capitalists. It is stated that 5 factories will be erected in Ontario. While there is nothing definite yet re the name of the company, rumor has it that it will be called the British-Canadian Canners' Co., and that it will begin with paid up capital of $500,000 bonds, paying six per cent., and $750,000 of common stock. Those already identified with the company are C. H. Cahan, H. A. Lovett, John Black and Sir Henry Bate of Ottawa.

Lariviere, president of the Chambre du Commerce, Montreal, and J. H. Burland, president of the Board of Trade.

ALBERTA MERCHANTS' DEMANDS.

Want Practically all Exemptions Abolished Where Debtors May Escape Debts.

Edmonton, Alta., Dec. 5.—The retail merchants of the province had a deputation officially call upon Premier Sifton recently to present a petition which they claim has been signed by every retailer in the province. It pleads for the abolition of practically all exemptions under cover of which debtors are enable to escape paying their debts.

The retailers claim it was very well in the old days of the territorial councils to exempt a great many articles so that farmers and others could be induced to come into the country. The retailers say that to exempt all these articles now is to aid dishonest people to escape from paying their grocer and butcher bills.

The retailers think that farm implements, stock and land should only be exempt from seizure when they are held and owned by a debtor actually living on and farming the land.

SOMETHING NEW IN MONTREAL.

Montreal, Dec. 7.—A week ago there was opened in Dupuis Freres, departmental store, what is termed a model grocer department having for its motto "quality, economy and good service." The firm's avowed aim is to supply their numerous customers with the highest class food products at wholesale prices, plus a small percentage to cover cost of administration. H. B. Wylie, formerly of the grocery department of W. H. Scroggie, Ltd., has charge of the Dupuis department.

It is apparent that the new venture, like many others of the same kind, is merely a form of advertising and is an illustration of what the ordinary retail grocer has to contend with.

Expenses and Leaks in Business

Their Relation to Profits—Grocery Business Looks Good on Paper and to Those Not Acquainted With Big Expenses and Leaks Which Cut Away Profits—Some Examples.

(By R. J. Young.)

The grocery business looks good on paper. That, perhaps, is one of the reasons why clerks are often so anxious to get into business for themselves, afterwards to be disappointed in results.

It may be the reason why consumers unaware of the large expenses and the many leaks, believe that the dealer dispensing groceries has a gold mine. It is the incentive for many people to enter the business who know practically nothing about it. For the simple reason that it looks good when figured on paper.

Prospects Were Rosy.

When I first enquired into the prospects, I was delighted with the bright future which seemed to be ahead with very little exertion. I was told by men in the business, that the profit on groceries averaged around twenty per cent. That may be pretty nearly true. It varies greatly with different dealers.

On beginning to figure on that basis, I reckoned on doing a $200 business per week. That would mean a profit of forty dollars per week. Figuring that expenses would be fifteen dollars, that would leave twenty-five dollars net profit. This, compared with the salary I was then receiving looked mighty big. Here's how I figured out my expenses:

Rent of store per week	5.00
Wages for assistant	6.00
Keep of horse	2.00
Light, per week	.50
Heat, per week	.50
Advertising, per week	1.00
Total	$15.00

Is Now a Wise Man.

I am wiser now in regard to the expenses of running a grocery store and of the profit derived by the proprietor. In my expenses I had forgotten to figure on a few items. In making an estimate one should include rent, salaries, light, heat, advertising, delivery, management, stationery, printing, loss by bad accounts, wrapping paper, twine, decorations, fire insurance, deterioration of fixtures, telephone, cost of collections and business tax.

To be exact, one might also add another very substantial list, including brooms, cleaning, donations, newspapers, wagon grease, horse shoeing, nails, messengers, pencils, pens, postage, post office box rent, repairs, soap, telegrams, free cigars and candies, harness, extra help, broken goods and goods forgotten to be charged.

Proprietor's Salary.

Then to top this, the proprietor must be given a salary, and take what is left as the return on money invested or deduct the interest on the amount invested and take what is left for salary.

Indeed, the grocery business is not exactly the dream which I figured it in my days as a clerk, nor the returns so encouraging

Watch the Leaks.

Besides keeping expenses at a minimum for the business done, the grocer must give special attention to the prevention of leaks if he would secure a living profit. Not alone must the large and conspicuous leaks that drain away the store's profits be closely watched, but also the smaller ones which through their relatively less importance are liable to be overlooked, but these same smaller leaks decide to a great extent the amount of total profit.

Poor buying is a source of considerable loss in many establishments. While the grocer should always aim to keep a complete stock, there is a difference between this and overbuying. It is preferable to buy a too small amount than too large. Purchases should be gauged on previous sales of the article, considering always the prospects for an increase or decrease in its sale in the future.

There is also the prevention of the accumulation of dead and unsalable stock in the store. If you purchase a case of a certain article and two packages stand on your shelf until they are not fit for sale, then you have made practically nothing or perhaps lost on the deal. Remember that the profit comes from the sale of the last package of every dozen. With that fact before you, use your salesmanship not only to sell the eleven but the twelfth, for therein lies your profit. There is also much in knowing when to move an article regardless of cost. I believe that the first loss is the best.

Overweight in Sugar.

Carefulness in weighing is another essential of the successful store. I was in a brother grocer's store the other day when a clerk was weighing several packages of sugar. In the first place, he impressed one with the fact that his chief desire was to complete the work regardless of his employer's profit. The counter, scales, and the floor, received a liberal sprinkling of the valuable sweetstuff. When he had finished, I placed three of the parcels on the scale and found the generous clerk had given customers all the way from 1½ to 4 ounces of sugar more than they were entitled to. In other words, he has cheated his employer of just that much. Just another example of the leaks that will creep into a business where every care is not exercised.

In the storehouse of the same store was observed a good many leaks. On first view one of the most prominent was a hole in a sack of grain which was allowing the profits, literally, to flow down the crack in the floor. At one side was a sack of peanuts, also with a hole. To this the clerks had given considerable attention, but in the way of helping themselves to the contents whenever they happened to pass. Farther on a bundle of paper bags had fallen out upon the passageway, and over these the clerks had trampled, making many unfit for use.

Catsup Lost in Sawdust.

Passing out of the storehouse I found a case filled with sawdust in which was still a bottle of catsup which the clerk in his hurry had neglected to unpack.

At one side of the backyard was a pile of broken boxes which the grocer was using as kindling instead of keeping them in good shape and selling the same. There was indeed plenty of evidence that the store needed a business doctor.

The grocery business is no dream. However, it will return a fair living profit to the man who is prepared to give it the necessary effort and attention, and who watches closely the expenses and the leaks.

RICE IMPORTS.

During the six months ending September, 1911. Canada imported 7,563,650 pounds of cleaned rice. Of this, 4,101,673 pounds came from Great Britain, 2,387,935 pounds from Hong Kong, and 485,042 pounds from the United States. Uncleaned, or unhulled rice comes in free. During the same six months, 31,144,892 pounds were imported. United States sent only 1,300 pounds, Hong Kong 6,232,827, Japan 6,047,578, and other countries 18,863,187 pounds.

GUM AS MOUTH-CLEANSER.

Dr. Le Grand Kerr, of New York, a specialist in diseases of children recommends the use of chewing gum as a mouth cleaner. It is, he says, especially effective in infectious diseases where a child usually rebels against the use of cleansing lotions.

CLERK'S CONDITION AND THAT OF YEARS AGO

Independence Existing Now Was Not so Prominent in the Old Days—A Conspiracy Among Clerks Which Ended in Failure.

By A. H. Harvey.

Grocers find a certain independence among clerks to-day that was altogether lacking in the trade two or three decades ago. Looking back to the days when he was passing through his clerkship the grocer recalls the long hours that were then the general rule, but now his clerks have no night work and when they are requested to give a little extra time it is not always done with the best grace.

A grocer recently discussing this point remarked that when he was a clerk his employer was but little short of a czar. Hours were long, and if a clerk demurred he was generally instructed to find other employment. This grocer had learned the business in the Old Country where he was apprenticed for four years to a grocer who paid him the princely wages if 3s 6d a week. However, the clerk had usually received a thorough training and he went out into the world with an efficiency and capability that is said to be lacking in the present day product of the trade, or at least with quite a percentage of it.

Couldn't Stand Their Ground.

The grocer recalled one occasion when a silent mutiny broke out among the clerks with whom he worked. There had been long hours and some of the clerks talked of walking out if their position was not ameliorated. This grocer threw in his lot with the others but when the time came to carry out their plans, the ringleaders backed down and our grocer was the only one ready to act.

To-day, good clerks are scarce, and conditions are much improved. It is a noticeable fact that the inferior clerks are those who make the heaviest demands. They over-estimate their importance, possibly feeling secure in their position.

PUSH GELATINE SALES.

Pointers on How Good Results Can be Accomplished.

By H. T.

How many sales of gelatine will you have during the coming holiday trade?

This question is suggested by the fact that to secure the best returns during the coming season the grocer must use his imagination in order to place before his customers as extensive a stock as possible. Gelatine is an article that goes into all but the poorest homes and is included or should be included in all Christmas orders. The grocer should remember that gelatine not only forms a part of many delicacies of the table but it enhances the appearance of the tables when just little things add to the charm of a home gathering.

But, gelatine has been mentioned only as an example of opportunities that are presented but of which full advantage is not often taken. The grocer must decide for himself what his programme is to be. He knows the limits of his stock and the character of his customers. He must play his own game.

But speaking of gelatine, it must be remembered that there is a wide demand for this article during winter. Little social affairs in the homes are numerous and gelatine should have a fair trade. Giving this and kindred articles an occasional selling help in the form of a window or counter display will assist materially in bringing results.

Christmas Poultry in the Limelight

Dealers are Wondering How Supplies Will be—Look for Ample Offerings for Xmas—Turkeys Generally Small in Size—Difficult to Size up Live Hog Situation—Comparison of Feed and Product in Chicago—United States Eggs Come to Canada—Butter Holds Strong—Cheese is Steady.

With Christmas fast approaching, poultry and more especially turkeys are being brought into the limelight. Dealers are wondering how supplies for the festive season are going to turn out. On the whole, they seem inclined to believe that supplies of poultry will be ample. Turkeys, while rather scarce in some sections, are quite plentiful in others. While the quality is quite good, they will run into small sizes. This week from various parts of Ontario and Quebec, shipments are going west to supply the Xmas trade.

It is an important fact that as yet, arrivals of poultry at the various centres have been small. However, there is always an inclination to hold supplies until the near approach of Xmas in hope of higher prices. In many sections this was the case last year and quite a flood came to market Christmas week. Country dealers generally make arrangements with the surrounding farmers for their supply.

The tendency in live hogs is slightly stronger this week. Offerings at some centres have been rather stinted. The English bacon market has also firmed up again. It is a difficult matter for the dealer to size up the live hog situation. Arguments are put up on one hand why the market should strengthen and by others why it should not. It is claimed by some that the rather free movement that has been in order during the fall was brought about by the high price of feed and that this will be at the expense of receipts later on. Still this has been put forward for some time back and still at intervals receipts get heavy.

"A rather interesting situation is produced at present in the cost of feed stuffs and in the cost of products," says a dispatch from Chicago. "The price of grain is nearly 50 per cent. higher than last year in both corn and oats. Prices for rough feed stuffs are not correspondingly as high, but mill feeds of all kinds are considerably higher than a year ago. On the other hand, the price of product os lower than a year ago."

The arrival of United States eggs at several Canadian centres indicates the size of storage stocks in this country and the general situation in eggs here. Prices are firm here and the same is also true at the moment across the line. Fresh eggs are extremely scarce and are bringing high prices.

While stocks of butter on most markets are considered small as compared with last year, the tendency is firm. Cheese is also steady under a strong statistical position.

MONTREAL.

Provisions.—The provision market is practically where it was a week ago. Pure lard is in good demand with pork moving well. Live hogs are quoted at $6.40 this week, showing an advance.

Butter.—As has been hinted at in these columns of late, the butter market shows an advance in price this week. The supply of butter in store here shows a considerable decrease compared with last year's figures. Demand remains steady. It is expected that the market will continue firm and that higher prices will be reached. Butter is dear in the United States and if the Old Country market goes higher the home prices will surely be raised.

Poultry.—Poultry is one of the prominent lines just now. There is a heavy trade passing with supplies fairly liberal and prices what may be termed moderate when the high figures for other lines are considered. It is difficult to form an idea of what the supply will be around Christmas and New Year's, but it is expected that the market will be up to the average. Just now it is steady and active with prices reasonable.

Provisions.—Trade is on a moderate scale. Lard is moving freely. The present busy baking season helps in the extension of its use, while the high price of butter induced many housewives to substitute it whenever possible for butter. The only change in provision prices this week is a one cent reduction in breakfast bacon. There is a general steady tendency to the heavier lines of pork products.

A week of rather stinted offerings has shaped the price of live hogs upward by 25 cents, present quotations at country points ruling at $6.15.

Eggs.—Some time ago we pointed out what could be expected of the egg market. It will be recalled that we laid emphasis on the smallness of stocks put away during the summer months and the rapidity with which supplies were being cut into. The last week has witnessed the arrival of several cars of United States eggs on this market. While of course storage stocks are not cleaned up here, these recent imports denote the tendency of the market. Storage eggs are generally a cent higher this week while new laid, scarce and in keen request, are selling at a price which certainly puts them in the luxury class. As high as 60 cents is being asked for guaranteed new laids.

Poultry.—It is general belief that on the whole, supplies of poultry for the Xmas season will be ample. At least, it is claimed by more than one house in touch with the situation that such is the case. The amount of poultry coming forward at the present time is small but there are plenty of inquiries, indicating that there must be considerable poultry in the background. It is hinted that perhaps the same holding back of supplies will be carried on as last year, causing a considerable rush to market at the last moment. Some houses are sending out word for shipments to be sent in early because it is not likely anything will be gained by holding off. Considerable supplies are being sent out of Ontario to the West to supply Christmas trade there and of course the market tendency will depend to some extent on the demand from that source and the amount left for the Ontario markets.

Turkeys at any rate will run to small sizes, although otherwise it is said the quality will be good. The high cost of feed will no doubt show itself in general poultry.

There is an easier feeling in fowl and chickens this week, as denoted by some houses. Some buyers of turkeys are offering a slightly higher figure.

MAKE YOUR PLANS EARLY FOR THE NEW YEAR.

If you have some pressing indebtedness which you must wipe out, do this anyway—you can pay the debt with this money as it accumulates. The point is that you will, first, form the most valuable habit any man can form and, second, continue in this work after you are free from the debt.

Deposit the Cash Regularly.

If you are doing $12,000, lay aside $40 to $50 per month. If your business is $20,000, put away $60 to $75. And whatever you start with, keep up that monthly amount, rain or shine, good times and bad. You must make at least 5 per cent. net on your sales, and the surest way to really make that proportion is to pay out that proportion every month in this way. The reason I reduce the proportion on the larger business is because it is relatively harder to make a liberal profit on a big business than on a small one, because you cannot be so close, personally, to the bigger business. But the cash resource of such a reserve will daily make you more able to realize in money the full possibilities of the bigger business, because you will daily become a better manager.

Lastly, do not say that you cannot afford to have any capital lying around at 3 per cent. or 3½ per cent., because you can make much more in your business. Just fix in your mind this idea: "One of the best ways to make money is to KEEP IT." We can talk about what you will best do with it after you have a little of it. I shall be glad to help you any time.

Lastly, please note that every word of this is based on my own, personal experience—so I know just what I am talking about.

The Regal Flour Mills have been incorporated with a capital of five hundred thousand dollars. The head office is in St. Thomas, Ont.

Calgary, Alta., has the prospects of getting a new cereal factory. The Magnetic Wheat Food Co., now operating in Halifax, N.S., are negotiating for a site there.

WHY YOU SHOULD USE "BEACON" BRAND OYSTERS and HADDIES

OUR oysters are the only oysters that are shipped in a new, non-returnable package from the sea-shore to your shop. Quite an improvement on the plan of getting oysters in a can that is returned again and again, and perhaps not properly cleansed—is it not?

Every oyster is fully matured, nice and plump. The flavor is unimpaired by "bleaching" or "watering." Include a package in your next order to us.

AND DON'T FORGET THAT BEACON HADDIE

We have succeeded in getting our curers to produce an extra choice stock. Beautiful thick fish, with just the right amount of smoking to give them a flavor all their own.

The Steady, Increasing Demand for

since it was put upon the market, 16 years ago, is the natural result of the vast benefit it has done thousands, yes, millions of persons in all parts of the world.

Continuous, truthful advertising has pointed out the injury coffee does to many; and an easy, pleasant way to dismiss coffee ills.

People buy Postum and become steady users because they recognize its beneficial effects; and the grocer who supplies the demand enjoys the excellent profit—generally better than on coffee—and the sale of Postum is guaranteed.

Domestic Flour Trade Shows Briskness

Good Volume of Present Business in Flour—Little Buying Ahead—Export Trade Still Slow—Cereals Moving Freely—Interest in Christmas Confectionery—Good Season, Both in High-priced Goods and Children's Favorites—Assortments Sold by Some Dealers.

Domestic trade in flour is on a good scale. Not that there is any abundance of contracts for future needs, for such business is particularly scarce as compared with other years, but in the routine trade that is being transacted for immediate wants. Then with the Christmas baking season in full swing, pastry flour is moving out freely. Export demand for flour continues on the low level reported during the past month. Cereals are selling well, the weather being favorable for their sale.

Weather in Argentine which is having its share in influencing movement of wheat prices is very fickle. However, the reports of damage by rain and frost were apparently taken with a grain of salt by wheat operators. Present reports are of fine weather. Considerable Canadian wheat of the lower grades is being worked off for export.

Although most dealers had orders in ahead for the greater proportion of their Christmas confectionery, "filling in" and "assorting" orders are now coming forward. Christmas is the big season of sale for sweetmeats, not alone in the ordinary lines, but also in the higher priced boxed goods this season perhaps finds the largest sale of any time during year.

The variety of candies which children prefer will be big sellers. Some dealers make a specialty previous to the festive season of making up assortments of candies which retail at different prices from 25 cents as high up as they can sell. Sometimes these are placed only in the ordinary paper bags, while others have special boxes for the purpose.

MONTREAL.

Flour.—There has been no change in the flour market. Demand is steady and prices are in last week's position. The local trade is good, but out of town buyers appear to be supplied for the time being.

Cereals.—A good seasonable demand is felt for rolled oats with the market showing considerable activity. There is no particular change in conditions for the week and prices have a firm tone at present. As is natural to expect, the amount of business passing is quite heavy.

TORONTO.

Flour.—There has been no perceptible change in flour situation in past week. New features are lacking. Manitoba wheat on this market went to 1.08½ on Saturday last, highest figure yet recorded for present crop, but quotations just now tally exactly with those of week ago. Domestic trade is good, the near close of navigation having been responsible for good sales during past couple of weeks.

Ontario wheat is lifeless and is likely to continue so until the break of the new year. Exporters of Ontario flour claim they cannot get orders at figures which will permit a profit, hence export business is practically nil.

Anticipate Big Xmas Fruit Trade

Dealers Expect Festive Season to Produce Large Sales of Fruits—Oranges are Big Leaders—Will be in Abundance for Xmas—Cranberries High in Price and Rather Scarce—Many Dealers Handle Specials at This Time—Potatoes Hold Firmly.

With Christmas only two weeks off, a good deal of attention is being directed to fruits. Retailers have already arranged or are now planning for their Xmas supply. Travelers for the fruit houses are busy throughout the country securing orders for the Christmas needs. Arrangements have been made by some houses for sending heated cars along certain railroad lines, thus giving the retailer delivery of his goods at the freight rate and also making sure that they reach him without any injury by frost. Oranges are the big leaders for the Xmas trade, but Almeria grapes, bananas, grapefruit, apples and cranberries also come in for a good deal of attention. Dealers are anticipating a good volume of Christmas trade.

Oranges will be in good supply for the occasion. Navels are coming along freely and are showing better color. Floridas are plentiful, while Jamaican fruit also adorns the eastern Canadian markets.

Cranberries are already high in price and not particularly plentiful, although the Christmas season always brings a big sale for them.

Many dealers around the festive season make a big specialty of such lines as celery, head lettuce, cucumbers, hot house tomatoes, mushrooms, etc. People like to have something special for the Christmas table.

Potatoes, although without any special features, hold firmly on all Canadian markets.

MONTREAL.

Green Fruits.—An increasing demand for oranges is a feature of the trade. Navels are not plentiful yet and the most of the purchases are being made of Valencias. Apples are steady and in good demand. Cranberries are naturally moving well at this time of the year. The week has not been marked by any special feature.

TORONTO.

Green Fruits. — A moderate routine trade in general lines of fruits is now in evidence. The cold weather is assisting in the sale of lemons.

There have been heavier arrivals of California navel oranges and prices have naturally weakened. Quotations rule this week from $3.25 to $3.75. Jamaicas are offered at $5 per barrel. Oranges are being given considerable attention of late.

Grapefruit is moving out fairly well. California grapes are over and interest is now being directed to Almeria stock. Cranberries are unchanged in price.

Vegetables.—It is now generally conceded that there is no overplus of root productions such as beets, carrots, and onions. The yield of these lines in Ontario was small, having been cut down by the drought. Already prices are quite high and from present indications will be maintained.

Potatoes are in the same boat. While there has been no further change in prices this week, present quotations are well maintained. The colder weather has a tendency to stiffen prices somewhat.

Fish - Oysters

Advent Gives Impetus to Fish Trade

First Special Fish Season Starts off With Good Healthy Stride —Good Season Anticipated—Fish Consumption in Canada has Apparently Been Increasing More Rapidly Than Production— Unusually Stormy Weather Interferes With Nova Scotia Catch.

Fish trade with the opening of Advent has taken on a good brisk stride. This week has brought a good demand for smoked and prepared lines as well as fresh frozen fish and this briskness is expected to continue for the next couple of weeks. Oysters are also moving freely.

A good season is anticipated, although prices are comparatively high. Supply of fish in Canada is apparently about on level with demand, which would indicate that consumption has been increasing more rapidly than production.

Nova Scotia reports unusually stormy weather and the catch of fish has accordingly been small. The receipts of salt codfish in that province have also been rather disappointing.

QUEBEC.

MONTREAL—First week of Advent has been accompanied by brisk business in practically all lines of fish. There has been a big demand for smoked and prepared fish and the trade of past week should continue through next two, and after the new year opens there is expected a seasonable trade of large proportions. The demand for fresh frozen fish, has been heavy and the representative of one firm stated that prospects are brighter than even this year. Prices are comparatively high and consumption of fish appears to have about caught up to production. It was stated that orders for some lines had been turned down because of supply being below the demand. On the whole, however, orders are being well met and the trade is looking forward to a continuation of conditions that promise a better season than last year and it was admittedly a good one. It has been said that the supply of fish in Canada is just about sufficient for demand, which means that its consumption has been increasing more rapidly than production. Oysters have been given a new impetus during the past few days and are going out freely.

ONTARIO.

TORONTO—First week in Advent brought large flood of business to fish dealers, and general satisfaction is expressed at way trade has opened up. Among other things the weather has been favorable to handling fish with least trouble, and this assists a great deal in inducing retail grocers to take up the line. Frozen halibut is big favorite at present time and sales are heavy. Frozen and smoked fish in general are moving freely.

In quotations on oysters, there is a difference in what different firms regard as "selects," "straights" or "standards" as the case may be. This accounts in some instances for differences in price. For straights, one firm quotes $1.75 for 1's, $1.70 for 3's and $1.65 for 5's. Some others quote selects at the same price. This difference in standards is perhaps explainable by the fact that "selects" from one shipper or district may be inferior or superior to "selects" from another shipper or district. Sales in oysters so far this season have been good.

Sale of shell oysters in this market is not large. Three bushel barrels are quoted at $9 to $10.

NOVA SCOTIA.

HALIFAX.—There is not much change in local situation as regards receipts. Unusually stormy weather has prevailed along the coast, and in consequence fishermen have been able to secure little, with exception of some boats on the inshore grounds. Smelts are a little more plentiful and are selling well. The price, however, is high for these fish. These are selling at wholesale for 13 cents per bunch of twelve, and the fish are small.

Dealers are greatly disappointed at receipts of salt codfish. Few fish are coming along. According to advices received here the catch on the Gaspe coast this season is forty per cent. less than the average one, but the fishermen are making up for the shortage in the catch by the abnormally high prices.

Export sales are fairly good, even at high prices ruling. Both Scotland and Norway are said to have contracted for all available supplies, and shortage of French catch has made an exceptionally good demand from the Mediterranean, and there is no doubt but all the available fish in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland will be marketed before new catch is obtained. There is not much doing in pickled fish. Some odd lots of shore herring are arriving and they are selling at fairly good prices. Some large shipments of cured fish are now being made to the foreign markets.

Three vessels loaded with codfish sailed from Lunenburg this week for the West Indies.

The shipments of fresh deciduous fruits from California for 1911, have exceeded those of any previous year in the history of the fruit business.

Methods Used in the Canning of Salmon

Big Change in Canning Methods in Recent Years—Machinery Now Extensively Used—Cleanliness One of the Big Features in the Work—Sanitary Canning Machines Now in Use—How the Salmon is Cooked.

The average grocer sells a good deal of salmon. It is with him a staple, all the-year-round seller. He knows perhaps the different grades from the best sockeys down through the red spring, cohoes and pinks, but perhaps is not so intimately acquainted with the methods especially those adopted recently which are used in canning this article.

Not so many years ago, says one writer, when a nice, juicy salmon started his journey through the average Pacific Coast cannery he was destined to be passed through a good many yellow hands before he finally rested with millions of his fellows in the hold of a lime-juicer headed for the markets of the world.

From the time he left the water he was tossed from one Chink to another, cleaned, cut, packed, steamed, soldered, cooked, soldered again, and then labeled. It took a good many of those deft, clever hands to pack the millions of fish that went every year to the far corners of the world, and the matter of labor was always a big item to the packer.

Birth of the Iron Chink.

Then came the wonderful "Iron Chink" born of the brain of the unfortunate Edmund Augustine Smith, whose tragic death in June, 1909, ended a career which would surely have meant much in labor saving machinery for canneries.

The "Iron Chink" took the fish from the moment they landed in the cannery and delivered them cleaner than any Chinaman ever delivered them, to the cutting knives, the cookers and all the rest of the human machinery.

This was about the last big change in the canneries till a year or so ago, when there was introduced as an experiment several lines of so-called sanitary canning machines. These machines, which had been used with success in many other lines, had never been tried in the salmon canneries, and the result of their trial was watched with a great deal of interest by the big interests of the salmon world.

This year has seen a thorough try-out of this method of canning, and so successful has the experiment proved that many canneries will next year be using the new method of canning that waited before till the plan was more thoroughly tried out.

The new method is simple, yet withal so thoroughly practical that it appeals immediately to the men who are most interested in the big plants.

No Puncturing of Can.

There is no cooking followed by a puncturing of the can, as in the old method, where many deft Chinamen were always busy soldering up the little holes that had been made to let out the steam and heat generated when the cans were sent through the cooker.

In the new system, as soon as the cans are filled, they are sent through what is technically known as the exhauster, a flat, steam-tight box through which they travel very slowly in a temperature of 212 degrees Fahrenheit. This cooks the fish somewhat, and in so doing expands the fish and the air in the cans so that when the cover is placed on immediately upon emerging from the exhauster, there is a tendency to draw the ends of the can inward as the contents cool.

The cans are then placed in racks in the usual method, trundled into steam retorts, where they are cooked for ninety minutes at about 250 degrees Fahrenheit. This completes the process of canning by the new method, a very simple process indeed when one looks back to the time when all this was done by hand and there were solder troughs, testing wheels, gibbering Chinks and waste everywhere.

W E. Sutton, sample room manager of the Parsons, Brown Co., Toronto, met with a painful accident recently, the index finger of his right hand being badly crushed. It was at first thought that amputation would be necessary. However, he was operated on at the General Hospital on Monday, and in place of the crushed bone a piece of ivory was inserted. Latest reports from his surgeon state that he is getting along as well as can be expected.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE

No Weak Link There

No Profits Lost

See how it works, Brother Grocer.

A woman is ready to buy from you 50 bags a year, maybe more.

But she will not purchase the 50 bags unless the last bag be as good as the ones that have gone before.

If the first bag be right—and the second—and the ninth—

She purchases the tenth with confidence.

Your sales keep increasing, you see.

Your profit is continuous—because of Steadfast Quality.

But if the tenth bag be bad, will she purchase the eleventh?

Will you continue filling her flour requirements?

No—your chain of profits snaps at the tenth purchase.

You have profited only on ten bags when you might have profited on the total amount of her yearly purchases.

Don't you see NOW what Uniformity means to flour sales?

If sales are greater than ever, it's because FIVE ROSES flour yields uniform results both in store and kitchen.

Each bag or barrel starts a chain of Permanent Profits.

Five Roses is packed to suit your trade in barrels and halves. Also in bags of 7, 14, 24, 49, and 98 lbs

Daily capacity, 10,500 barrels.

And each sale is a sturdy link, without flaw or weakness.

This also is true, that the constant effort made in the big mills out West to maintain the integrity of FIVE ROSES, assures to YOU permanency of profits.

This is the only flour that is unreservedly guaranteed—

Simply because it needs no guarantee.

Sell quality, Brother Grocer, not in one barrel, or two barrels, but in each and every barrel.

Sell FIVE ROSES—sell it NOW.

Eleventh Hour Christmas Suggestions

Some Plans for Making the Most of Seasonable Lines Next Week—See that Windows, Counters, Advertisements, Show Cards and Price Tickets are Doing Good Selling Work—Lines to Feature—Use Spare Time in Parcelling Goods in Convenient Salable Quantities.

ONLY one more week of Christmas trade! No matter how many "Shop Early" appeals are made by the newspapers and the clergy, it still remains a fact that the great majority of Christmas purchases are crowded into the last week. Each dealer must, therefore, endeavor to get as much of this business as possible. Every means should be utilized to increase sales. When Christmas is over the work of selling Christmas goods will be much more difficult.

In the first place look to the window. Many grocers who have been featuring in the window dried fruits, extracts, plum puddings, mince meat, etc., for past couple of weeks, have yet their real Christmas display to install. Some maintain that a display more than a week old gets dirty. Others claim it becomes so familiar that few will stop to look at it the second week. This will be particularly the case in the smaller centres. See, therefore, that the display is fresh looking and clean. Don't let the dust settle on the prunes or cranberries. Lack of attention in this regard has spoiled many a sale.

Among the goods that should be well up to the front next week are plum puddings, mince meat, extracts, table raisins, oranges, figs, dates, confectionery, all kinds of nuts, cranberries, fancy biscuits, Christmas stockings, crackers, holly, currants, raisins and Malaga grapes. These are the goods which will form the biggest portion of every window, every counter display and every advertisement. They should be introduced to probable customers at every conceivable opportunity.

Special attention should be given to those lines that will be practically unsalable after the holiday season. Stockings and crackers are among these, but as they are easily sold, the dealer should have little trouble in disposing of a fair supply. Overstocking in such cases should, of course, be avoided. Lines such as chocolates, biscuits, table raisins, etc., in special Christmas containers should be moved out early to insure against carry over and possible loss.

In the holiday rush neglect of the children should be avoided. A neat display of stockings, candies or chocolates will always catch their eye and they don't hesitate to call parents' attention to what they have seen in Brown's or Johnson's window. An appeal to children will frequently bring the older folks.

Holiday decorations are essential to giving a Christmas appearance to the store. Dealers, however, should see that old, worn-out decorations are not used. These are often covered with dust and are faded worse than a two-year-old piece of print. Get something new, even if there is not much of it. Dirty decorations are not appreciated by particular customers. Some may even associate them with the store interior and the goods sold.

In the midst of the Christmas rush, keep an eye on the dead-beat with his plausible excuses for not paying cash. Insist on getting the money, its equivalent or know that the purchaser is good for it. One is apt to be a little too lenient with customers at this season.

The Christmas advertising must not be neglected. At this time newspapers advertisements are followed carefully and your appeals, if couched in plain, convincing and attractive language, are bound to produce fruit. Take time to see they are properly written and displayed, and QUOTE PRICES unless you have some good reason for not doing so.

In the majority of cases show cards and price tickets are necessary to obtaining the best results from the window. Particularly is this the case in a district where the people are not any too wealthy. Prices of dried fruits, cranberries, poultry, etc., are desired before people will enter the store. Attractive display cards containing Christmas Greetings, and something of special importance regarding goods for sale, are especially beneficial in attracting attention. When the store staff is rushed, price tickets and show cards frequently make sales themselves.

Every dealer should sell considerable icing sugar during the last week. If you have any spare time, put up a quantity in the different sized parcels which your customers generally ask for.

Have various kinds of nuts arranged in a position convenient to the scales and have a scoop ready for filling them. Filling several pounds by the handful wastes a lot of time. If you have an open ledge behind one of the main counters, arrange the nuts in receptacles there. It not only displays them well but makes them convenient.

Here is a good way to show your oranges. Twist a yard and a half of ordinary hen coop wiring into a cylinder and fasten it in that manner. Stand it on end in the window or store and fill up with oranges. A filler in may be placed in the centre and the oranges piled around it. It then will not require nearly as much fruit as if built solid.

Many dealers find it profitable to take one line each day of the last week and specialize on it. Say, nuts one day, dates the next, figs the next, and so on.

Some grocers find a sale for package chocolates and bon bons only around Christmas time. If this is so in your case and you find a couple of days before Christmas that they are not moving rapidly, give them special attention and try to clear them out. The profit lies in selling the last package of the dozen. A grocer can easily begin a good paying confectionery department by giving some attention to it at this time.

System, if needful at any time, is necessary in the delivery of goods during the Christmas rush. See that each customer gets the goods she has ordered, and that she gets them promptly.

USED THE WRONG COUPON.

A number of readers of The Canadian Grocer have made an error in writing to the Ontario Lantern and Lamp Co., of Hamilton, asking for calendar mentioned in advertisements of this company in our paper. The words "Send coupon for calendar," which appeared in a number of their ads., were misconstrued. Many simply cut the entire advertisement out of The Grocer, mailed it to Hamilton and asked for calendars. The coupon referred to, however, is to be found only in the globe of the company's Banner lantern and a calendar is forwarded on receipt of this. It is in the form of a post card addressed to the company.

CHRISTMAS PRICES AT BARKERS.—This is Barkers' thirteenth Xmas announcement to their customers in Pictou county, and, although 13 is considered an unlucky number, we are conceited enough to think that it is not going to work any charms against Barkers making this Xmas trade the largest they ever had in our New Glasgow and Stellarton branches. Our purchases this year, to keep pace with our rapidly growing business, have been larger than ever, and although in many cases market prices are higher than former years, we are giving our customers Xmas goods at practically the same price as in the past. We count on making our profit on the old plan. Quick sales and small profits and no book debts. Read the prices and then judge for yourself.—The 2 Barkers, New Glasgow, N.S.

Enclose sufficient money to pay cost of hamper and freight charges if it is intended as a present. Balance of money, if any, will be promptly refunded.—Hudson's Bay Co., Calgary, Alta.

A BREAKFAST FOOD WINDOW.

Montreal, Dec. 15.—In displaying a breakfast food, John Robertson & Son, St. Catherine St. W., recently devoted the central part of the arrangement to an appeal to the palate. One of the boxes was opened and part of the food spread over another box. Partly buried in the food was a banana, a halved orange and a section of the orange. This little touch emphasized the tastiness of the food, and certainly lent it value the display would not otherwise have had

In another section of the window a display of marmalade attracted attention through a show card inscribed as follows: "Change from the ordinary orange marmalade. Ten varieties and all tasty and delicious." The price was given, and the whole display sent the observer away with the feeling that a change would be desired.

The tobacco crop of Essex, Ont., this season is estimated at 11,000,000 pounds.

Wide Awake Methods in Retailing

Montreal Dealer Making Feature of Xmas Stockings—New Fixtures Going Into Battleford Store—Early Xmas Shopping Campaign.

Selling Xmas Stockings.

Montreal, Dec. 14—Christmas stockings and crackers are a feature in the Christmas trade of many grocers. One local grocer who has made it a feature for many years stated recently that formerly prices for stockings ran from about fifty cents to eight dollars; this year ten dollars is his limit but they are for stockings that are exceptions, indeed. Another noticeable feature is that people who formerly bought 75 cent stockings for their children now pay two and three dollars.

No better indication could be found to show that the people are prosperous and as a whole are earning more money, any way. The grocer is the legitimate retailer of crackers and the Christmas stocking. He should see to a good stock.

Fixtures in Mission Styles.

Battleford, Sask., Dec. 14.—Burlingham & Speers are becoming settled in their handsome new store, which, with modern fixtures installed, is one of the most up-to-date stores west of Winnipeg. The fixtures are all in mission effect including the office enclosure, which is in the centre of the building. The new premises reflect credit on the enterprise of the proprietors, as well as on the town.

Campaign on Early Shopping.

St. John, N.B., Dec. 14.—A campaign which is expected to prove of immense benefit to the grocer as well as to merchants in other lines of business has been inaugurated in this city, for the object of inducing the public to make their Christmas purchases early. The press has taken up the matter editorially, and will lend every possible assistance to the movement which tends to be very successful, as general sympathy is expressed by the people.

The fact that the "last-minute-purchasers" do not feel always satisfied with the results of their investments is an argument which is being used quite generally, and besides this an appeal is made on behalf of the over-worked clerk, who can wait upon customers more readily if the rush is eased by their buying goods early. Such warnings as "Christmas is already only two weeks away" or "twenty days distant" whichever the case may be," with the query "Have you made your purchases yet? If not, why not?" are expected to lend assistance to the movement, and promote further interest.

Tell Public of Coffee Advance.

Montreal, Dec. 14.—Under the heading "Fraser's special coffee now 30c lb." the following appeared in the advertisement of Fraser, Viger & Co. "Owing to the great increase in the price of coffee we have been reluctantly compelled to raise the price of our special blend to 30c per lb. We thought it better to do this than change the quality, and just as soon as the coffee market becomes easier we will reduce the price again. Our other coffees will be at the same price as before."

Show Case Sells Gum.

Montreal, Dec. 14.—A special show case for the display of gum has proven a good investment to a local grocer whose store management shows signs of good ideas. He obtained a small show case just large enough in fact to allow a display of gum. It was about two feet long, one and a half feet wide and about a foot high. He placed this display on his main counter near the front of the store and found that it not only helped along the sales of gum, but it kept it in good condition.

Much has been said about the effect of a good display, and in this case a little extra care assisted materially in selling an article that is sold in every grocery store but which in many cases fails to receive the attention that is its due.

Featuring Biscuits.

Hamilton, Ont., Dec. 15.—John Carpenter, grocer, 10 Market Square, has been making a specialty of fancy biscuits of late and with this in view has a display of them in a prominent part of his store. Ten different kinds are shown in the original boxes, open to public view. A show card on each box announces to the prospective buyer the name of that particular kind as well as the price. The results of this display with goods marked in plain figures have been good.

Retailer Issues Catalogue.

Summerside, P.E.I., Dec. 14.—A special grocery caralogue has been issued by R. T. Holman, Limited, which contains the latest market prices on groceries. This firm is among the more progressive, importing many lines of groceries themselves, and making a specialty of handling high class goods.

Free delivery of goods is among the inducements to deal at the store as well as guaranteed satisfaction to each and every customer.

Christmas Tree Ornaments.

St. John, N.B., Dec. 14.—An interesting side-line to add to the bulk of Christmas trade is being carried by a local grocer who has stocked a large supply of Christmas tree ornaments in his store, expecting as he says himself, "to make an honest dollar thereby." Laced stockings, containing a variety of childly fancies, candles, and their holders, ornamental articles of various shapes and colors, tinsel, pop-corn strings, and other such articles used in decorating the festive tree have been added to his stock, and are given a prominent place at one side, not far from his assortment of fancy boxes of chocolates and candies for the holiday trade.

He expects he will not have any left by Christmas Eve, and although they are somewhat foreign to the grocery trade, he sees no reason why he should not handle them, if he found it profitable; for if it came to a question of argument on this point, there were many articles now carried by grocers which people a few years ago would never have looked for in a store where foodstuffs are the essential idea.

Match Box Novelty.

Proton, Ont., Dec. 14.—Louis Becker, general merchant of this town some time ago distributed to his customers an advertising novelty in the form of a fancy tin match box. In it the ordinary five-cent box of match could be placed, an opening at the bottom allowing them to be taken out as required. On the front was the inscription, "This will hold your matches. Our prices will hold your trade." The good point about such a gift is that it remains in the house for many years, thus increasing its advertising value over many other advertising novelties.

"Do you drink coffee?" asked the doctor of an aged patient.

"Yes," was the reply.

"Coffee," continued the M.D., "is a slow poison."

"Yes, very slow," replied the old man, "I have taken it daily for nearly eighty years."

HOW WOULD YOU MIX ASSORTED NUTS?

Regina Reader Raises Interesting Point—Wants to Know if he Should Use More of the Cheaper Varieties.

Editor, Canadian Grocer:—What does assorted nuts mean? I sell nuts assorted at 25 cents per pound. Some cost me considerably more than others. In filling them up, I put in more of the cheaper ones. Is there anything wrong with this practice?

Regina, Sask. READER.

Editorial Note.—The question our correspondent has brought out is a rather delicate one inasmuch as there are different ways of looking at the problem. More so is this the case in the fact that nuts vary in cost. Were it not so it would seem they could be mixed indifferently and there would be no feeling that the customer was not getting exactly a fair deal.

"There would be nothing wrong with mixing nuts so as to make it favorable to yourself," states one dealer, "if the customer were satisfied." How is the grocer to tell whether the customer is satisfied? If he does not specify definitely what quantity of each he wishes, is it to be taken for granted that he will be satisfied with them mixed as the grocer sees fit providing the proper weight is given?

Has the customer the right to say how he wishes them mixed? For instance, supposing he wished the greater quantity of the high priced ones, which brings us back to the question "What does assorted nuts mean?"

Webster does not make the point exactly clear. He defines an assortment as "a number of things of the same kind varied in size, color, quality, price, form or the like to suit the market, the wants of the people or various purposes."

It is contended by some that there should be an equal quantity of each kind, but Webster's definition says nothing to this effect.

One dealer thinks he has a solution for the problem. "I assort them in the first place and offer the assortment as I make it at 25 cents per pound. When a customer orders a pound I fill it up from the assortment and I do not think there is any feeling that I am imposing on the customer."

But then again supposing a customer did not see them but ordered them by phone? The problem is becoming more complex and other opinions would be appreciated.

OUR CHRISTMAS COMPETITIONS.

Before you remove your Christmas window after next week, get it photographed and enter it in The Canadian Grocer's Christmas Window Competition. See that a good photograph is obtained—one with as little reflection as possible. To secure a photograph that will show up the detail, the photographer should not stand too far distant. The use of a sheet spread in the air behind the camera will tend to prevent reflection. If the buildings, trees, etc., across the street are not too high, good results can invariably be obtained.

For our ad-writing contest, send us one or more of your best Christmas advertisements. Clip them carefully from the newspaper and mail them to us.

Prizes amounting to $25—distributed as per advertisement on another page of this issue—will be given.

Give us descriptions of windows and your ideas on newspaper advertising, and see that your entries are mailed before the last day of the year.

WESTERN CROP SITUATION.

The weather man is endeavoring to at least make amends for the serious predicament in which he has placed the farmers of Western Canada through his misbehaviour during the harvesting and threashing seasons, by completely reversing conditions. In former years mild weather during the month of September and earlier part of October, with colder weather during the latter part of November and December, has been the rule. This year, however, as stated above, conditions are reversed, and during October and November, when threshing should have been at its height, snow storms with a temperature ranging from zero to 40 below prevailed.

During the last three weeks, however, some of the most enjoyable weather has been in existence, and with a temperature ranging from 10 to 35 degrees above zero, the farmer has been able to in some way thresh his grain which should have been marketed at least six or seven weeks ago. According to official returns, there has been an increase in the number of cars of grain this year which have been inspected from Sept. 1 up to and including Nov. 30, on each line. The figures on the various lines are :—

C.P.R., 32,933 cars ; C.N.R., 19,844 cars ; G.T.P., 5,054 ; and the G.N.R., 1,825. This makes a total of 59,655 cars. When these figures are compared with the number of cars inspected last year during the same period, they show an increase of 2,195 cars for the C.P.R., 4,532 for the C.N.R., 1,636 for the G.T.P., and 1,059 for the G.N.R.

In spite of this increase, however, complaints are being received by banks and wholesale institutions from all quarters of the west that not only can the grain not be threshed, but owing to the shortage of cars, the farmers are unable to market it, and the result is that collections have been poor, and all institutions are making arrangements to carry over a lot of farmers' paper for at least three or four months.

DEALERS SELECTING THE BRANDS.

Evidences of the confidence placed in the "family grocer" by the housewife are by no means few and far between. In every good Canadian store, the dealer is every day using his selling power and his knowledge of goods, to supply the desire of his patrons.

Here is another instance : A woman customer who had asked for and bought a certain brand of vinegar, discovered she didn't like it. Next time she bought vinegar she pointed this out to the dealer. At the same time she asked him to select for her what he considered the best. He promptly took a bottle from the shelf, pointed out the reputation of the manufacturers and suggested that this brand be given a trial. The sale was of course at once made.

Once a dealer gets the confidence of a customer by playing fair and giving the right goods, he is in a position to suggest other goods that he knows will give the best of satisfaction. He is thus enabled to raise the standard of goods sold, and to sell goods not actually asked for.

GROCERS SHOULD PUSH OYSTERS.

While individual dealers in oysters report they are selling a larger quantity each year, there is a doubt in the minds of some if the consumption of oysters per capita is increasing, or even if it is as large as in past years. That is, there is a feeling that, unlike many other articles of food, the consumption of oysters has not kept pace with the increase in population.

If this be true, what is the reason? It cannot be that they lack any qualities of a good food. They are both delicious to the taste and nutritious, while authorities declare they are easily digested, in fact nearly self digestive.

It is a fact that the majority of grocers do not give them the attention they should. One reason for this is that for many years the selling of oysters was disappointing to the retail trade. That was during the "water" era. Oysters were watered more than they should have been to compete with the other fellow who was doing the same thing. Customers were dissatisfied, and, believing they were not being accorded a fair deal, they quit buying oysters.

This objection has been overcome in recent years by the selling of solid meat oysters. However, the public won back to its normal confidence has not been as yet state, and the grocers themselves have not taken up the sale of oysters with the vim they deserve.

By proper attention they can be worked into a highly profitable line.

GET AFTER PROSPECTIVE ALDERMEN.

Nomination day for many Canadian municipal elections will soon be here. A week later the elections themselves will be on.

Retail dealers everywhere should take advantage of this. In most urban communities the merchants have some principle to contend for, and their rights can only be secured through town or city council legislation.

Prospective mayors and aldermen should be canvassed thoroughly to get their opinions on important trade questions. Tell them the difficulties merchants are under in competition with transient traders who pay no taxes. There are also the questions of over-hanging signs, displaying fruits over the sidewalks, methods of taxation, street cleaning and watering, etc. Secure an expression of opinion from them, and after they are elected see that the rights of the merchant are brought before the council and that the co-operation of these men is obtained.

Before the election is the time to get in the good work.

A DISHONEST PRACTICE.

It seems almost unnecessary to bring up in these columns the question of the retailer playing fair with the manufacturer, but representatives of one large firm have found some grocers playing an old trick that is dishonest, and is in the end bound to prove unprofitable. Just as an example, some grocers have purchased mincemeat in pails, and when the first supply was exhausted, they refilled them with an article that they had mixed together themselves, or of an inferior quality bought elsewhere.

Grocers who stoop to such principles are not of the present day type. It is likewise felt that no reader of these columns would adopt such a plan, for the reason that he is not only hurting the manufacturer, but his actions are bound to reflect upon his own trade. Grocers of to-day aim to please their customers, and quality is their watchword, knowing that it is not only profitable for the time being, but that it is the surest method of building up a larger clientele.

Mincemeat is only one article mentioned as an example. Pickles admit the same opportunities to those who will stoop to using them, and there are numerous other articles that might be mentioned. On the whole, it is safe to say, that the Canadian trade knows very little of this style of doing business, and manufacturers themselves admit that those who have been caught in the act, would not be considered even an average grocer. Their very actions bespeak their standing.

THE EXPERIENCE OF 1911.

Some of the market changes during the past year afford food for reflection now that the grocer is practically prepared for the 1912 trade.

It will be remembered that late last spring evaporated peaches sold as high as seventeen cents; that apricots brought even twenty-two cents; that large prunes brought from seventeen to eighteen cents; that evaporated apples sold around fifteen cents and higher, and that, generally speaking, dried fruits showed a bare market with high prices.

For at least two months there were few, if any, Valencia raisins, and some houses had none to offer. Likewise prunes were at a premium and as supplies approached the point of exhaustion, prices soared in proportion.

These conditions should be taken into consideration now while the grocer is wondering whether he has a sufficient supply or not, and is following the market reports for guidance. Some prices even at this early stage are not far from the quotations that ruled six months ago.

In canned goods the situation showed a marked similarity. Tomatoes went to $1.65. Compare this with the present price and form an opinion as to what they will be quoted at six months hence. Peas brought $1.35. This year's crop was extremely meagre. Already European peas have been advanced and the opening prices for Canadian peas have been left behind.

Canned fruits, such as strawberries, raspberries, etc., were a short pack; the supply of jams is reported none too plentiful, and the first strawberries are seven months in the future.

Individual grocers have their own business methods, but just a reminder of the experience of the past year may be of service to those who have not thought about the quantity of their supplies by the time the violets come again with the first signs of spring.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The merchant must get away from the idea that methods used years ago cannot be improved upon.

Disputes between clerk and customer regarding the denomination of a bill tendered in payment of goods is not an uncommon thing. Sometimes it results in loss to the dealer, and even if the matter is finally smoothed out, the customer generally leaves with something of a hard feeling towards the store. Calling out the denomination of a bill the moment it is tendered in a solution of the problem.

A Financial Statement in the Limelight

Retailer Reviews Statement of Expenses—Not Making Enough Money, and Desires to Know the Reason—His Figures Analyzed—Paying Too Much for Wages.

*By Henry Johnson, Jr.

Here is a frank statement. It is one I am proud to get, for it shows I have this man's confidence. As we are approaching the time for annual inventories and statements generally, I hope to have many more of these to review. They are the best kind of stuff, too; so I trust my readers will send them in liberally. Remember, I shall rigidly protect your confidence; your figures, facts and name will all be so disguised that people in your own town would not recognize where the matter originated.

Henry Johnson, Jr., Canadian Grocer :—

Dear Sir :—While I have been a constant reader of The Grocer for several years, this will be my first addition to its columns, and if you decide to use this communication, I assure you I shall appreciate any assistance you may be able to give me in the matters touched upon.

I carry a stock of groceries and general merchandise. Stock and fixtures on July 1 last amounted to $3,497.07 (fixtures invoicing $1,247.32, taken at inside figures.) Began business six years ago with every dollar borrowed and no surplus cash with which to carry accounts. At time of purchase, stock amounted to $1,867; fixtures to $733. Sundry further purchases of up-to-date appliances have swelled the value of fixtures to figure now given above. To-day, in addition to the increase of $897 in stock, I had, on July 1, $1,926.82 in accounts, of which there is perhaps $300 doubtful and worthless. On July 1 I owed $2,200 borrowed money and $1,376.87 for goods. Had $244.89 cash in bank.

Expenses are as follows:

Clerk hire, average per month	$ 62.00
Delivery, on co-operative basis	12.00
Rent	27.50
Light and telephones, per month	7.50
Fuel and ice, average for year, per month	10.38
Advertising	6.23
Interest	11.00
Insurance	2.93
Taxes	2.38
Allowance to myself	75.00
Miscellaneous	2.90
Total expenses for the month	$219.82

Sales 1910-11 were $15,660.44, which will look small to you for the capital invested; but I am satisfied they come very near to being the largest of any store here. One difficulty is, that with only 2,100 population, there are fourteen grocery stories and no factories or mines to draw from. This is a farm country and trade is largely with farmers. However, it seems to me that I am not making much gain, even considering the amount of business I am doing, for we get a good margin on our groceries and I have some other lines which pay still larger profits. On groceries, I try to figure on the safe side of 20 per cent. on selling price. On sugar there are times when profit will not run over 10 per cent., but at other times it will more than go 20 per cent.

I have tested my help until I feel sure of their honesty; I use up-to-date methods of charging goods; I have the most improved register made; I keep records of everything right up to the scratch. What I want to know is: What is the matter with me that I cannot make more money? I cannot do on less help, and I certainly get it cheaply enough. We all do our best to get business, but it seems we can get so far and no further, either in sales or profits. After reading of the success of some other grocers, I wonder if I have missed my calling. Can you see where I am lame?

Very truly yours,
A—— K—— T——.

Fixture Investment Increase.

My friend's statement is very clear except in only one place. He says he has increased his stock $897, whereas he has increased stock only $382.75; he has increased his fixture investment the remaining $514.32. The total is the same but the nature of the two assets is very different. He bought a business for $2,600 and owed $2,600 on it, with no surplus with which to turn around. To-day he has $5,368.78 and owes $3,576.87, showing net worth of $1,791.91. This shows earnings of only $298.65 per annum—seemingly very small. Yet it may be only fair to consider that little was probably made the first year and probably only a little more the second year, and if we remember that for the last year and probably for some time previously he has had a personal salary of $75 per month, things may look brighter. The start was wrong, probably because he had little if any experience in retail merchandising, and the wrong start, coupled with such inexperience, has been hard to make head against.

I may say that interest, while seemingly a small consideration and often so considered, is a factor of importance fully as much because of the moral effect on the worker as because of the draft on his purse. To be in debt is to be in bondage to another. It is justifiable for a short time in certain circumstances; but absolute independence in your own possessions should be striven for even at some seeming sacrifice of material things in some other direction.

Close Study of the Figures.

Let us see what should be the proper gross earnings on last year's business. In making the computation I shall not figure on any margin greater than will suffice to give use an average of 20 per cent.; for I am sure my friend has made some mistake in his sugar figures.

Business done was $15,660.44—call it $15,600. That was, of course, the amount of goods sold. If margin had been computed on the selling end then the gross return should have been $3,120. Expenses of $219.82 per month figure up to $2,637.84 per year. We should therefore have $482.16—say $500 net to add to our final profit account. This will show that we are fully $200 behind in our final results, and it is up to us to find wherein the discrepancy lies. For there is a discrepancy all right. All those figures cannot be made to jibe. We are not making 20 per cent. gross; or, having made it, we are losing it somewhere; for it is certain we have not got it now.

Wages Percentage Too High.

The overturn of the investment three times in a year, considering the general character of the stock, is not, perhaps, so bad as my correspondent apprehends; but the wages expense is, on the theoretical basis, too high by a good deal. The ideal is 6½ per cent., and 7½ per cent. is about the limit of safety in this connection. Taking the higher ratio, we are still spending $618 too much every year. Looking at this feature closely to forestall the suggestion that I am drawing the lines too taunt, I shall ask my friend what he would do if he had to pay the entire expense of his deliveries—if there were no co-operative delivery system in his town.

Is it possible that my friend takes too much time for his up-to-date accounting methods and has to pay others to look after his trade? Likely enough he does not; but I am hunting for the cause of his failure to make money. It is often the case where a man makes a specialty of doing things just right, according to some system, that the system swallows up the man and his business with him. I can only say now that he must manage to find the leakage; and I urge him to note that a possible saving, even if only theoretically arrived at, of $600 on expenses, and the proper theoretical increase in his net earnings of upwards of $200 per annum, together constitute something well worth working for.

If in writing what I have said, I have suggested any further points not now covered by my correspondent, I hope he will write me again and let us discuss further. Something is wrong. It might not be wrong everywhere, but it is obviously wrong where that man does business. Let us together try to find the way out of the trouble.

Error Helped to Raise Standard of Meat Sauce

A merchant in a country town tells how by receiving a higher quality of goods than he desired, by mistake, he raised the standard of meat sauce sold and also was enabled to build up a much larger trade in this line than he previously had.

He had been selling a meat sauce that retailed at 10 cents. He had a very small trade for it. In ordering a supply by mail he neglected to state the kind he wished. The wholesale house sent him one that sold at 25 cents.

He was annoyed at first because of the mistake but he knew it was his own fault for not giving definite instructions..

"If it had been a mistake of the wholesale house," he said, "I would probably have sent it back at their expense but being myself to blame, I decided to try to sell it. I knew that it must be much superior to the cheaper article, so I decided to try it myself. I was extremely well pleased with it, and became quite enthusiastic in telling customers about its superior quality. The result was that the first week I sold twice as much of the expensive sauce than I generally did of the cheaper. The best part was that customers came back again for it.

"This goes to show that there are instances where mistakes work in our favor."

Planning a General Merchant's Store

Reader of The Grocer Requests Information on Providing for Various Departments—Delivery Room With Side Entrance—Shelving for Reserve Stock.

Editor Canadian Grocer:—In recent issue of your much valued paper I noticed an outline of grocery and meat store. I am desirous of obtaining a most up-to-date plan for a new store 20 ft. x 60 ft. inside measurement, with storage and unpacking room at back 10 ft. x 20 ft, one storey addition. I would require about 30 feet of shelving for groceries, 30 feet for boots and shoes, 20 ft. for dry goods, 10 for hardware, 10 for crockery, and about 20 for reserve stock. I would like side door for delivery.

G. NORMAN WILLETS.

Suggestion for Arranging Departments in a General Store.

Editorial Note. — The accompanying illustration may be of come benefit to Mr. Willets. With such a narrow plan to work on, it is not easy to suggest much out of the ordinary square plan of arranging the various departments.

As the grocery and dry goods departments are probably the most important, they are placed near the door, the grocery on the right and dry goods on the left. With the store proper 60 feet long, 30 ft. of display shelf is left for groceries. Allowing 4 feet for the window, this would leave 10 feet to crockery, 10 to hardware and 6 for the side delivery room indicated in the illustration.

On the left of the illustration 30 feet is allowed for dry goods and 30 for boots and shoes. As only 20 is required for the former, allowing 4 ft. for the window, 6 ft. at the end of the boot and shoe shelf can be used for reserve stock which, together with 12 ft. at the back, will fill the requirement of 20 ft. for reserve stock.

An office situated as indicated with glass front will be convenient to all departments. The door would, of course, go in the rear.

An unpacking room 10 x 10 occupies half the addition. The door marked is for receiving goods for stock. The storage room beside it is the same size. The delivery room may, of course, be located on the left hand side at end of boot and show counter if the street or lane is at that side.

N.B.—Some of The Grocer readers who have solved a similar problem may be able to give us further suggestions. These would be appreciated.

TO COMBAT STALE EGGS.

Another effort will be made by Toronto produce dealers to secure some legislation by amendment to the pure food laws that will ensure them against the dishonesty of those farmers who send stale eggs to market. The high price of the new laids is tempting farmers to mix in the stale ones. The Board of Trade will assist in the work.

The Quaker Oats Co., Peterboro, Ont., have instituted a window dressing competition among the retail grocery trade of Canada. The contest closes on Feb. 5, 1912.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Editor Canadian Grocer.—We regret to notice that you have found it necessary in your editorial columns of Dec. 1, to make some disparaging remarks about certain canners. While your article is general, at the same time, you must appreciate that a large number of people who are not familiar with the canning industry will draw the inference that your reference has something to do with our company. We defy anyone to show a single instance where we have not lived up to our contracts, and it has always been one of our strong talking points with purchasers of our goods, viz., we give a guarantee which cannot be obtained to the same extent elsewhere.

We may say that last year in order to fill our orders up to our percentage deliveries of peas and tomatoes, we actually imported peas and tomatoes from the United States at an additional cost to us of in the neighborhood $15,000 to $20,000. Moreover, occupying the strong financial position that we do, you may rest assured that no dealer, who has a contract with us would allow us to repudiate same, even if we were disposed to do so, and our advice to all buyers is: see that your contract is what you think it is, and more important, make sure that you are dealing with a financially responsible firm, and and then you can enforce by recourse to law in case same is not being carried out in accordance with its terms.

For the sake of our reputation, we hope that you will give this letter as equally a prominent place as your editorial.

W.R.D.—E.F.

DOMINION CANNERS, LIMITED

Editorial Note.—In the editorial mentioned, The Grocer referred to some canners not delivering all goods promised, but of course this did not apply to those who make it a point to fulfill their contracts even at great expense. Wholesale and retail dealers are no doubt well acquainted with the latter.

Editor Canadian Grocer:—When some of the large milling companies will sell and ship a few hundred of flour and feed to farmers, mechanics and others not in business, what can you expect from the other wholesale dealers? The wholesale grocers are not the only ones guilty of encroaching on the poor retailer. We have cases of the sort here, but we simply cut out their line of flour. It would be harder to do this with the wholesale grocer, he handling the same kinds as all the other wholesale grocers. Your reference to these matters, however, in The Grocer, I am sure, will have good effect and set them thinking.

A GROCER READER.

COOKING BY PAPER BAG MAKING PROGRESS

This New Method Creating Great Deal of Interest—Aim is to Preserve Flavors in Cooking—Retail Dealers Should Investigate.

Paper bag cookery is a new idea in modern cuisine, and from all reports it is worthy of the attention it has received. It has established itself in England, the land of good cooks, and it has been in Canada now for a considerable time.

The principle is simple, even to the average mind. It has always been felt that much of the nourishment in meats, etc., is lost in the process of cooking. About noontime the kitchen and often other rooms in the house is filled with the odor of roasting meats, boiling vegetables, etc. It is generally pleasant to the sense of smell, but it has been felt that a portion of the best part of the food is thus wasted.

Flavors are Preserved.

By the new idea the food is placed in a paper bag of special material of unquestioned purity. It is sealed up and put in the oven. There are no essences or flavors lost in the process of cooking, and the food is said to have a delectable taste.

The new method of cooking promises to become popular, as a great deal of interest has been taken in it. Retail dealers should make it a point to enquire into this system, as no doubt the paper bag could be readily sold at the present time. At any rate, a display in a retail store will create a good deal of interest and should be profitable from an advertising standpoint.

STANDARD WEIGHT FOR POTATOES.

Senate Have Passed Bill Making it 80 Pounds—Not Yet Through House of Commons.

There seems to be difference of opinion existing as to the standard weight of a bag of potatoes. The Grocer has received several inquiries recently and has heard opinions expressed at various association meetings, but no one appeared to understand definitely what had been done by the last parliament regarding the matter. Some have said the standard weight is still 90 lbs., others 80 lbs., the latter claiming that legislation was put through during the summer session of parliament at Ottawa, making 80 lbs. the legal standard weight.

The Grocer has taken the matter up with the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, and has received the following reply:

Editor Canadian Grocer. — A bill dealing with all vegetables was introduced last session and passed the Senate but did not get through the House of Commons prior to dissolution. This Bill placed the weight of a bag of potatoes at 80 lbs.

It is altogether likely that it will be re-introduced this session.

Dec. 9, '11.

F. C. T. O'HARA,
Deputy Minister
Trade and Commerce.

The chief reasons for requesting the 80-lb. standard were that the 90-lb. bag was considered too heavy for handling by boys and old men and that the ordinary grain bag was often too small to hold 90 lbs.

MAJORITY FAVORED CLOSING.

But Prospects for the Wednesday Half-Holiday the Year Round Not Bright at Present.

Hamilton, Ont., Dec. 14.—While a majority of retail grocers voted in favor of Wednesday afternoon closing all the year round, yet it is not likely this will come into effect for a time at least.

At the last regular meeting of the Grocers' Association the returns of the voting on this question were received. For Wednesday afternoon closing there were 109 and against 63. The association, however, felt that the sentiment was not strong enough, and that a success could not be made of the movement against the active opposition of of even sixty-three grocers.

The association will endeavor to have the city hall authorities sprinkle sand on the asphalt pavements of the market, because of the danger the slippery surface is to horses.

The annual grant of $10 was made to each of nine charitable institutions for Christmas.

At the January meeting the annual election of officers will be held.

Donald McLean, corner McCaul and Baldwin streets, Toronto, ex-president Toronto Retail Grocers' Association, has opened a grocery business at 299 Roncesvalles avenue.

In some parts of the United States it is being urged that the term "canned foods" be used instead of "canned goods."

New Prices on Canned Poultry, Etc.

Higher Than Last Year's—Cause Claimed to be High Price that had to be Paid for Poultry—Short Deliveries — Brazil Nuts Increase in Value—Sugar Continues in the Process of Readjustment—Brussels Convention Still in Conference—Cocoa and Chocolate Reduced in Montreal—Scarcity of Shelled Walnuts—Syrup Down 10c.—Case in Winnipeg.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

POINTERS:—

Peels.—Further advances.

Shelled Walnuts—Temporarily scarce.

Canned Chicken, etc.—New prices.

Cocoa—Down 2c per lb.

Chocolate—Down 2c per lb.

Montreal, Dec. 14.—The near approach of Christmas season finds retailers particularly busy. Jobbers are receiving for most part only sorting up orders for those lines that are being exhausted or give promise of running short before bulk of the demand has passed. There are some, too, who wait until last moment for supplies, but it is generally conceded that but short end orders will be received until after the first of the year. However, the wholesale trade is busy, and it is stated that the heavy business that made November a record month is being felt right up to the present.

In nuts there is a temporary scarcity of shelled walnuts. The first supply has been exhausted and, while fresh goods are on the way, there has been nothing offering for the run that has been felt in this line. The market is firm. Brazil nuts are higher, as was anticipated in last week's issue.

New prices on boneless chicken, turkey and duck are now quoted as also on soups.

SUGAR.—In local circles sugar is expected to continue the movement it began last week. The demand is only of hand-to-mouth character, due to the season, in part, and to the expected decline of price. Staples are receiving but scant attention just now, and sugar is no exception.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.—A good demand for syrups has been felt of late. Molasses are steady and firm. Sales have been good, the supply is not as heavy as usual, and the market is considered firm. New crop stock is hardly expected before the opening of navigation. Tendency is turning toward a firmer market under present conditions.

DRIED FRUITS.—The currant market has been referred to as being firm for some time, and it is still steady, and if anything, the price is likely to be higher. This week the price quoted from Greece was 26s., a fact that points to the firmness that may be looked for. While the future is always doubtful, still currants look strong now, and it must be remembered that the season of high demand will soon be passing, although there is a steady demand through the winter months. Currants are considered strong, however, and should be well considered. Old freshly seeded raisins, fancy, are offered at 9½ cents, and old choice seeded in 1 lb. packages at 8½ cents. Evaporated apples are a little easier in price, and are now quoted as low as 9½ cents.

NUTS.—The advance of three cents a pound referred to in last week's reference to Brazil nuts has been carried out by jobbers, and the quotation for finest stock runs as high as 22 cents. Shelled walnuts are scarce for the time being, and those who are short are unable to secure supplies in the city, according to one authority. The first shipment is done, and new supplies have not yet been received. This should be relieved at any time, however, as the stock is on the way. Sale of nuts has been heavy, and retailers will likely have but little left over when January comes.

TEAS.—The Japan tea market remains quite active and firm, owing to shortness of stocks in first brands. There has been a brisk demand for Japans of all grades since the season opened. The absence of coloring matters in these teas has probably had a good deal to do with this unusual activity at this particular period.

The price of medium Japan teas has been advanced two cents a pound by some of the trade. This particular line is cleaned out entirely, according to reports, and the fact remains that all lines of Japans are decidedly light in quantity.

Canned Goods.

MONTREAL.—One new fact to be reported in this market this week is the announcement of canners' prices on boneless chicken, turkey and duck and also the prices for chicken and tomato soup. One jobber remarked that as usual he did not think there would be a full delivery of orders. Demand for canned goods is only normal just now. It would be interesting to know with the beginning of the year just where the jobbers stand as to supplies of canned goods for the coming year in comparison to their supply at this time last year. Certain lines are running short and others are exhausted according to some of the trade and the winter is only commencing.

TORONTO.—New prices on canned poultry and soups are announced this week and show a higher level than has existed during past year. Canned boneless chicken, turkey and duck are quoted at $4.50 per dozen as against last year's price of $4, while soups are placed at $2.25 for 2's and $1.75 for 1's as against $1.90 and $1.40, respectively, last year. The high cost of poultry is given as the cause of the increase. Then again wholesalers will only receive a percentage of initial orders, something not altogether new in a number of lines of canned goods in recent years. One jobber stated that the delivery of soups would run from 35 to 45 per cent. and that of poultry close on 75 per cent., which it might be stated is larger than last year's delivery.

There is no special briskness in canned goods just now. Naturally the Christmas trade brings a tinge of quietness. Values, however, are all well maintained.

Toronto, Dec. 14.—There is not the same briskness present in wholesale circles this week. The jobber has had his big day and now it is the retailer's turn. "The volume of orders is smaller," said one wholesaler, "but volume of work and worry shows no decrease. Sorting orders give more trouble to the volume of business. Nevertheless they are welcome. The last month and a half has been exceptionally good and we want to keep up the record."

Country travelers will holiday from Christmas to New Year's as usual. Most of them will work up to within a few days of Christmas, but in nearby territory that will allow shipment of goods in time to catch the last of the holiday trade.

Perhaps the most important point in the sugar market is that the Brussels convention is still in conference, the question which is puzzling them being how to retain England in the convention after 1913, and still not allow Russia to export the amount of sugar England demands. If England's demands are agreed to, there will be a superabundance of sugar put on the market, which will assist materially in increasing the easiness already apparent. Some dealers express the opinion that the market will hold over the year-end, but there are others who say that they would not be surprised at a break before that time. Operations are on a hand-to-mouth basis with a fair demand in the face of the present easiness.

Sugar.—Sugar continues in the process of readjustment which brought about last week's decline of 10c per cwt. In New York the decline has been quite large but has not been so marked here due to the differences in conditions on which the markets hinge.

Syrup and Molasses.—A seasonable trade is present in syrups. Molasses have been in brisk demand for past month in view of Christmas baking. A recent despatch from Barbados says that first shipments from that island will be later than expected owing to rains which have delayed reaping. Planters in Barbados seem to be quite strong in their ideas regarding new crop on account of the present high sugar market.

Dried Fruits.—Citron peel is up one cent per pound. It was reported in former issues that there was no over supply of peels, and the big sales by retailers have cut into stocks, especially citron, which is quite scarce. Shipments from the second steamer of dates arrived here this week, and offerings are made at lower price. Quality is generally good. There has been a brisk demand, and first shipments have been well cleaned up. Currants in the primary market hold strong position. There is said to be no over abundance of Valencia raisins here, that is of good fruit. There is considerable poor stock on the market. The decline in California seeded raisins has come to a stop and there is a reacting tendency on the coast, which some dealers predict will become quite marked.

In regard to report from some Canadian centres that some prunes were coming on the market stamped dishonestly—that is, large prunes being high, smaller sizes twere marked up—wholesalers have found no evidence of any such practice with goods that have arrived here. One dealer reports there were several rejections in Chicago on this score, but while admitting the temptation for unscrupulous shippers to do so, he believed that Toronto dealers had escaped in this regard.

Evaporated cranberries made their debut on the Toronto market this week. They are put up in package form and it is claimed that they retain all the good qualities of the fresh article. They are quoted at $1.20 per dozen.

Tea.—There are no special new features. In spite of fair supplies of Ceylon tea shipped during October and prospects of continued good supplies for next month or two, says a report from Ceylon, higher prices in London and Calcutta have influenced this market to the extent of a rise all round of at least ½d. for the month just ended. In face of the poorer quality, the rise is really more. Prices have now reached a level which has not been touched in many years. Unless the Indian crop is very short indeed, continues the report, there does not appear sufficient justification for a still higher market such as is anticipated by many. The strength is undoubtedly due to the fact that continued high markets have caused distributors to let their stocks down so low they are compelled to buy, no matter what point prices go to.

Nuts.—One cent more is added to Brazils this week by a number of firms. Supplies are far from plentiful. There has been considerable strengthening in Tarragona almonds in the primary markets, indicating higher prices for further supplies. Shelled almonds are also higher in Europe. Grenoble walnut shipments were late in arriving but are now going out to the trade. There has been a big demand for nuts of all kinds and even yet there is considerable business in this line being done for the Christmas trade.

Rice and Tapioca.—Trade will have to be carried on in old stocks of rice for some time yet, and the condition of supplies is quite well known. Japan is now being harvested and will arrive in January. It is reported quite plentiful and in good condition. Japan is, however, a big consumer of her own rise. The harvesting of the Burma crop does not begin until on in January and does not arrive here until March, at about the same time as supplies of Patna.

Winnipeg, Dec. 8.—With the Xmas season close at hand conditions in all grocery lines show promising results indeed. All wholesalers express themselves as being satisfied with the trade, and in fact many firms have been working four nights in the week to supply the rush orders which are coming in at present time. The bulk of the Christmas orders have all been delivered, but as is always the case, there are a number of rush orders at last minute, and this is even more pronounced this year on account of the delay in harvesting and marketing grain.

One of the most encouraging factors of the Christmas trade this year has been the large demand for high class goods. Trade in these lines has been increasing every year, and one large wholesaler stated this morning that conditions were so satisfactory that jobbers were gaining confidence in buying high class lines. In former years he stated that several jobbers bought in a certain percentage of high class goods and invariably had some stock left over on their hands after the season's trade was over. During the last few years, however, this has been considerably changed, and this year finds larger demand than ever for such lines. Perhaps no greater proof of the growth and wealth of the west can be given than this example.

Freight conditions are a little better and traffic is moving a little more regularly than last week. Christmas goods, partly on account of the tie-up, were late in arriving, and were consequently late in getting out. These, however, as stated above, are being rushed forward as quickly as possible to supply the late orders which travelers have been pouring in, as they are all endeavoring to complete their routes before the 17th of the month, when they will all repair to their homes for the Christmas holidays, and will not be seen on the road again till shortly after the new year. All stocks in the city at the present time are a fair size. The lines which were needed the most having been supplied during the last week or two. Currants were, perhaps, the shortest of all, but shipments of these have been received and a fair quantity is at present on hand.

Sugar.—A change has taken place in the sugar markets since last week, and at the present time the market is considered to be rather weak. There was a decline of 5c in New York the other day and it was the opinion of some local brokers that a corresponding decline was likely to follow here.

Syrup. — Syrup shows considerable weakness this week, having declined 10c, due to the reduction on the corn markets to the south. The demand at the present time is only normal, and even with this decline it is not likely that any great difference will be noticed in the trade.

Dried Fruits.—Perhaps no line is being followed so closely by wholesalers and jobbers as the various lines that comprise the dried fruit market. California raisins are in great demand and are advancing. Some three weeks ago this line was dropping, but the market has toned up considerably, and at the present time Cal. raisins are regarded by many of the local wholesalers as the best buy in the dried fruit market. In fact this point was claimed outright by one large wholesaler to-day. Prunes are also claimed by many to be an excellent buy, as high prices are predicted for next spring. The total crop production of Cal. prunes last year was 100,000 tons. Last week alone there were exported in two boats 15,000 tons, or approximately 1-7 of the whole crop of Europe. Combined with this, the immense demand from all over the world has barred the California market, and there is little doubt that prunes will be worth some money next spring.

Transportation Difficulties Smoothed Out

Past President of Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild Reviews the Work Done—Secured Change in Decision Reached by Railway Companies—Successful Opposition to Increase in Classification Ratings.

Montreal, Dec. 14.—(Special)—The annual meeting of the Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild, which is affiliated with the Dominion Wholesalers' Guild and the Montreal Board of Trade, was held on Thursday, December 7. Among those present were Armand Chaput, S. Deschatelets, Jos. Ethier, Z. Hebert, J. T. Lalonde and Alex. Orsali.

The retiring president, Armand Chaput, presented his report of the year's business of the Guild, which was adopted for publication in the annual review of the Board of Trade. Mr. Chaput dwelt upon the success the Guild has achieved during the past year in the matter of transportation. Early in January the railway companies adopted a rule that they would not accept freight at their sheds after the hour of 5 p.m. The Guild objected to this action, because of the possibility of a serious curtailment of the time for shipping, and carried their complaint to the Board of Railway Commissioners. So far successful were they that the commissioners ordered that during the summer months the railway companies must accept freight until the hour of 6 p.m., and during the winter until 5 p.m. It was added that in both cases there should be granted whatever extra time that might be reasonable and necessary in the event of the breakdown of vehicles or of other unavoidable circumstances.

ARMAND CHAPUT

The Guild was also successful in their opposition to the movement to increase the Canadian classification rating of cut and plug tobacco, and succeeded in having alimentary pastes, macaroni, vermicelli, etc., in car lots reduced from the fourth to the fifth class of freight rating.

Mr. Chaput's report showed that the year had been a successful one in the work that had been accomplished in the interests of the trade.

The membership of the Guild had been increased the year by the acceptance of O. Chevalier and L. Z. Magnan, of Joliette, Que.

The officers elected for the coming year are as follows:

President—Zephirin Hebert.

Vice-President—N. Gendreau.

Treasurer—J. T. Lalonde.

Directors—S. J. Carter, S. Deschatelets and W. Pouliot.

Armand Chaput, who during the past two years has filled the position of president of the Guild, was unanimously appointed as the Guild's nominee for election to the Council of the Board of Trade, he having served as a member of the council during the past year.

What is believed to have been the highest price on record in a regular sale was paid for 11 boxes of California late Valencia oranges in New York last week, namely, $17.25 per box. The fruit was among the last lots of the season.

A despatch from Florida says that the supply of grape fruit is limited, and there is every indication of a strong market on this line right through the season.

NEW BRUNSWICK TRADE.

St. John, Dec. 14.—With trade brisk and encouraging the market during the last week, has remained quite steady, and few changes of interest are noted. Wholesale dealers, particularly, report a splendid run on business, while with the retail trade, sales have considerably increased, and a notable month is being confidently anticipated. Many of the grocers are remaining open later than the usual hour at present, and will continue to do so until the rush period has passed. A fairly heavy fall of snow, and the making of ice seemed to hurry early buying, and a noticeable and appreciable increase is apparent in business. It is an appreciative fact to the consumer at least that sugar has declined, even if it is only ten cents. Further decreases are looked for, but a local merchant said this week, that he expected it would advance after the new year.

A decrease is noted in Ontario flour as well as in cornmeal in bags and barrels. No. 1 King's apples have dropped from $3 to $2.25 a barrel, and No. 2 from $2.50 to $2.25.

SUGGESTIONS GATHERED FROM DEALERS

Selling Coffee in Small Quantities — Holiday Co-operation of the Clerk—Canned Apricots on the Market.

Advise your customers to buy coffee in comparatively small quantities.

The customer likes the fragrance of coffee in the store, but some of those who think so may suspect that some of this coffee strength should have remained in their purchase.

"I increase my purchases 30 per cent. every year," is the testimony of one grocer, but there are not many who can boast of that growth.

The clerk should lend a hearty co-operation during the holiday rush. Business will be back to the normal in January and the clerk will not regret the extra time he gave.

With the price of coffee higher, the grocer should encourage the buying of quality rather than ignoring the market and selling an inferior grade.

"It is fortunate the prune crop of California was well up to the average this year," remarked a Montreal wholesaler recently when he reported higher prices. "Had it been a lean year, it is doubtful where prices would have gone to by this time."

Fish is one article at any rate that remains comparatively untouched by the high price tendency. This does not include the best grades of canned salmon, however.

Something new on the market are canned apricots. They have caught the fancy of those who have tasted them, possessing natural qualities that are lost in the dried fruit.

Twelve thousand pounds of tea were grown on an experimental farm at Summerville, South Carolina, during the past year.

TREND OF WHOLESALE PRICES.

Ottawa, Dec. 14.—The Dominion Department of Labor index number of wholesale prices stood at 130.3 for October, as compared with 128.5 in the preceding month, and 127.4 in the corresponding month last year. The numbers, it will be understood are percentages in each case of the average price level prevailing during the decade, 1890-1899, the period selected by the department as the standard of comparison throughout its investigation into wholesale prices. Over 200 articles, carefully selected so as to represent Canadian production and consumption are included in the calculation.

It will be seen that wholesale prices are slightly higher than in the preceding month, and considerably higher than at the same period of 1910, in which the index number reached its highest point during the year.

The chief increases during the past year, contributing to this result, occurred in grains and fodders, dairy products, there being a decrease in animals and meats, the other groups being for the most part steady.

Have you ever thought that a great many grocers needlessly limit the sale of

to the Christmas season and thereby suggest to their trade that mince meat is only good to eat at that particular time?

Has it ever occured to you that these grocers are throwing away money just as much so as if they took cash from the till and threw it down the sewer?

Think it over. It is worth while.

Is there one real good, live reason why it should be so? Especially so when our mince meat is procurable.

Ample Supply of Xmas Poultry Expected

General Opinion That Supplies Will be Quite Free—Still Tendency on Part of Shippers to Hold Off — Butter Continues Steady— Shipment of New Zealand Stock to Vancouver—New Laid Eggs Bring Fancy Prices—Cheese Quiet, But Holds Steady.

The general feeling is that the Christmas turkey will be in quite plentiful supply. On the whole, poultry offerings are expected to be ample for the occasion and fairly reasonable in price when the holding of supplies in hopes of highsidered. The same tendency on the part of shippers as in other years, namely the holding of supplies in hoped of higher prices, is noticeable this year also, but as the festive season approaches there will probably be the usual rush.

Butter holds a steady position on all markets, and there seems nothing at hand to break the strengthening tendency. Comparatively small stocks with limited receipts and a fairly good demand are the factors which shape the market. A shipment of about 5,000 boxes of New Zealand creamery butter arrived in Vancouver this week, but it is said that this is about all that will come to Canada from this direction, the balance of supplies having been arranged for shipment to the British market.

Eggs are eggs, especially if they happen to be new laids, which in view of the keen request for guaranteed stock for Christmas cooking are bringing fancy prices. Storage eggs are also having a good run and stocks are rapidly being depleted. Already firms at different centres have found it necessary to import United States stocks, and quite early in the winter at that.

Cheese is rather quiet but the market is maintained. Provisions also show a tinge of quietness. The English bacon market shows a firmer tendency. Honey is in fair demand.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—A number of changes are recorded in the provision market this week. There is steady demand for pure lard, but compound is down ½c. Extra large hams show a reduction of ½c and in barreled pork a number of lower prices are shown as the result of a quiet tendency due principally to unseasonable weather. Of late it has not been cold enough for a healthy trade in pork but a remedy for this will not be long wanting. A stronger feeling has been noted in the live hog market and the effect has been noticed in a firmer tone to the dressed market.

BUTTER.—Jobbers point to the light supply of butter at this season as an indication of what the market is likely to be. Production at this time of year becomes light and quality is frequently not of the best. Stocks are much lower than usual and holders are looking for higher prices.

EGGS.—While no changes are reported for the week, market is firmly held. Stocks are light in the city and new laids that come forward are quickly taken up. Demand is steady and under the present conditions a stronger market is generally expected.

CHEESE.—There is no change in the cheese market which is steady and firm on account of stocks being light. Supply is lower than is generally the case at this season and holders expect that the continued demand will make itself felt by giving strength to the market.

POULTRY.—Sales of poultry are good but the weather has not been seasonable of late and trade has suffered thereby. A considerable quantity of second rate fowl and chickens have been coming forward and is not regarded highly by the trade. In regard to turkeys, first holders seem to be waiting for better weather before quoting any price for the reason that with snappy weather the demand is keener and a better price can be secured. Large dealers in Eastern Ontario have refused to quote of late and doubtless for the reason above mentioned. The big retailers up to this week have shown a much reduced display in comparison with their usual feature windows of poultry at this season. Normal prices are looked for in Christmas turkeys.

PROVISIONS.—There is practically no change in the provision market since a week ago. Even live hogs, which of late have been given to constant fluctuation, show no perceptible change. The fact that one firm quotes lard ¼ cent higher would indicate a stronger feeling. It is, at any rate, in good demand, the present high price of butter assisting in increasing its use. There is just a tinge of quietness due to rush of other lines at this season.

POULTRY.—The general feeling is that Christmas poultry will be plentiful and fairly reasonable in price. At least dealers believe that conditions indicate that. "Plenty of poultry for the Christmas trade," said one. "A cheap Christmas turkey," said another, while yet a third in answer to The Grocer's query said: "My reports show that supplies of poultry, turkeys included, are ample throughout the country. Unless there is a general holding on to supplies, prices will be fairly easy."

Of course, how easy they will be depends just on what volume comes to market. Really low prices under existing conditions cannot be expected. While supplies throughout Ontario are quite large, much depends on the demand from the Western Provinces.

In past years, there has been a tendency to hold on the part of farmers and shippers. The same thing is noticeable this year. "I think they will start to come towards the end of the week," said one dealer, "holders are inclined to expect higher prices, but the slight reduction which we made in quotations this week has slightly staggered them, and I expect them to come over with the goods when they see the tendency in prices."

The Canadian Produce Co. quote chickens, over 5 lbs. each, milk fed and fat, 11c. live, 15c. dressed; chickens average quality, 10c. live, 12c. dressed; ducks, young, over 5 lbs. each and fat, 11c. live, 14c. dressed; hens, fat, 6c. live, 8c. dressed; turkeys, young, 9 to 14 lbs., well fed and plump, 18c. live, 20c. dressed; geese, young, fat, 9c. live and 11c. dressed; pigeons, live only, per pair, 20c.

WINNIPEG.

BUTTER.—Creamery butter has been holding firm and no change has taken place during the last two weeks. The demand has been exceptionally good but supplies have been large enough to maintain the price of 34c per lb. for fresh made creamery bricks. There is little dairy butter reaching the city at the present time, and what is arriving is of poor quality. The price, however, shows some advance over last week, as will be noted below :

Strictly No. 1, delivered Winnipeg, per lb.	0 25
" No. 2, " " "	0 23
" No. 3, " " "	0 18
" No. 4, " " "	0 15

EGGS.—Shipments of eggs show considerable falling off during last two weeks, and as result prices have advances 5c per doz. Shippers refuse to forward eggs while weather conditions are uncertain, and as result receipts have been very low. Manitoba fresh gathered eggs are now quoted at 30c wholesale, while guaranteed strictly fresh laid are retailing at 65c a doz. in the city.

OPINION ON POULTRY QUESTION.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—In answer to the question, should merchants accept inferior poultry at prices paid for good poultry, or not?

No, I think not!

If you keep the right goods the market is always open for your goods. Stay with what you advertise and the trade will stay with you. Then your customers can depend upon you for good goods. If you have a mixed lot of poultry you are in a puzzling market every time. Keep and buy only salable goods and you will hold your trade.

Rolled Oats Decline 25 Cents per Barrel

But Market for Raw Material is Steady and Reaction is Expected at Early Date—Domestic Flour Trade Fair Considering that Interest is Centered Elsewhere—Some Price Cutting Reported—Scarcity of Cars Causing Trouble.

Rolled oats supplied the feature of the week with a decline of 25 cents per barrel. The market for the raw material has been steady and there has also been a seasonable demand for this product so that a drop in price was not generally expected. Although this reduction has taken place with the majority of firms, all have not lowered figures. Probably the reduction was made with the view of drumming up business at a time when interest is centered elsewhere. At any rate this explanation was given by one big house. Under the conditions a reaction upwards again at an early date would not come as a surprise.

The Christmas rush in other lines detracts a little from flour. However, a fair domestic trade is reported, but export business is decidedly slow. As explained before, the English millers have corralled the trade. Then again an advance of 7 cents per cwt. in ocean freight rates has not at all helped in this business.

From some centres it is reported that a certain amount of price cutting is going on, resulting no doubt from keen competition.

Scarcity of cars is making trouble for some flour companies, especially those who have their mills in the West, while even in Ontario it is at times hard to get cars, clean cars being essential for flour shipments. One firm in the West give an instance where it had orders to send a car of flour forward by Nov. 20, but it was unable on account of the lack of cars to send it before Dec. 8.

The visible supply of wheat in the United States last week was 70,488,000 bushels as against 42,666,000 a year ago and 28,400,000 in 1909.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR.—Business in flour remains satisfactory in a general sense. There is reported a certain amount of price cutting going on, resulting no doubt from keen competition, but the more substantial firms are apparently letting others attend to this. The trade is fair for this season of the year when holiday buying puts staples into the background. On the whole, however, business is reported satisfactory.

Rolled Oats.—A decline of twenty-five cents a barrel in rolled oats is a feature of the week. The market has been steady and firm under a seasonable trade and lower price was not generally expected. The prices quoted below are not exactly uniform for the trade, as one firm were quoting at a higher level than the appended figures.

FLOUR.—Flour prices are unchanged. Wheat quotations are somewhat easier at the moment. "I think there is more of a tendency towards easiness," said one dealer, "although not reflected by a reduction in wheat quotations. For instance despite the storm damage in Argentine and the sensational advance of about 4 cents at Buenos Ayres, the wheat market on Monday sagged instead of strengthening. The world has a plentiful supply of wheat, while receipts in the West are heavy on both sides of the line. Supplies are pouring into Minneapolis where a 20-cent. cut in flour has taken place."

Domestic trade is quite good but export business is decidedly dull, although considerable wheat is being exported. In Ontario flour there are not even bids for export.

CEREALS.—Quite unexpected was the drop of 25 cents per barrel in rolled oats during the past week. The price of raw material has been holding quite steady, while the demand for rolled oats has been seasonable. Apparently the only reason was for the purpose of stirring up buying at a season, when on account of the rush of other lines, rolled oats are somewhat neglected.

The market for oats is quite steady and a reaction to the former level or at least a strengthening tendency at an early date would not be a surprise.

Some manufacturers of family packages have reduced them 10c per case.

Christmas Fruits Now to the Front

Big Trade Anticipated as Shown by the Volume of Goods Going to Retail Trade—Oranges a big Leader—Cranberries High in Price—Cape Cods are Scarce—California Celery High in Price—Lemon Shipments from Italy Irregular.

Fiuits are now occupying a position of prominence on the grocery trade stage. Orders have been pouring in freely since the first of the month for fruits in anticipation of a big Christmas business and wholesalers have been busy sending the goods out to the trade. Wholesale dealers report good demand from retailers for holly, holly wreaths and evergreen. They expect an increased interest in vegetable specialties during the coming week as well as a big "last moment" trade in fruits.

Oranges are one of the chief lines in demand during Christmas week and volume handled this year promises to run into a big figure. Navels and Floridas will be the two big sellers. The former are somewhat firmer in price as shipments from California have been light as compared with last year, due to the fact that the fruit did not mature as early as usual. Floridas are excellent this year, for while in some instances they may lack a little in color, they are very sweet. There has been some prejudice against the Florida orange because in past years early shipments of green sour fruit have been sent out, but the producers are now trying to guard against this.

On the Eastern Canadian markets, Mexican, Jamaica and Valencia oranges will come in for the lower priced trade. People want oranges at Christmas time and many cannot afford the higher priced fruit so that consequently many grocers find a certain sale for these lines.

California celery is high but shipments are expected at some Canadian markets for Christmas trade. High duty of 30 per cent. coupled with high price at primary points bring it to a lofty figure when it reaches the consumer. At the present price one dealer stated the duty alone would amount to 90 cents per case or 13 cents per dozen. In some sections of the Dominion there is some home grown celery available but the quantity is small.

Shipments of lemons from Italy have been irregular on account of lack of boats due to the war. Demand for lemons is normal.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS.—Apparently the Cape Cod variety of cranberry will be absent in a general sense from Canadian tables during the festive season, and the native Nova Scotian article will have to serve. It is stated that there is hardly a sufficient quantity of the Cape Cod berry to meet the demand of the United States market. There need be no worry about oranges. The navels that have been received here have been of fine quality and almost matured, a welcome fact at this time of the year. They are coming forward freely and price quoted should satisfy most buyers. Pineapples are higher in price and are meeting with a fair demand. Apples are firm. It is stated that the present holding in this city is about 75 per cent. less than the supply at this time a year ago. Ontario is still holding on to practically all but a mediocre quality and at auction this week prices for No. 2's were pretty steep. Should supplies come forward with a rush a 'killing' is anticipated, to use the words of the representative of a local house. Lemons range from $2.50 to $3.50 with the former price for No. 2's.

VEGETABLES.—Among the new vegetables that will grace the Christmas dinner table will be California celery to arrive about the 15th, and southern cucumbers. Canadian onions are slightly higher, being quoted at $3.50 per 100 lbs. Potatoes are held firmly and stocks are reported light. Sweet potatoes are a little firmer. The vegetable market is moving along without much featurable change.

GREEN FRUITS.—With Christmas little more than a week away, wholesalers are transacting a big trade in fruits. Oranges are one of the leaders and large quantities are this week going out to retail trade as well as other lines while from now on to the holiday, assorting orders will be arriving freely.

California navels, under lighter shipments than a year ago and the present good demand, are firmer in price. Floridas range about the same. Cranberries should show a better movement next week. They hold firmly in price.

Almeria grapes, bananas, grape fruit, etc., should all come in for their share of extra business created by the Christmas trade. Apples will also be to the fore.

VEGETABLES.—Cucumbers, head lettuce, celery, sweet potatoes, mushrooms and similar lines will be in good demand during the coming week. People like to have something like this for the Christmas table. Hothouse tomatoes are also obtainable at 30 cents per pound. Mushrooms are quoted in 1 lb. boxes at 70 to 75 cents.

The strength in such lines as carrots, beets, turnips and parsnips is still apparent. In some cases increases have taken place in prices. In other instances there is merely an upward tendency. Scarcity of some of these lines is quite marked. Potatoes hold firmly and dealers are not anticipating any lower prices at any rate.

Fresh Fruits.—There has been some change during the last two weeks in the prices of several lines. The demand is holding steady and it is expected that during the next two weeks a banner retail trade will be conducted throughout the city. Wholesalers have been preparing for this and as a result are in a position to successfully cope with the situation. Valencia oranges are off the market, while California navels show a decline of $1 per case. Malaga grapes have increased $2 per keg, and Jersey cranberries have followed with a similar advance. Washington pears hold steady while Florida grape fruit remains firm. Sharp increases will be noticed this week in vegetables as compared with two weeks ago. Native beets have taken a jump of 50c per cwt., while parsnips are 25c higher than they were last week. A fair supply of green vegetables are reaching the city, with the exception of radishes and celery, and owing to the limited supply in these lines prices show considerable advance, the former being quoted at 50c per doz., and the latter at 60c.

Potatoes.—Supplies are not coming in very fast at the present time and the tone of the market is strong. There has been considerable comment regarding the large quantities of frozen potatoes which have been sold to the trade during the last few weeks and much satisfaction has been expressed by wholesalers, retailers and consumers. Fish - Oysters

Three Special Fish Days Next Week

Should Add Considerably to Ordinary Demand—The Mild Weather Not Been Conducive to Trade—Frozen Lines in Prominence—More Interest in Smoked Fish — Weather on Eastern Coast More Favorable for Fishing

The unseasonable weather which has been quite general in Canada for the past week has not been conducive to a record breaking trade in fish. However, considering the mild weather, thanks to the special fish days, trade has been maintained at an appreciable level. Two fish days this week and three next week should assist materially in keeping sales above the ordinary demand.

Frozen lines are in prominence, while several points report increased interest in smoked fish. A fair trade is present in oysters.

The weather off the Nova Scotia coast has been more favorable for fishing. Larger catches of haddock were made, as well as cod, while few halibut were landed. Bank dry salt cod at Lunenburg is now held at $7 per quintal, as compared with sales in September at $5 to $5.50.

MONTREAL.—Mild, unseasonable weather has not aided the fish market which to reach its heaviest trade at this period requires the colder weather which makes the handling of fish comparatively easy. There have been no particular price changes during the week, but business has been good in spite of conditions that were unlooked for. Two fish days this week and three next week will add considerably to the ordinary demand.

NOVA SCOTIA.

HALIFAX.—Several vessels arrived this week with fares of fresh fish. The cargoes consisted principally of haddock of excellent quality and the fish found a ready sale. Weather was a little more favorable during the week, and there was an improvement all round in the catches. A few halibut were landed, and cod is in fairly good supply. Smelts are still scarce on the local market. There is an improved demand for smoked fish. Dealers report large sales of salmon, finnan haddies and kippered herring.

Sales of oysters are large, principally in bulk, the price of Island stock being too high for the ordinary consumer. The United States bulk oysters now coming on the market are good stock.

A record price was paid for fresh mackerel at Gloucester this week. The first vessels arriving with small fares readily sold their fish for 26 cents a piece. Then another vessel came along when the market was bare and the price jumped up to 36 cents. This is the highest price ever paid for fresh mackerel in that market.

CANADA'S CREAM EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Big Increase Shown Since Tariff Was Lowered to 5 cents a Gallon—Means Less Butter Production in Canada and Tends to Firm Prices.

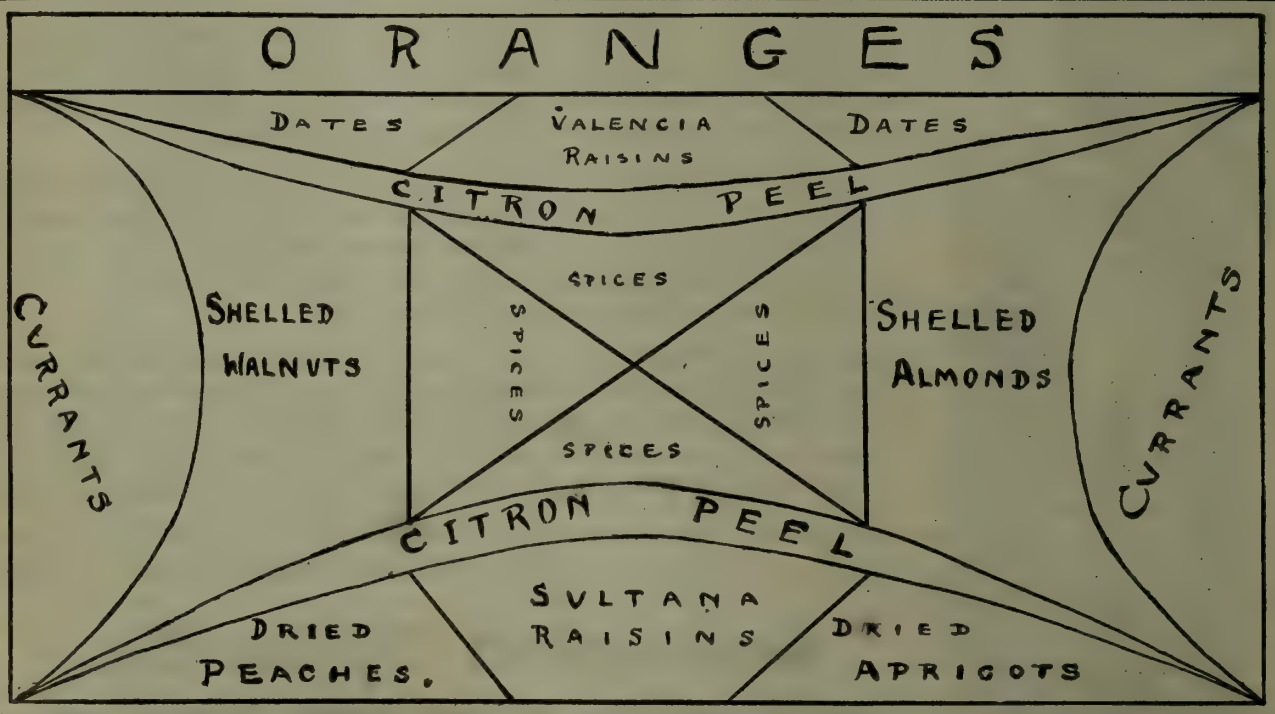
The past two years the exports of cream from Canada to the United States have shown a big increase. A few years ago there was practically no cream sent across the line, but this year for the six months ending Sept. 1, the exports amounted to $554,003.

This has been due to the lower tariff on cream entering the United States. The last revision set it at 5 cents per gallon, which is generally conceded was a mistake and that 5 cents per pound was really meant. This would have been practically prohibitive.

This change in tariff has brought about considerable change, or at least has made conditions different from what they otherwise would have been. Instead of the cream being turned into butter here, thus increasing Canada's production, it is made into butter across the line. Last year this piled up such a supply of butter on United States markets that during the winter prices tumbled in an effort by dealers to clear the decks. It was thought that this would put a crimp in the import of cream, but little or no decrease is noticed.

What difference it would have made if the cream had not left Canada is a question. It certainly would have increased butter production here, and it was needed this year. A combination of circumstances, including the dry hot weather and the high price of cheese, helped this year to curtail the make of butter, while a good export demand has cut down considerably the supplies held in this country.

While creamery butter a year ago was quoted at 25½ cents on the Montreal market to-day quotations rule around 30½ cents.



ORIENTAL FLOUR MARKET.

Vancouver, B.C., Dec. 14.—Advices from the Orient, received by local dealers, is that the flour market is growing constantly stronger. Stocks are fairly large, but there are big purchases for Central and Northern China, a million bags having been recently ordered for those points. In South China and Hong Kong territory the need of supplies is becoming more acute all the time. The action of several of the governments in protecting the food supplies of their own people has increased the gravity of the situation. Indo-China has prohibited the export of rice, as has the Dutch East Indies, and the usual Chinese laws against the export of rice have been augmented by provincial enactments which prevent the interchange of this foodstuff between provinces.

Norman Hill, who recently purchased the business of Eyre & Cutbill, Penticton, B.C., is installing new fixtures in his store.

W. A. Cameron, New Glasgow, N.S., has opened a new grocery store.

J. A. Goodwillie, who has a canning factory near Welland, Ont., contemplates erecting one in Welland, and to move his plant to the new establishment.

Suggestion for floor of a Christmas window. The various articles can be separated by tinseled strips of wood, or by other articles on sale. For instance, separate the spices in the centre by rows of nutmegs, the raisins from the dates, peaches, etc., by package raisins, etc.

When placing your order for Canned Fish, be sure you have the name right:

"BRUNSWICK" Brand

It is the finest brand obtainable, and may be relied on to give the fullest satisfaction.

By the "Brunswick" modern, sanitary process of canning, the natural fish flavor is preserved to a remarkable degree.

Keep a generous stock of "Brunswick" Sea Foods. There is an excellent profit in selling them.

New 1911 Model
Keith Account System

As convenient to operate as a roll-top desk.

Another Victory for the Keith Account System

The New Pittsburg Coal Co. adopts this ever-popular Account Register in all of their stores.

THE KEITH SYSTEM DISPLACES OTHER SO-CALLED ACCOUNT REGISTERS AFTER FAIR AND IMPARTIAL TRIAL

One-writing. Self-Indexing. Fire-Proof.

HERE ARE THE FACTS:

Mr. H. S. Mervin, Auditor of the New Pittsburg Coal Co., whose wide experience qualifies him as a competent judge of account systems, after having given a competing register a fair trial, came to this conclusion, viz., that to hunt a customer's name under a glass, find a number, locate a page, then to open the register and search out a small spring bearing a corresponding number, was a waste of valuable time for a corporation such as The New Pittsburg Coal Co.

THE KEITH SELF-INDEX SYSTEM is free from the above complications. Any number of salespeople may operate it at the same time if necessary.

Mr. Mervin saw its advantages.

The New Pittsburg Coal Co. are saving money and time with the Keith Self-Index System.

If this company saves money by the use of this fire-proof up-to-the-minute system, would it not be good policy for you to drop in line right now?

IN SELECTING your FRUIT and VEGETABLE Cans use the same careful judgment and criticism that you exercise in all other purchases. "American Cans" court such a test. Cans are not all alike, even if they do seem similar and look alike as "two peas in a pod." On the above basis we will take a chance on securing and holding your business.

This is BAD Advertising!

YET thousands of merchants are doing this very thing every day. Not by sticking signs in the window—but by their methods, by their neglect to adopt modern store system. Actions speak louder than words, remember. You don't have to tell people how you do business. You are showing them every day.

Is this the kind of advertising YOUR store is getting? This is a very serious question that every merchant should carefully consider. If unsatisfactory conditions exist in your store lose no time in remedying them. Prevent mistakes, avoid disputes, stop all losses and insure absolute accuracy in all money dealings---as a million other successful merchants have done---by getting a National Cash Register. Then "put a receipt in every parcel."

You cannot succeed without a good system---and the better your system the better you will succeed. No store system ever invented has done so much for so many merchants, at so little cost, as the National Cash Register.

Customers like to deal in stores that have a National Cash Register. They know it guarantees absolute accuracy, promotes efficiency and stands for up-to-date methods and good management. And they realize that good management means better values.

There's a National Cash Register built for you, and the money it will save you will pay for it.

Friendship as a Business Factor

A Story Emphasizing the Importance of Showing a Buyer You Have Personal Interest in His Welfare — How One Good Salesman Lost an Order and Another Secured It.

IF there is any one season of the year when we remember our friends more than another, it is at Christmas. The man who makes us feel his friendship, not for his own personal gain or curiosity, but of an interest born of desire to serve, is the one who usually gets our business. The same applies to the retailer and his customer.

A story is told of two men who came from the far west to a large eastern city for a plant for a new industry. They were partners in launching this enterprise and came to town with pockets full of money to cover many wants. Some manufacturer was going to get a nice order and cash down into the bargain. Who would it be?

The partners were taken in tow by representative after representative of large influential houses. They saw all the sights in the big city. There were automobile rides every day, theatre parties every night, and cigars galore. These "friends" never allowed them a minute to themselves while they were awake but it turned out that as long as the gay life lasted the partners held onto their purse strings and no orders were given out.

When this gayety had run its course, two men appeared on the scene who had taken no part in the entertainments above described. Finally the order narrowed down to one of the two.

The first was familiar with every detail of his business. He had made a complete study of it and he also knew commercial conditions in the district from which the partners had come. And he could talk eloquently and enthusiastically about what he knew and at the same time he was careful about what he said and how he said it.

His competitor also knew his business thoroughly and he had a big fund of other information, human nature included. He was a good talker as well.

The first spent almost two days trying to get the business but failed. The other after a two hour interview went out with the signed order—and the money.

Where was the difference between the committee who lavishly entertained, the man who didn't get the order and the one who did?

The partners with the money certainly enjoyed the sights seen and good time given by the entertainers. They saw much of the city and gleaned a great deal of general information. But there was always the feeling that this good time was given them by men who really cared nothing for them other than that they had a barrel of money to spend. As a result they did not gain the absolute confidence of these men and confidence in the goods they had to offer.

In the salesman who failed there was also something lacking. He was a polished thinking and talking machine, enthused by just the proper amount of enthusiasm, decidedly accurate but he seemed to indicate that his listeners were automatic machines without human feelings.

The man who got the order didn't even have to offer the buyers a cigar. But he made them feel he was interested in them. that he was their FRIEND. Before he had been with them five minutes he had placed the matter on a personal business basis. His proposition was no better than the others so far as goods and their quality were concerned.

* * * *

The success of the retail dealer depends on many things but there is none more important than the capacity of the dealer to make friendships. Other things being equal, the merchant who has the power to make his customers believe their welfare is one of his chief considerations, is the one who will reap the greatest advantages.

As Elbert Hubbard concisely put it: "To have friends—be one."

The man who shows his friendship to be superficial, to be for his own personal gain only will sooner or later be found out.

Margin on Sugar—Association Work

If Retailer Gets Six Per Cent. on Sugar, Does He Make Any Money With Expenses at 14½ Per Cent.?—Too Much Play Indulged in at Some Association Conventions—Accepting Orders From Customers Through Manufacturers' Canvassers.

* By Henry Johnson, Jr.

I have asked about the net earnings on sugar several times during the past six months. It has been my hope that some old-school tradesman would help me out on this, but I get nothing. Maybe all the "old-school" fellows are dead!

But, look you: The grocery jobber sells 25 p.c. sugar—I mean that 25 p.c. of his total overturn is sugar, not that he makes 25 p.c. on his sales; bless you, NO! I do not know just what proportion we handle; have always been too lazy to find out in my own business, though I have started the account several times. It is certain that we handle a large volume, maybe 20 p.c. of what we sell is sugar; and 20 p.c. is one-fifth of our entire overturn. Thus it is important that we find some way of knowing whether we actually make any money on sugar or not.

Placed Average Margin at 6 per cent.

Let us call the average gross margin on sugar 6 p.c. Let us concede that the average grocery expense is 14½ p.c. This looks as if sugar did not pay its way—but does it, or does it not, actually?

I know that wholesale factors in sugar can do business on 2 p.c. gross and yet make money. This would seem to demonstrate that it costs very little to handle sugar. If it costs 3 p.c. in a retail way, or 4 p.c., then we make money at 6 p.c.; but can anybody demonstrate this?

Let us get together and see whether any of us really knows anything about this primary grocery staple.

Some months ago a gentleman of great affairs attended an important meeting of a large Grocers' Association. He took his valuable time, paid his own expenses, and devoted considerable thought to the preparation of an address. His subject was the desirableness of getting manufacturers of foods and other household products to fix retail selling prices for their goods and maintain such prices by any means in their power to use.

Whatever we may individually think of this scheme, which is widely known as the Maintained Price Plan, such a measure could not but be of great interest to every grocer from a financial standpoint. Yet, although this discussion was "featured" in the program, and every effort was made to have it impressively prominent, the speaker was moved to complain that the measure he had taken such pains to advocate was given a total of only fifteen minutes' consideration—and then lost. He went on to remark that with all the important matters before the meeting, with the time extending only over three active days, there was no difficulty in getting delegates to attend a trolley party one afternoon, a vaudeville one evening, and a banquet the last night. Truly, the conclusion seemed warranted that these men went to conventions not to work but to play.

Still, I have had occasion to think more than once that play might be an improvement on some of the "work" which is done. Not long ago the local association of a Western city passed a "resolution" that thereafter no customers' orders from canvassers employed by manufacturers would be accepted or honored unless such orders were accompanied by the cash.

The Flour was Returned.

Let us stop to look at this—something those delegates did not take time to do. We all know what a nuisance it is to have a man come along introducing Soanso's soap, whereof he emphatically thinks we should buy at least five boxes, who shoves under our nose a bunch of from ten to forty-five orders taken from our good customers at their houses, which orders, on delivery, prove to be worthless, spurious and false, or which, being genuine, are repudiated by the customer when we attempt to make delivery.

No longer ago than last spring I sent out thirty orders, each for a 49-lb. sack of a new kind of flour, and had twenty-four of them returned to me under various pretexts. That meant that my wagons carried 1200 lbs. of flour all about the town and then, after the expenditure of a lot of time and energy, carried it all back to the store. I was disgusted, truly enough, but I did not think I needed to have any help in the matter of being extra careful with similar conditions in the future.

The Man Without Back Bone.

And mark you: The very merchants who at that particular meeting were most vociferously in favor of the said "resolution" were among the first to take up another canvasser-stocking proposition almost as soon as they got back into their stores. This I know, because I happened to be in position to know it. The man who has no backbone of his own is the man whom no amount of mutual "agreeing" will aid, for it requires more than a wish-bone to stick to an agreement.

And how could it well be otherwise? Suppose a salesman you know very well to be "straight" comes in and says he is working up his goods, which we know to be good sellers, what are we going to do about it? Turn it down cold? I think not. We are going to take the orders and fill them carefully. Which means, simply, that we are going to use our own judgment in the matter. Many things we must decide for ourselves. Moreover, these things are for daily decision. Again, they are things like the yes-or-no we might give a clerk—matters too trivial to take up the time of any convention bent on a serious purpose.

More Interested in the Fun.

But is not that just the point? These men are often not a bit serious. They are more interested in the "good time" they expect to have than in any work they are supposed to do. Maybe that is not unnatural, since too little play enters into their lives, and all of us must have play or we are useless members of anything. But certainly this is the kind of thing which tends to weaken and discredit association work; it is so much like the foolish pastime of "shooting in the air." It is the old idea of passing ill-considered local ordinances which not only will not be enforced, but which, maybe, because of their careless construction, or because they conflict with fundamental principles, cannot be enforced. In such half-baked "actions" we weaken the force of all ordinances and bring all association meetings and ideas into disrepute.

In marked contrast was a late meeting of specialty manufacturers. These men are busy, serious, have no time whatever to waste. They could only be brought together, some of them from great distances, because of the importance—the REAL importance— of sundry matters to be handled. They gave two days to the work—but they WORKED. There was not an idle moment. Speakers had their turns; were held to their subjects, were squelched, pleasantly, but firmly, when their time was up. Not a minute of foolishness, not a second of "entertainment," just pure business from the opening word. It was afterwards remarked how much tangible work had been put through, how much had been adjusted, what real progress had been reported by WORKING committees—and solid satisfaction was universally expressed.

The Scouts of Commerce Make Merry

Staff Correspondence.

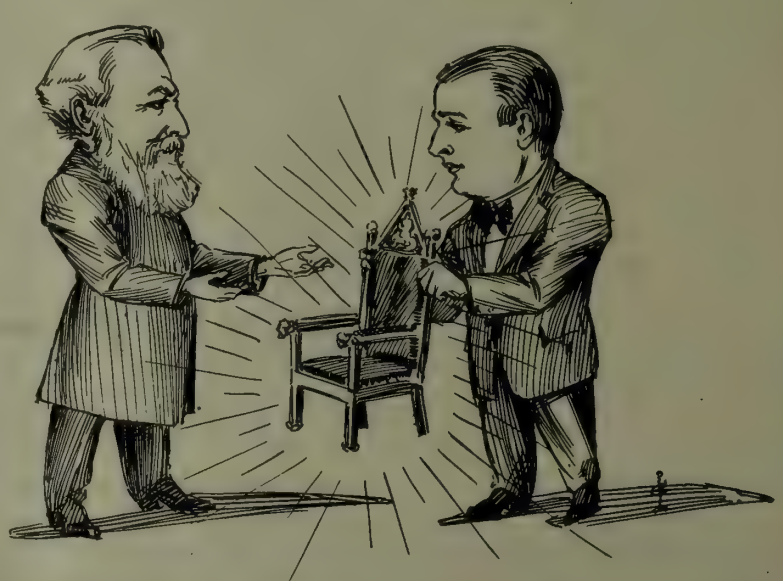
Montreal, Dec. 21. — It was a fitting tribute to the members of the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association that their annual banquet was graced by the presence of a number of Canada's most distinguished public men.

Hon. Geo. E. Fister, Minister of Trade and Commerce was undoubtedly aware of the full portent of his remark when he asked for the co-operation of the commercial travelers with his department, adding that they were best fitted to give advice, and the other prominent speakers including Hon. Chas. J. Doherty, Minister of Justice, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, leader of the Opposition, Mayor Guerin, Henri Bourassa, and C. C. Ballantyne could scarcely improve on all that was expressed and implied in that compliment.

A Large Attendance.

Six hundred of the men who bring together the retailers of this country on the one hand and the manufacturers and wholesalers on the other gathered at the Windsor Hotel on Monday night last at what proved to be one of the most successful and therefore enjoyable banquets in the history of the association. Chas. Gurd the newly elected president occupied the post of honor and with him at the table premiere were in addition to the public men already mentioned, Ald. Lariviere, J. Bevan Giles, Rev. Hugh Pedley, Leo Garneau, J. S. M. Dougall, Max. Murdoch, R. C. Wilkins, David Watson and other members of the executive of the association.

Right Mental Attitude.



The traveling salesmen representing that chain in the link of commerce that is of primal importance, heard themselves referred to in terms that were well deserved. Through the banquet and the post-prandial entertainment they forgot the crusty retailer of their routes, late trains, hotel beds and the other trials that the confreres of Frank McIntyre have to endure. It seems to be necessary to the Knights of the Grip to take life as they find it, and on this occasion good-fellowship abounded and all went as merrily as a Christmastide.

The Toast List.

The president elect, Chas. Gurd in his speech after the toast of the King had been honored, said in part, "We are an association of past and present commercial travelers, missionaries of commerce, bringing buyers and sellers together for our mutual good. The association was founded in 1875 with 251 members of whom 22 are still on the list. It has 7,450 members and a surplus of $410,-115.24."

From the Speeches.

Some of the statements of the various speakers will be of interest to all friends of the traveler. "The best man anyone can meet is the commercial traveler because of his experience and insight into life," said Sir Wilfrid Laurier. "They can put their finger on the pulse of the country and say how the great heart is beating. In these days the advancement of a country is measured by the volume of its trade with foreign nations, and measured by that standard I have no hesitation in saying that there is not a nation under the sun which to-day can boast of such progress as has been made by Canada during the first decade of the 20th century. When I have traveled in Europe I do not remember having met a commercial traveler from Canada. I do not want you to carry the war into Africa, but I want you to carry Canadian trade into those countries which give us their trade."

Scouts of Commerce.

Hon. Geo. E. Foster referred to the hosts of the evening as the scouts of commerce without whose assistance and co-operation much produce would waste. The new Minister of Commerce made a strong plea for co-operation with his department on the part of the commercial travelers. He also advised that Canada should be on the alert in regard to China and Japan and especially in view of the opening of the Panama Canal in a year's time.

Hon. Chas. J. Doherty replied to the toast of the Dominion Parliament, Henri Bourassa to that of the Province of Quebec, and Mayor Guerin for the city of Montreal. C. C. Ballantyne replied to the toast of "Our Guests."

It was a fitting conclusion to a splendid year for the association and a recognition of the position the members occupy in the commercial life of the country. It was an impetus to the members to follow their work in the future with the knowledge that their sphere is an important one and that the rest of the country realizes that fact.

BANQUETLETS.

By O. S. Johnston

Sir Wilfrid Laurier was the "Great Divide" occupying the important position between Randor (J. Bevan Giles) and Caledonia (Charles Gurd) water.

Bev. Giles found it no strain on his muscles to "hand over" the chair to Charles Gurd.

"I crow over all." Bobbie Wilkins certainly does. The arrangements which he and Max Murdoch, "the man of the hour" made were certainly most creditable. Everyone pleased. That sums it up.

The Minister of Justice cracked a joke and some of the boys laughed. We repeat it for those who did not see through it.

JOKE—"This is an age of things," he said, which are "less," as horseless carriages, wireless telegraphy, smokeless gunpowder and so forth. The day may come when we have a speechless parliament."

In the latter respect Sir Wilfrid evidently felt that he was cabinet-less.

Some were heard to say there was no necessity to patronize the Montreal Opera Co. when such singers were to be found among the D.C.T.A. ranks. Mon. Ouimet, etc., were all right. What price the Toreador item? It seemed to tickle Henri Bourassa.

There was very little "Canning." The general manager of the American Can Co. left early for Toronto. He has cans to suit all sizes.

The only figure missing from the scenery was the hotel clerk with the glad hand and welcome smile.

It was a good job that Sir Wilfrid Laurier has support on each side from the minerals because the smoke was mighty thick and not at all conducive toward clear throats.

The smoke from the cheroots reminded one of the recent fire in the cigar factory of the Harris Harkness Co., Montreal.

Armand Chaput was there as usual and so was his smile. He agreed with the speaker who said that the traveler was well able to place his finger on the pulse of the country, but would prefer his men to keep their fingers on the pulse of the retailer.

According to Hon. G. E. Foster the opening of the Panama Canal will mean an invasion of Asia by commercial travelers. As far as we can see they will turn war correspondents if the present state of affairs continues.

Henri Bourassa said that he was a meek and eccentric individual. Did he mean it? Bravo Henri! You're a conundrum.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce would like to hear frequently from travelers as to how they find the pulse of the country.

The installation of a telegraphic apparatus in the Premier's office would be a beginning—but alas! travelers are human and there are Grits as well as Tories

The representative of Tanglefoot was not there but nevertheless considerable of the good work was done.

There was a vacancy in the position generally occupied by brother S. J. Mathewson, the association's dean. Many asked about him and regretted his absence. He was well represented, however by his two sons.

There were a number of Noblemen in the hall Of course we refer to the two for a quarter smoke.

Some coat tails looked suspicious. Could it have been the free cigars?

Forgotten were the sweethearts in every town especially Port Hope.

The menu card was deficient in one respect to Bruno Trudel. Bobbie Wilkins forgot to specify "Owl Chop" Japan tea.

Some of the M.P.'s present have missed their calling. They should be sales-managers.

"Scouts of Commerce." Such is the reference made to travelers by the Hon. G E. Here's a tip for Colonel "Sam."

Music hath charms. The orchestra made a hit so did "Yip-I-Addy."

MUTUAL BENEFIT OFFFICERS.

Montreal, Dec. 21.—(Special.) — The 26th annual meeting of the Dominion Dommercial Travellers' Mutual Benefit Society, held on Friday last, marked the close of another successful year for this organization. J. Hamilton Ferns, president, occupied the chair. During the year 147 new members were received into the association, which has a present total of 1509 members. There was paid out in death claims $16,000. The officers and trustees elected for the coming year are as follows: President, F. S. At the conclusion of the business of the meeting a pleasant time was spent socially. Among those who contributed to the entertainment were Messrs. S. Dunn, Chas. Gurd, J. Breeze, D. McLean and J. B. Giles.

D.C.T.A. HAD GOOD YEAR.

Montreal, Dec. 21.—The thirty-seventh annual meeting of the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association held on Saturday night last was another manifestation of the strength this organization has attained and of the persistent progress it makes from year to year. The annual report and financial statement were read by H. W. Wadsworth, secretary, and M. Murdock, treasurer. The membership has increased during the year from 7,000 to 7,450 and the net surplus or capital from $367,806 to $410.500. The officers elected for 1912 are as follows:—President, Chas. Gurd (acclamation); vice-pres., J. F. L. Dubreuil: directors, C. Cameron, V. E. Beauvais, J. F. Featherstone, J. A. Bernier, Luke F. Moore. During the past year the association has lost fifty members through death.

Retail Grocers Entertain Competitors

Smoker Given by Toronto R. G A. Has Many Pleasant and Profitable Features—Guests Smoke Clay Pipes—References to Association Work and Peddler Nuisance—Aldermen and Controllers Ventilate Views.

THE pipe of peace was smoked at the delightful entertainment arranged by the members of the Toronto Retail Grocers Association on the evening of Dec. 14. It was a smoker to their friends in the retail and wholesale trade and to the travelers of the latter. The pipe selected was the only original, mother-earth variety—the pipe that made the others advertise; whose flavor lasts long after etc.; the down-on-the-farm pipe—in short, it was a Clay pipe. It was too by the way, the handy variety so much appreciated by the Irishman who wouldn't smoke any other. "Why when this poipe falls," he wittily remarked, "I don't even have to pick it up."

Shortly after eight o'clock when the guests sat down to euchre pastime, the pipes were passed around and very soon the large concert room of St. George's Hall was wreathed in fragrant smoke. Competitors in the trade met as friends and smoked the hours away, dividing their attention among the euchre tables, the excellent concert, business addresses and addresses by municipal candidates. The smoker was therefore quite a vaudeville treat and appreciated very much by the seventy-five or more guests in attendance.

President W. C. Miller before opening the entertainment told the gathering how pleased he was to see them, pointed out the value of the labor the association was doing, and advised all retailers to assist in the good work. The stronger the membership, the more effective the results and unquestionably good results were being obtained. Frank Johnston has been "rolling back the map" of names on the membership list and now his task will undoubtedly be much lighter.

There were many splendid features on the musical and literary program. In fact every number was a feature. There were juggling, sleight of hand work, monologues, violin and vocal solos and quartettes and other things. Some interesting stories were told by J. Howitt about that noble animal, the horse. These were made more interesting by being illustrated on canvas. This knight of the grip is well known for his Mark Twain methods of saying things, and the grocers certainly forgot about their bad debts and slow pays while he was on the platform.

The juggling feats of young Grenville Irwin stamped him as a vaudeville artist of merit. The way he tossed the balls, balanced the hat and made things disappear would cause one to believe he would prove an excellent salesman of oranges and other round articles, a good weigher and an adept at selling off stickers.

Value of Organization.

M. Moyer read a paper pointing out the value of organization in the grocery trade and what it was possible to accomplish by the merchants co-operating to secure legislation protecting their rights.

Controllers Church and Ward expressed their pleasure at being present with the grocers whom the former termed the —back-bone of the city." He made particular reference to the new hydro-electric power that had been installed on the streets by the city and the advantages to the merchants from it.

Ald. Alf. McGuire animated the spirit of those present in a short speech in which he gave the grocers some advice and encouragement.

"Gentlemen let me say that I do not think you fully realize what an important factor you are in this city. For one thing you do not press your claims enough on the municipal government of the city for legislation to which you are entitled. Considering your importance as business men and the amount you bear in the upkeep of the city you do not get the recognition that you should. Important legislation affecting your interests is constantly being passed by the city and you should see that your rights are observed.

The Peddlers Remembered.

"There is one grievance of the grocers of this city with which I am acquainted and which you have a right to have corrected. It is the peddler nuisance. (Applause.)

"You are the men who pay the taxes. You contribute to the upkeep of the city while the peddler does not. Why don't you have your rights observed?"

"How are we going to do it?" came a voice from the audience.

"How are you going to do it. Send your deputations, good sized deputations to the council to press your claims, the same as the manufacturers and other organizations do and you will get your rights. You have to fight for your rights but let me tell you that the retail grocers of Toronto can do much if they will. You are large in numbers and mighty in power if you only realized it. You come in direct contact with the people and doing so are a power in molding public opinion. But you must have organization and determination."

To Take Him at His Word.

President Miller declared that the peddler nuisance was one of the greatest grievances which the retail grocers of Toronto had, and assured those present that the council would be waited on at an early date in regard to this particular question. He had been approached by grocery organizations in other cities in Ontario on the question of co-operation in matters of mutual interest and believed that by working together much better results could be secured.

THROUGH THE SMOKE CLOUDS.

Robt. Davies in his two-minute 'spiel,' announced an address to be given by W. Miller on "The home duties of a successful grocer," as well as a paper by Dave Bell on "Why a grocer should remain single" They will be given at some future time (perhaps).

The lunch room proved a great attraction early in the evening.

The clay pipes were carried home as souvenirs.

Did you notice that F. Johnston, D. W. Clark, D. Bell and a few other adepts got so interested in euchre that they forgot about lunch?

If the musical hits of the "Canned Goods and Pickled" quartette could be preserved, they should make good sellers.

Dr. Shayne expressed deep interest in the grocery trade. He is a would-be alderman.

West Williams, a traveler, announced himself as candidate for alderman for the year (yet he didn't seem quite certain). However, he expects to be the youngest yet.

BAG MAKING AND PACKETING MACHINERY.

Lovell's Bag and Packet Machinery, Ltd., London, Eng., are placing on the market several machines of interest to grocery manufacturers. Among them are a combined bag-making and packing machine for packing in printed or plain bags or cartons; an interchangeable square bottom bag machine for making paper bags with the square hand-made shaped bottom; a machine for making cone or kite-shaped bags, printed or unprinted, etc.

Retailers Uniting to Buy Direct

Vancouver Dealers Claim Wholesale Fruit and Produce Merchants are Selling to Their Customers — Co-operative Buying Association Contemplated.

Vancouver, B.C., Dec. 21—(Special).—Vancouver grocers are likely to take decisive action against the Vancouver Wholesale Fruit and Produce Association because of the latter selling direct to the hotel and cafe trade. There has been trouble over this for some time, and it was thought adjustment had been made, but at the last meeting of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association a letter was received from the wholesalers stating they were going to sell, and it was reported by members that a start had been made. It was decided to form a joint stock company, stock to be issued only to grocers, to deal in a co-operative wholesale way in fruit and produce. Due notification of this move was sent to the Wholesale Fruit and Produce Association as a reply to their letter.

The Retailer's Contention.

The grocers feel rather strongly over the matter. Many of the produce men, they, say, started with small capital and have done good business because the retailers stayed with them. Now that they are getting fairly well off financially the attempt is made to capture the larger sources of trade. They overlook the fact, the retailers claim, that the business would come to them anyway, for the retailers would buy through them. They argue, however, that several of the places are buying direct, and for that reason, they are justified in passing the retailer by. On the other hand, the retail dealer points out that the wholesalers cannot get any business that goes direct anyway, so that they are no better off.

Members to Hold the Stock.

The directors of the Retail Grocers' Association were appointed a committee to take immediate action toward forming the new wholesale association. With the members taking stock, they will thus be doing business with themselves.

The matter has been discussed before and at the annual meeting it was pointed out that the only way to overcome this difficulty was to get busy and take offensive action. Even if the wholesalers were to give way now, the retailers feel that it would only be a matter of time before the same difficulty cropped up again. If the formation of the new association were suspended, it would be only after a written contract is drawn up to which the wholesalers would be held closely.

BISCUIT FACTORY BURNED.

Disastrous Fire Visits D. S. Perrin & Co. —Confectionery Section Not Much Damaged.

London, Ont., Dec. 21.—Fire visited the biscuit and confectionery plant of D. S. Perrin & Co., here, last Friday night, doing considerable damage, particularly to the biscuit section. It is difficult to estimate the loss until the adjusters have completed their work, but it is unofficially estimated at somewhere between $100,000 and $200,000. This loss is fully covered by insurance, apart from the inconveniences caused to the operation of the business.

The candy department is practically intact, but owing to the adjusters being in charge, and it being holiday time, the few orders not already sent out will necessarily have to be held.

The biscuit department was almost completely destroyed, but every effort will be made by the company to have it running at the earliest time possible.

The west wall of building of M. Masuret & Co., wholesale grocers, adjoining the Perrin factory, sustained some damage through falling bricks and water. This wall will likely have to be rebuilt.

MAPLE SYRUP STANDARDS.

Ottawa, Dec. 21.—A new standard for maple syrup has been prescribed by the Department of Inland Revenue on the recommendation of Chief Analyst McGill, Dr. W. H. Ellis, and Dr. J. T. Donald, of the Advisory Board.

During the last season 456 samples were examined, of which 31, while of undoubted genuineness failed to reach the legal requirements. When worked for the lead number of what is known as the Hinton method, 15 others were below standard. The new regulations prescribe that the syrup shall contain not more than 10 per cent. of water, yield not less than six-tenths of one per cent. of ash, nor less than three-tenths per cent. of malic acid.

PHONE SERVICE INCREASED.

Vancouver, B.C., Dec. 21.—(Special)—Another little expense has been added to the grocer's list. Announcement has been made of the increase of the cost of telephone service feom $4 per month to $5. The rate prevailing is $5, with a discount of $1, if paid by the 18th of the month. Needless to say the careful dealer sees that he gets this $1, which makes his expense $4. Now the gross rate is to be $6, starting on the first of the year, with a discount of $1. This increase is made because an arbitration board decided that linemen were entitled to more pay from the company. House telephones do not cost more.

An advice from New Brunswick says that farmers who usually at this time have over half their potato crop held back in storage have this season not a quarter of a crop left in reserve. Canada is now importing English potatoes which can be placed right now in Montreal at a living profit.

PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY.

OUR GREETINGS TO YOU.

This issue of The Canadian Grocer appears in holiday dress to greet its many readers with a Merry Christmas.

The present is a season of friendship—a season of "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men;" a season when we remember our friends and forget we have enemies.

We are almost on the brink of a new year. Have we done our part in the past twelve months to elevate the standing of the grocery trade in Canada? Has this Christmas time brought a realization of the moral obligations we are under to serve the trade in a business-like and honest way? It is a season for reflection.

We trust all our readers—subscribers and advertisers—have enjoyed a full measure of prosperity during the past year; and that in the year to come this prosperity will be increased. Prospects are particularly bright for the future and it is with a feeling of gladness indeed, that, under such auspicious trade conditions, we have this privilege of extending our Holiday Greetings.

SUGAR MARKET WEAK.

On Saturday last, sugar was reduced another 10 cents per cwt. making the second decline of that amount since the easiness set in. This marks the turning point from the highest level reached by sugar in 22 years.

The past week has cleared the sugar situation a great deal. In the first place the estimates of the European beet crop have been increased by th amount of 200,000 tons, the yield now being estimated at 6,250,000 tons as against the original estimate of 6,050,000 tons. Furthermore the prospects for the new Cuban crop are good and present estimates are between 300,000 and 400,000 tons in excess of last year. The Brussels convention has been adjourned until Jan. 29, but it is conceded that the convention will ultimately allow Russia to increase her export of sugar.

Thus do these several features point to continued easiness. The normal shortage of beet sugar for the year was 1,000,000 tons. Increase in the estimates of European beet and also those for Cuban over last year make up over one half of this. New York prices are conceded to have just about adjusted themselves but Canadian markets have not as yet. A continuanee of the movement already commenced is expected.

AFTER CHRISTMAS.

During the week between Christmas and New Years there are many items the retailer should feature. Among these are oysters, figs, dates, table raisins, cocoa, coffee, oranges, lemons, poultry, confectionery and all other holiday stock.

New Years in many homes is as big a festive day as Christmas. Families are united and every other house has one or more visitors.

Oysters will form the food for many a late supper and should be given much attention; cocoa and coffee will be wanted for similar functions and confectionery also. The above mentioned dried fruits will be required for eating and baking purposes; oranges are necessary and hot lemonade is a good subject to introduce to assist lemon sales. Fancy biscuits is another easy seller.

Above all every dealer should see that every purely holiday line should be moved out before the end of next week. Crackers, stockings, fancy biscuits in yuletide containers, etc., after the new year will be hard to sell. If necessary give these goods to one clerk during the last day or two and let him devise selling methods to clear them out. The money will be of more use in the cash register than in semi-dead or dead stock.

GOVERNMENT SCALE INSPECTION.

The Grocer has frequently pointed out in the past that it is not fair to have a dealer pay for his scale inspection and particularly when the scale is found to be correct.

This question has been frequently taken up by associations and many opinions have been expressed by retailers themselves. The Retail Merchants' Association have already requested the Federal parliament to deal with it and it is likely to come up during the present session.

Now is the time when every dealer who uses a scale should interview his local member to exert his influence. That a merchant should pay for inspection of his scale does not appear to be at all fair. If a scale is found correct, then there was no need for inspection and the merchant is out his two or three dollars simply because an inspector has called. If the scale is found to be wrong it is in the interests of the general public to have it corrected, and unless it is due to dishonesty on the part of the dealer, the inspector should be paid by the government.

Let every merchant assist in united action by laying his views before his local member immediately. If the injustices of this system are earnestly presented to members of the government much good will be done before the question comes up for consideration.

WESTERN WHEAT SITUATION.

Another week of ideal threshing weather has prevailed and as a result many who a few weeks ago were making arrangements to have their notes carried over for six months at the least, are now contemplating paying them off as soon as they can secure cars to carry their wheat to the market. The congestion of cars referred to frequently during the last three weeks has been a serious handicap in the marketing of grain, and while as seen by the figures in a past issue a larger proportion of grain had been marketed up to Nov. 30 than last year, yet owing to the increased crop there are many thousands of bushels still waiting shipment.

Some trouble is being encountered at the elevators upon selling this grain as a lot of ice is mixed with it and it is hard to sell the same. Reports have been received where several elevator companies have refused to accept grain that has been threshed after the arrival of the first snow storm. In spite of this, however, threshing is still being continued and from Alberta comes the statement that only 10 per cent. of that crop is left to be threshed. When it is remembered that this was one of the latest provinces to mature its crop, the great benefit of the mild weather during the last month can be easily seen.

FAIR JUDGMENT FOR FRUIT MEN.

Fruit commission men in Toronto have for a long time held a grievance against the customs department of the government which is now likely to be corrected.

The Customs office closes at four o'clock whether there are any people inside the building to be served or not. It has frequently happened that a rush of cars would arrive late in the afternoon and a consequent rush to get them through the Customs followed. Clerks would be in line within one or two places of the wicket when four o'clock would strike, and all business for the day be declared over. With perishable fruit standing in cars the result was sometimes a considerable loss to the fruit men.

Dr. Reid, Minister of Customs, has promised to see that representatives of the commission houses shall be served so long as they are inside the customs building before four o'clock.

FINDS OUR CARTOONS USEFUL.

A Toronto grocer, in conversation with a member of the staff recently, commended the series of cartoons which we have been running in recent months. He mentioned particularly the one which appeared in our issue of November 3, where a loaf of bread has dropped on the floor.

"A couple of weeks ago," he said, "my delivery boy was doing up a loaf of bread for a woman when he dropped it on the floor. Boy-like, he thoughtlessly picked it up and started to wrap it up as if nothing had happened. Being there, I told him to put that bread out in the back shop, and to get the customer a fresh loaf. After the customer had gone out I looked up this cartoon and showed it to the boy. He was duly impressed, and I do not think will make the same mistake again."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Importers are criticizing recent rises in ocean freight rates. Lemons, olive oil, dried fruits, etc., are being affected in price.

The crop of Louisana pecans this season will be the largest in many years, according to a recent report. Texas pecans will be short this year.

The high price of raw material and extra cost of production is likely to result in increase in price of evaporated milk. Dealers should make careful note of this intimation.

Irish and other varieties of potatoes from the English markets are being brought to Canada. The first shipment of these arrived in Montreal this week. They range at about the same price as New Brunswicks.

This is the last call for contestants in The Grocer's window dressing and ad. writing contests. See that you mail your photograph and Christmas advertisement before Dec. 31. Full particulars appear on another page of this issue.

A Quebec City by-law will come into effect on Jan. 1 respecting early closing. This calls for the closing among others of grocery stores at 7 o'clock. The penalty for infringement is fine of $40 or 2 months sentence. The retail business is slowly but surely being elevated to a higher standard.

A man in Stratford, Ont., has been fined $50 on each of three charges for selling without a license. If the authorities of every village, town and city were on the alert the police court revenues would be rapidly enlarged and at the same time the merchants who pay the bulk of the taxes would be protected.

The Woman's Branch of the Humane Society of St. Thomas, Ont., will ask merchants of the railway city to close their stores at 6 o'clock week nights and at 9 o'clock Saturdays and nights prior to holidays. Their idea is that such a move would tend to keep the children off the streets at night. Where the reform that cannot boast of a woman's boost?

Grocery specialties for Christmas day should not be forgotten. Most families like to have something special for the table Suggest such lines as meat sauces, olives, pickles, imported peas in glass, mushrooms, jams, jellies, marmalade, cream cheese, peanut butter, apple butter, asparagus, haricots, succotash, etc. Some of these you will find will sell well with a little attention to counter and showcase display.

"Hurricanes, resulting in vast damage to banana plantations in Honduras have been the cause of advancing price of bananas here," says a dispatch from Chicago. "Not more than 30 per cent. of importer's orders have been received and desks are covered with unfilled orders. One dealer says that output from that banana growing country will fall short 50 per cent." There seems to have been plenty of bananas on Canadian markets to supply the Christmas demand.

News comes from England that the British Government will not accept contracts to supply the army and navy from United States packing firms against whom prosecutions have been instituted under Trusts and Combines Act. Canadian packers believe, that while Canada could not begin to fill these immense contracts, yet the action of the British government will be favorable to them. Argentina will in all probability land the contracts and therefore will leave room for bigger trade being done in Canadian products.

Features of Christmas Announcements

Good Advertisment Contains Names of Goods in Stock, Something Distinctive About Each and Their Prices — Value of Heading That Will Arrest Attention.

THE GROCER has received a number of Christmas announcements and newspaper advertisements for criticism, but space in this issue does not permit reference to, or reproductions of, them all.

W. H. Manders, manager of the John Stetson store, Hibernia St., Montreal, sends a neat announcement, front page of which is reproduced herewith. In writing to The Grocer he says :—

Editor Canadian Grocer :—I am enclosing a copy of a circular we have just issued for the holiday season, and would like through the medium of The Grocer to hear your opinion of same as a business getter.

We address all those envelopes and mail same ; no doubt it is somewhat expensive, but in past has always well paid by the results.

In passing, I would just mention tion how much I appreciate The Grocer, and I never fail to read it thoroughly, and have been helped many a time by the suggestions mentioned.

Trusting to hear your criticism on my circular, I remain,

H. H. MANDERS, Manager.

Montreal, Dec. 14, '11.

The envelope referred to contained name and address of the proprietor in upper left hand corner, opposite which appeared the words : "Xmas Greetings." The front page of the booklet is quite attractive, the original being 10 inches by 4¼ inches in dimensions. The booklet itself was one sheet of cardboard folded inward twice, making six pages. Pages two, three, four, five and six were occupied with a list of goods and their prices. A particularly good feature of the list is that something interesting is given about each article. For instance, referring to butter, it says : "Every housewife knows to what a price butter has gone, and it is still on the advance.

We have 2000 lbs. finest creamery bought when market was much lower, worth to-day 36c. For our Holiday Sale, 31½c. Not more than 5 lbs. to one customer."

Again, the booklet reads in reference to nuts : "No table seems complete during the holiday season without a dish of mixed nuts, etc." This is particularly good advertising, and is to be highly commended.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

POINTERS.—

Sugar.—Another 10c decline.

Tea.—Indian and Ceylon weaker.

Dried Fruits.—Generally firm.

Montreal, Dec. 21.—The week before Christmas finds the wholesale trade fairly busy, although there is not the measure of trade that has been felt of late. The weather man has been rather thoughtless in his pre-Christmas offering. It was too mild and country roads were not in the best of condition. The result, it may be safely said, has been to curtail trade slightly. The present week opened favorably and it is felt that to a large extent trade will make up any deficiencies that may have been felt. It is not expected that the new year will find much of a reaction as far as prices are concerned. There may be a few lines that will show an easier feeling, but for the most part the markets are firmly held and the passing of the holidays is not likely to have an appreciable effect.

SUGAR.—On Saturday last another decline of ten cents was announced. The market had been weak and this decrease was expected. The tendency is to seek still lower prices although it is thought that no further reduction will be noted until the turn of the year. However, the market is uncertain. Buying is not on a heavy scale, particularly with the holiday season at its height.

DRIED FRUITS.—The general tone of this market is firm. Demand has dropped to those who have been late in their purchases and there are always some who wait until the last minute, or those who have to buy from hand to mouth. Some of the trade are so busy just before the holiday they are unable to follow their stocks closely. A wholesaler told of an instance of a retailer last year who found himself out of sugar on the big day of the Christmas trade. He had been so busy that he entirely overlooked his supplies and here on the very eve of the holiday he had to buy a staple like sugar. Prunes are still firm and currants have lost none of their strength. Sultana raisins are stronger in tone and the situation might be summed in saying that there is scarcely an item under this heading that is weak. The new year should find but little change in the situation.

TEAS.—The market has not undergone any change as far as the retailer is concerned, but one report in regard to Indian and Ceylon teas states that slightly lower prices are accounted for by a falling off in quality which, however it is claimed was not proportionate to the extent of the decline in price. The lower rates brought out active demand. The decline is partly explained by the approach of Christmas season. Cables of heavy shipments from both India and Ceylon for November had effect of depressing market. The production is pretty well accounted for and stocks are practically entirely accounted for. The position of China tea is exceedingly strong, this report states, crops being only moderate. Japan teas are firm and are in rather small compass.

Canned Goods.

MONTREAL.—The situation of the tomato market in United States is significant. It is only a short time ago that price quoted was between 80 and 90 cents, but the market has been rising steadily until it is now from $1.12½ to $1.15. At this price United States goods brought into Canada could not be handled at less than $1.70. There is a good demand for tomatoes just now, and as previously stated, the present supply must extend until about the end of next September. There is a scarcity of refugee and golden wax beans, supplies of which are reported entirely out of first hands.

The United States markets report a similar scarcity and prices are firm. Strawberries and raspberries continue to hold strong position. One carload of former sold at $2.20 this week, and another of the latter at $2.60. For smaller quantities, however, a higher price is naturally being asked.

TORONTO.—Trade in canned goods is inclined to quietness just now. Consumption around Christmas is not large and retailers' interest is centred elsewhere.

There is strengthening tendency in imported marmalades. One jobber reported that there had been an advance of 10 per cent. in figures that have so far been received The high price of sugar as well as fruit is reason given. It is pointed out that marmalade has to be made now and sugar used has to be purchased at high price.

The fact that one firm has withdrawn prices on evaporated milk would indicate tendency towards higher prices. One firm pointed out that on account of high prices as well as the scarcity of raw material higher prices on evaporated milk were not unlikely at an early date. Condensed milk was generally advanced early in the fall.

Toronto, Dec. 21.—Christmas trade is about at end for another year. It no doubt has had its good and bad features. Serious delays in many cases made matters difficult for wholesalers. Many lines of raisins, nuts, dates, etc., were late in arriving and even quite late this week found shipments of Christmas necessities going out that had not arrived before. Needless to say under such conditions complaints from retailers whose patience was taxed were not few. Thus even this week there was a fair amount of briskness present.

Conditions in the country have not been particularly conducive to record Christmas trade. Weather has been somewhat unseasonable and roads not in best condition. However, it is hoped that when comparisons are made they will be favorable with other years.

Stocks of nuts have been pretty well cleaned. Brazils for instance are real scarce. Malaga raisins have sold fully up to expectations. Supplies of peels now left are by no means abundant. Figs and dates have been in good demand.

Advances in ocean freight rates are accountable for slightly higher tendency in some lines. While hardly recognizable when figured down to small quantities, still it helps in general strengthening. Labor troubles in Europe and the higher prices that have to be paid for men are reasons given for increased freight rates, some of which are already in action while others will be imposed at beginning of the year.

Country travelers will holiday until after New Year's. Majority of wholesalers are preparing for stock-taking at end of the month.

Sugar.—Prices went down another 10 cents on Saturday last, bringing local figures down to $5.75. During little more than a week spot beet quotations have declined from 16s to 14s 7½d. A continuance of the movement already in evidence is expected. While some do not look for any changes before the turn of the year, a decline even before that time would not be a surprise. Sales as natural under present conditions, are not brisk.

Dried Fruits.—Fancy lines, especially of dried fruits have been selling well. Currants, raisins, dates and figs are in. The Christmas trade has cleaned up stocks of Malaga raisins fully as well as expected. Peels have been closely cleaned up, the lines in scarcity differing with different firms. Buying between wholesale houses on this line was not uncommon on the street this week.

Currants in the primary markets do not lack certain degree of strength. A special report to The Grocer from Patras, Greece, says of currants: "There has been practically no change in prices on this market since late October but market remains firm but quiet owing to lack of demand from abroad, a feature which seems natural in view of fact that shipments so far are about 12,000 tons more than those of last season for the same period. The total amount of shipments to date are over 87,000 tons net. Stocks are estimated to be between 32,000 and 35,000 tons, and it is calculated that the world's demand all this season will come up to 118,000 to 120,000 tons. The statistical position therefore is undoubtedly strong. This explains confident feeling prevailing in this market in spite of lack of interest from abroad."

Evaporated Apples.—The market has improved slightly of late, both here and in the United States. Prices are a little high for export business.

Dried apples are practically an export article and prices are almost equal to evaporated. There is a fairly large quantity in the country but buyers have paid as high as 7½ to 8 cents.

Olive Oil.—"All forecasts are still in favor of a good crop," says a report from France "on olive oil," and should nothing occur we shall get olive oils of very good quality, to a sufficient amount and at reasonable prices. But oil making hardly begins before January and later in some localities. The fruit is sound and it will be to interest of growers not to gather it before completely ripe.

Such backwardness in the appearance of the first new oils explains why old crop oil is still so firmly held.

Winnipeg, Dec. 21.—With the closing of last week wholesale Christmas trade may be said to have been completed for present season. As stated before, all local firms are greatly pleased with conditions that have existed and expressed themselves as being gratified with volume of trade that their respective houses have conducted this year. Owing to the congestion in the railroads many shipments have been delayed, but all may be said to have been forwarded now. This will, of course, result in many retail merchants throughout the country receiving their supplies later than usual, but it is expected that there will be time enough for them to get rid of their stocks before the season is over.

Reports from collection departments show that some improvement is taking place, while they are by no means as good as would be desired. The delay is due to fact that the farmer is rarely able to get cars to move his grain. As soon as he has succeeded in marketing his grain it will mean a settlement all around, and as threshing is still continuing these settlements are taking place daily. The Christmas sales, in spite of bad collections, were better all round this year than last for all classes, and it is anticipated that a steady business will be still carried on even after the holiday season is over.

In general lines trade has been fairly steady, and no changes in price are noticed. Travelers are expected to return for their Christmas holidays within a few days, and the next two weeks will be devoted to the preparing of orders for shipment after the new year.

Dried Fruits.—As predicted last week, California raisins have already started to go higher and an advance of ½c per lb. is noticed this week. As reported last week, this line is looked upon by many as good buy in the market and the demand at present time is only normal. Prunes are also strong and reports indicate that greater portion of stocks are out of hands of packers. As sales are strong and supply light, prospects are bright for exceedingly high prices next year. The Christmas trade in all lines has been excellent and wholesalers and retailers feel congenial over trade in general.

Evaporated Apples.—Stocks of evaporated apples at present in city are rather heavy, but sales continue to hold fairly strong. As stated last week, prices range around 10c flat Winnipeg, and if any change takes place it is likely to be an advance.

Nuts.—The general trade this season has been large in all lines of nuts. At present time Brazil nuts are practically cleaned up on local market. Last year some Manchuria nuts were brought in and found a ready market, but this line has not made its appearance this winter. New prices on new crop of peanuts have arrived and show a decline of ½c per lb. Stocks of this new crop will not be forwarded for two months at least.

Split Peas and Beans.—Split peas are reported to be scarce and prices to be holding firm around last week's advance. PROVISIONS.—The provision market during the last three weeks has shown considerable activity. Pure lard is in good demand. As the high price of 40c is being asked for butter, it has driven many housewives to substitute it whenever possible for this expensive luxury. Supplies of light hogs have been fairly steady and prices are ranging around $7.50 to $7.75 per cwt. delivered Winnipeg.

Butter.—As hinted in these columns of late, the butter market is strong, and while no change has taken place yet, supplies on hand are not as heavy as they were on this date last year. Fresh made creamery bricks are still quoted at 34c and crown at 32c. This means that the retail price for best butter is 40c a lb. In dairy butter the situation is also unchanged and prices remain as heavy as they were last week, namely :

Eggs. — Shipment of eggs has been light during the week and wholesalers are now offering storage eggs for sale. Manitoba fresh egg cases returned are offered at 35 to 47c per doz. Storage eggs are quoted at 25 to 32c. These prices show a considerable increase over last week.

Cheese.—There is little doing in the cheese market as supplies are light and prices high. The only line being quoted by many is Ontario cheese, delivered Winnipeg, at 16¾c to 17c per lb.

Poultry.—This line is causing much interest at the present time, as the Christmas season which commenced this week is expected to be an active one. The majority of ducks, turkeys and geese this year to supply this trade are being secured either locally or across the border in North Dakota and Minnesota. Little eastern poultry is being brought west this year, as it is reported that the quality of the birds being received from the above mentioned places is far superior to those received from the east. Those birds received from the south are of better quality than those received locally, as they are fed and fattened before marketed. Wholesalers are expecting a big trade this year and have consequently been stocking heavily. Wholesale prices existing at the present time are :—

Turkeys, 24½c per lb.

Geese, 18c per lb.

Ducks, 20c per lb.

Chickens, 19c per lb.

WINNIPEG. — A good demand is in existence when the season is taken into consideration. In fact it is agreed by all that trade is a little better than it was this time last year. Supplies on hand are light in comparison with last year, and it has been predicted by many that prices will go higher during Lenten season. Winter fishing for white fish is just starting on the lakes and no reports on catches have as yet been received. Prices prevailing for the more important lines are :—

Halibut, 8c per lb.

Salmon, 10c per lb.

White fish, 8½c per lb. on scales at the lake shore.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Dec. 1.—The Christmas trade up to the beginning of the week had not produced any change of particular interest in local markets. Grocers are handling a greatly increased business, and the rush period is being looked for this week. Indications are that the trade will be above the standard of other years. In so far as prices are concerned there are practically no changes. Buckwheat is a little higher, and cornmeal as well. The chief article of interest at the present time, is of course, the Christmas bird, the turkey, and these are now bringing 23 and 24 cents a pound. Indications are that they will be a little easier before the holiday, as it is said the farmers are holding back their supply for the purpose of catching the Christmas trade. Geese range from $1.35 to $1.50, while chickens sell from 75 cents to $1.35. It is thought that poultry will be quite plentiful this season. Eggs are almost beyond the reach of the average buyer, as for hennery stock 50 cents and in some cases as high as 60 cents has been asked. Butter is firm and sells from 21 to 32 cents. Potatoes are still bringing from $1.75 to $2 Quotations are as follows:

NEW NORWEGIAN SARDINES WILL BE LARGE

On Account of Small Catch, Price of Olive Oil and Tin Plate Prices are Likely to Rule High.

As there is a goodly quantity of Norwegian sardines sold in Canada, dealers will be interested in the catch and market.

Fishing has been going on for some time. The situation is a peculiar one. The fish this year have been quite scarce and have run to extremely large sizes. In ordinary times a tin of these sardines runs from 24 to 28 fish. This year the best eating qualities will run from 16 to 20 fish per tin. The large fish are, however, quite good in quality.

One broker advises the grocer who buys Norwegian sardines this year to see that he gets large fish. If he does not receive large fish he says he is either getting old stock or winter caught fish which are smaller because not sufficiently nourished.

There are several contributing causes towards high prices this year. In the first place there is the shortage in fish. Only about 50 per cent. of original requirement will be received. Then olive oil, in which they are packed, as the dealer knows, is very high in price this year, while in addition the price of tin plate is at a high level.

Quite high prices ruled last year and dealers were anticipating lower figures this season, but conditions would indicate a continuance to firmness.

a little too much matter. There is just enough holly border and the bells are appropriate. But if half the type were omitted, leaving twice as much white space, it would look much better. Some of the reading matter might have been placed at the top of the second page. There are, also, too many varieties of display type in use. This is the fault of the printer, and has the effect of causing confusion among the nerves of the eye. One series of type should be adhered to throughout.

Start With Good Heading.

MacLeod & MacBain, the 2 Macs, Ingersoll, Ont., issued a Christmas goods circular 24 inches by 16 inches, reduced reproduction of which is shown here. The chief feature of this is the large number of articles quoted and their prices. Christmas buyers certainly like to have a list of goods they are thinking about and the price of them.

The introduction of the announcement might have been improved upon. Instead of using the firm name some striking caption would probably appeal more quickly. The writer would have featured the Fruit Cleaner mentioned. For instance: YOU HAVE ADVANTAGE OF OUR OWN FRUIT CLEANER," would have arrested much attention, unless, of course, the fact has been well advertised for a long time before.

In some cases there are short special references to the goods advertised. But there is not enough of this. Referring to nuts, something could be said of their food qualities, the heat producing oil, etc. Same applies to dried fruits, cranberries, marmalade, etc. There should be something distinctive about each. This has a greater tendency to cause a prospective customer to buy. This is the kind of material that brings results in the newspaper when displayed properly and prices are quoted. While circulars are good in many cases, yet, as the dealer knows from his own personal experience, they are too often relegated to the waste-paper basket.

Country Dealer's Method of Stock Taking

Some Points That Need Special Attention—Quiet Time Selected for the Work—Care Should be Taken to Carefully Prepare Inventory—Tabulating the Goods on the Shelves.

Those merchants who have made stock-taking a yearly or semi-yearly practice are high in their praise of the benefits derived. If a canvass of them could be made it would be found they would strongly advise merchants who have not been in the habit of doing so, to come over into the ranks of the safe business men. Far is it from the writer's idea to infer that all dealers who take stock are successful business men or those who do not are not, but the good business man is much more likely to be found in the ranks of those who take stock.

It is not given as the best method possible but will at least present an idea of the procedure to those who have never taken stock.

All Containers Weighed.

It was the custom in this store to prepare for stock-taking when opportunity presented itself for some time ahead. For instance whenever a sugar drawer, a rice box or for that matter a container or holder of any kind happened to be empty, it was weighed Thus, when taking stock, the container with goods enclosed, was placed on the scale, the Statement illustrating figures every merchant should have at least once a year.

A Business Reflector.

Stock-taking is the business man's X-ray It enables him to tell exactly where he stands and to judge how his business is progressing with a much greater degree of accuracy than would otherwise be possible. Only by taking stock can he tell how much money he is or is not making, how much money he has tied up in the business, amount of stock, or amount he owes or is owed..

Stock-taking should not present any great degree of difficulty to the grocer. It means some hard work, it is true, but this should slip into the background when the advantages derived are considered. Let us deal first with the method of taking the inventory, listing the goods in stock.

There are various ways of going about the work. It depends somewhat upon the business. Here is a simple system the writer met with in a country store. marked weight of the container deducted and the weight of the contents known. The weight of the container was marked plainly in a place where it would not be obliterated, so that it would serve from year to year. For a day or so previous to stock-taking no more goods than really necessary were unpacked or emptied. This left the deck as clear as possible for operations. Buying was also allowed to lag as much as possible.

The Best Time.

Immediately after the Christmas rush was the time selected. The slackest day of the week was decided upon for the work. Part of the staff was allotted to waiting on customers, assisting the others when possible. One or two clerks, weighed and counted the goods and called them out to the recorder who set down the figures in the stock book. Number and amount of different lines were given and if cost price were on the package, it was called out also. Otherwise it was necessary to specify the brand and size so that the cost could be looked up later. A clerk worked down one row of shelves at a time, then the next, etc., so that nothing would be missed. Time was not taken to pile the goods back evenly on the shelf. That was left until later and is one of the advantages of stock-taking, allowing a rearrangement of goods. Stickers and goods that should be moving, were thrown out, so that selling efforts could be put behind them when stock-taking had been finished.

Any goods that have been recorded which are sold while stock-taking is going on must be kept track of, and the amount deducted from the cash on hand for they cannot appear in the inventory and the cash or credit accounts also.

There is another method sometimes employed in which the record of goods is not made until all has been finished. As each line is counted a slip bearing the amount is left and if any is sold from that line, it is deducted from the amount on the slips. When finished these slips are gathered and the amounts recorded in the stock book.

Drawing up the Inventory.

We are now well on our way towards the making of a general inventory that will acquaint us with the standing of our business, and which when compared with previous records of its kind will show us how much we have made within that period.

Just as soon as stock-taking is finished, other items that enter into the yearly statement have to be secured for they must all be taken at the same time, otherwise if further business is carried on, some items will be duplicated. The cash in the register and on hand must be counted, deducting the amount of goods which were recorded and afterwards sold. The value of the fixtures must be estimated and care should be taken not to over-estimate them or balance will look larger than it really is. The amount on the books, the amount owed, notes payable and receivable, cash in bank and other resources and liabilities of the business should be secured.

J. M. Waterman, manager of the Lima Bean Growers' Association of California, will make a trip through Canada early in 1912, according to a recent despatch. His plan is to place agents of the association on this side of the boundary and to introduce dried lima beans in sections where they are not handled. He will leave for the Dominion about January 15th.

Canada's Flour Trade With the Indies

Government Correspondent Gives Opinions on How it Can be Increased—Not Enough Care Given to Methods of Shipment—Hot Climate Prevents Flour Keeping Long.

A correspondent to the Dominion Government who has travelled throughout the West India Islands, in giving his impressions on trade questions, deals with some shortcomings of Canadian manufacturers which, if corrected, would mean increased trade with our sister colonies.

"There are quite a number of articles produced in Canada," he says, "that might find a market in the colonies to a much larger extent than they do if a little more attention were given to the development of that trade. Perhaps the one in which the largest development could be made is flour. A considerable quantity now finds its way there, but much more might be done.

"Several facts militate against the trade. It must be borne in mind that the Indies is a hot climate all the year round and consequently flour will not keep long there, which necessitates the sending of brands of good which-will-keep quality. For the above reason, too, West Indian importers will not take flour in large quantities. It is necessary, therefore, for them to order often and not infrequently by cable.

Promptness With Orders.

"To meet those conditions Canadian exporters should keep large stocks at seaboard so that orders can be filled promptly. Importers in the islands have stated that when they send an order to Canada it is often some weeks before they can get it filled, while by sending to New York for it the orders come by return boat.

"Another trouble is that Canadian shippers appear to lose sight of the fact of the heat of the climate, and flour is shipped in barrels, the timber of which has not been sufficiently seasoned for that hot country. In consequence it shrinks, and when the flour is being unloaded at the docks, there is considerable waste through its shaking between the staves. These and other difficulties may not seem small to Canadians, but it must be borne in mind that nearly all the business people in the Islands are English and they want what they want and when they want it as they want it.

Requirements as Ordered.

"Still another difficulty in regard to flour was the complaint that Canadian shippers were not particular enough about sending the brand ordered, but were too ready to substitute when not having the required one. One large importer of flour in Trinidad complained about this alleged habit of Canadian shippers.

"The shipment of lumber, potatoes and dried fish from the Maritime Provinces has, of course, been long established and is well unuerstood by the people down by the sea.

"Very much more could be said along these lines, yet all through the Islands the people are friendly disposed toward Canada and Canadians."

TO TEST B. C. ACT.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association has decided to test the validity of the Extra-Provincial Companies Licensing Act of British Columbia. It will take the first suitable case of violation of this Act to carry the matter even to the Privy Council, in order to test the constitutionality of the Act under the terms of the British North America Act. This announcement has been made by the secretary of the association, G. M. Murray.

THE NEW SARDINE CO.

Many Canadian Sardines Now Packed In United States—Factory In New Brunswick.

Montreal, Dec. 21.—(Special.)—Further details are at hand regarding the proposed industry for the packing of Canadian sardines. It is claimed that eighty-five per cent of the sardine catch along the Atlantic coast is packed in the United States. There are a number of individual packers in this country but their output is comparatively limited. For years United States packers of Canadian sardines have carried on an extensive trade in Australia, South America and elsewhere, taking advantage of the splendid fishing grounds off the Atlantic coast of Canada to supply them with their material.

A new Canadian company has been formed in Montreal, with Geo. F. Johnston, of Johnston, McConnell & Allison, as president. The capitalization has been placed at $1,000,000, and among the directors are Sir William VanHorne, G. M. Bosworth, vice-president of the C.P. R., W. R. MacInnes, R. B. VanHorne, and W. J. Shaughnessy.

As previously stated, the headquarters of the new industry will be at Chamcook, three miles from St. Andrew's, N. B., where a big plant will be erected in time for next season's catch. Large piers and a number of workmen's cottages built of concrete will be erected.

Arrangements are being made to install machinery for the packing of larger fish in addition to sardines.

About 600 men and women, according to officials, will be employed by the new company. Chas. Haycock, formerly of the Seacoast Packing Co., of Eastport, Me., will be the secretary-treasurer of the new concern.

MERCHANTS IN LEGISLATURE.

With Fifteen of Them—Rights of Dealers Should be Carefully Guarded.

Merchants form an important factor in the make-up of the new Ontario Legislature, although the lawyers are the largest in number of any profession as was the case in the old parliament.

Fifteen merchants during the next four years will have a part in enacting Ontario legislation, and with this large representation of business men looking after their rights, the interests of Ontario merchants should be carefully guarded.

Here is the list:—Albert Grigg, Algoma; R. H. McElroy, Carleton; J. J. Preston, East Durham; Geo. Sulman, West Kent; Henri Morel, Nipissing; S. G. M Nesbitt, E. Northumberland; Sam Clarke, W. Northumberland; Wm. H. Hoyle, North Ontario; James Torrance, North Perth; Damase Racine Russell; Robt. Shillington, Temiskaming; S. Grant, East Hastings; Walter Ferguson, East Kent; Thos. Marshall, Monck; Jas. Thompson, East Peterboro.

WESTERN ONTARIO TRAVELERS.

New Officers Elected—Donald Ferguson The President.

London, Ont., Dec. 21.—Donald Ferguson was elected president of the Western Ontario Travelers' Association over R. E. Davis, after a six weeks' campaign, which brought out over 1,331 votes. H. H. Rennie defeated E. N. Hanna for second vice-president, while the other officers were: First vice-presdent, H. W. Lind (acclamation); directors, C. W. McGuire, R. Bruce Wanless, G. Morley Adams, J. H. Hiscocks, A. E. Cowley, M. M. Messer and Colin Currie.

Glen Wilson defeated A. E. Ferte in election for vice-presidency of the Travelers' Mutual Benefit Association.

ROMANTIC SETTING TO CHRISTMAS ANNOUNCEMENT.

Grocer Tells of Goods, Their Quality and Prices in a New Way.

A traveler has been good enough to send The Grocer a unique retailer's Christmas announcement. The introduction is written in rhyme, contrasting forcibly with the usual straight prose variety. It is the product of Isaac Kaiser, Woodbridge, Ont., and will be read with interest. Here it is :

ZEPHIRIM HEBERT,
New President of Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild.

TO OUR PATRONS.

An invitation free to all,
Our price is right, our goods are new,
Is what we give to you ;
We trust that you'll not fail to call,
And see what we can do.

We're here to serve you best we can,
And so with us you will agree ;
There is happiness for every man
Who drinks our special blend of Tea.

Then again we draw your mind
To something that is really nice ;
Citron, orange, and lemon peel,
We'll surprise you in the price.

Now, how about that Xmas cake,
Our fruit is fresh and new ;
So take no chance and be too late,
But put your order through.

We know the market's good and high
On tomatoes, corn and peas ;
Nevertheless we're going to try
Our customers to please.

But just before the price went high,
We hoarded up a lot,
So in the sweet bye and bye,
We'll be Johnnie on the spot.

So in about a week or more,
Just take a trip and see
Better things than ever before
To fill your Christmas Tree.

We have oranges good and sweet,
Candies, nuts and dates galore ;
Everything that is good to eat
You will find at the PEOPLE'S STORE.

This is all we have to say,
So now we bid you all adieu,
And wish you a Merry Xmas Day.

Following this, on pages 3 and 4 of the announcement, is given list of Christmas goods and prices, and concludes with a number of suitable articles for Christmas presents.

Crucial Moment in Poultry at Hand

Supplies Expected to be Ample for Demand—Turkeys and Chickens Plentiful—Ducks and Geese Not So Much So—Pork Products Somewhat Neglected, With Exception of Lard—Butter Holds Steady—Strong Statistical Position in Cheese.

The crucial moment in poultry is at hand. Soon dealers who purchased heavily will know if they bought wisely or not, and we will know if we have predicted correctly. From present indications it would seem we did. As yet there is nothing to argue otherwise. Supplies of turkeys seem quite plentiful for the occasion and fairly reasonable in price, when compared with other years, and the prices on other meat commodities. It is pointed out that this year our southern neighbor did not buy heavily of our turkeys for their Thanksgiving trade. Then the west has been drawing a goodly quantity of their supplies from the States instead of from Eastern Canada, leaving more in Canadian territory. Chickens are quite ample in supply also, but geese and ducks are not in the same abundance. The biggest rush for poultry comes during the last few days, but dealers expect to be able to meet it.

Consumptive demand for provisions is decidedly slack, and this is reflected in the trade of wholesalers, who cannot be said to be rushed. Interest is expected to brighten after the holiday. The high price of butter has driven the economic housewife to an increased use of lard, which is going out quite freely.

Mild weather of last week in certain sections slackened retail demand for butter somewhat, but the market this week is holding steady under smaller receipts, and a material shrinkage in stocks at several points. Eggs are in good demand with a fair sprinkling of new-laids now arriving.

The cheese market is quiet, but the statistical position is strong, stocks being very small.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—The demand for pure lard, hams and bacon, has been good, but the holiday trade interfered considerably, as the main attraction this week has been poultry, and especially turkeys.

BUTTER.—The quality of butter is reported fair for the most part, but the bulk of supplies are being taken from stocks in store. The mild weather was responsible for a slightly easier feeling, but with cold weather this passed. The market is fairly active with prices well maintained.

POULTRY.—More favorable weather opened the week and a promise was given of lower temperature previous to Christmas. Turkeys, naturally, received much attention, and there was a good supply for holidays. The price was steady and no expectation of higher or lower quotations was expressed. PROVISIONS.—Under pressure of good demand, induced by Christmas cooving, and the high price of butter, lard has strengthened ½ cent per pound. Some firms quote even a slightly higher figure than that. Live hogs remain at about the same level as a week ago, although they have advanced and dropped back 10 cents during the week. Receipts at present are quite heavy.

General demand for provisions is none too brisk, although fair for Christmas week.

EGGS.—This week has brought a big range in the price of new-laid eggs. Last week they were quoted at 50 to 60 cents. This week a couple of firms have reduced them to 40 to 50 cents, giving as the reason an increase in receipts, but there are still a number of firms quoting at 50 to 60 cents. Last week's mild weather no doubt helped in production. Demand for new-laids may probably not be so keen after the passing of the holiday. Storage stocks are firmly held.

POULTRY.—As indicated for several weeks, turkeys are expected to be in ample supply for Christmas. The first of the week was marked by heavier arrivals, and before the last day it is expected that there will be a goodly quantity on the markets. There has even been the opinion expressed that a slight easing in price before the week was up would not be surprise. This, however, remains to be seen. Turkeys are in good supply, as are also chickens, but there is not same number of ducks and geese.

One big dealer stated that if the market did not ease off this week it could be expected to hold at the present figure for some time after the holiday.

CANNING FIRM INCORPORATED.

As Intimated in The Grocer Previously, it Will be Known as British-Canadian Canners.

The "British Canadian Canners, Ltd." with head offices at Montreal, has been incorporated with a capital stock of one million dollars. They will manufacture canned goods, condiments, pickles, jams, jellies, etc. The provisional directors are: George Cousins and Edward Penny, barristers-at-law; Patrick Brown, secretary; Samuel Mains, accountant, and Wm. Ford, bookkeeper, all of Montreal.

This is the firm referred to in The Grocer of two weeks ago.

Announcement has been made of the incorporation of the "Meadow-Sweet Cheese Manufacturing Company, Limited," capitalized at $75,000, with its place of business in Montreal, Que. This company has absorbed the Meadow-Sweet Cheese Manufacturing Company, and is empowered to act as manufacturers, growers, exporters, importers and dealers of and in butter, cheese, etc., to farm, buy, sell and deal in farm products, domestic animals, etc., etc.

A Mutual Benefit League has been formed in Detroit, according to a newspaper report, to put down the price consumers pay for food. It proposes to buy turkeys, chickens and farm produce from the farmers, and sell them direct to consumers in the city. The chief aim of the league is "to do away with the middleman," a most unworthy one and one that will be difficult to operate successfully.

Christmas Detracts From Flour and Cereals

These Staples Have Been Somewhat Neglected in Holiday Rush—There is More Enquiry From Europe for Flour—Rolled Oats Have Not Changed in Price—Oat Market Remains Steady—Higher Ocean Freight Rate on Flour.

The retail trade is in the thick of the Christmas rush. Specialties and holiday goods are to the fore, while staples are neglected. Flour and cereals have temporarily been shifted to the background and trade is being left to care for itself. However, with the passing of the holidays it will again move up to its regular place and there is every prospect of good trade with opening of the new year.

There has been quite an increase in demand for flour from European sources during past week and bids were more in line with millers' views. Unfavorable reports which stiffen up wheat market are not infrequent from Argentine of late.

Rolled oats is becoming a very uncertain article. Little more than a week ago there came an unexpected decline of 25 cents per barrel in face of steady oat market. It was then generally believed that prices would react again. One big mill even announced on Saturday last they would advance prices 10 cents per sack. However, to date neither this mill not any of the others have changed prices. Some of the mills apparently believed they needed the business even at the lower price because the Christmas trade has brought a slackness in sales for rolled oats.

It has been explained before that the higher freight rates have been somewhat detrimental to export trade in flour. Rate on flour is now 16 to 17 cents per cwt. as against 7 to 8 cents a year ago.

The visible supply of wheat in the United States increased 1,350,000 bushels last week. World's wheat shipments last week totalled 9,120,000 bushels as against 894,400 bushels the previous week and 9,840,000 a year ago.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR.—The market is under influence of holiday spirit that tends to overlook staples as much as possible. However, there is a steady sale but no feature to the market, which remains unchanged.

Straight rollers, in bags	4 30
Manitoba 1st Spring wheat patents, in bags	5 60
" straight patents, in bags	5 10
" strong bakers, in bags	4 90

CEREALS.—Rolled oats are steady and in good demand. The last reduction has strengthened the feeling and a healthy tone is reported. There is nothing specially new in this market for the week.

TORONTO.

FLOUR.—Flour is included in the list of neglected staples which in rush of Christmas have been left pretty nearly to care for themselves. However, with the passing of the holiday season there is every likelihood of this line taking on increased briskness.

None too favorable reports from Argentine instill strength into the market at times. On Monday a new high record for year's crop of Manitoba wheat was reached, $1.09 being the price quoted.

CEREALS.—A week ago it was the general opinion that before another week had passed rolled oats would have strengthened from the last. One firm even stated that on Saturday last prices would go up 10 cents per sack. However, there has been no such advance. The oat market is steady at about the same level as during the past month or so.

Rolled oats in cotton sacks, 5 cents more

WINNIPEG.

FLOUR.—There is little new in the flour market. The local demand is steady and prices holding firm. Export demand is, however, quiet, and small quantities are being exported. A large shipment of flour left by the last boat from the head of the lakes on Dec. 12, but there are still heavy supplies to be forwarded by rail. A fair western business is being transacted, but the Japanese trade is being left entirely in the hands of Pacific coast mills. Prices prevailing at the present are:—

1st Patents	2 90	3rd Patents	2 50
2nd Patents	2 65	1st Clares	2 30

CEREALS. — A good seasonable demand is in existence for rolled oats and market is showing considerable activity. There is no particular change in situation, but demand from all quarters is strong and an active trade it is expected will be in existence all winter.

May Form Provincial Grocers' Association

London and Toronto Dealers Have Matter Under Consideration —Plan to Unite All Grocers of Ontario—Medical Health Officer Interviewed—Want 75 lb. Standard Potato Bag—Cutting of Soap Prices.

Toronto, Dec. 21.—(Special.)—In addition to the nomination of officers for the year 1912, several important questions in connection with the grocery trade were taken up at the regular meeting of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association on Monday night. Among them the possibility of consolidating the various grocers' associations throughout Ontario into one provincial association.

The question has been unofficially discussed with several other associations, and any who have been approached have signified willingness to join in the union. It was a communication from the London grocers, asking the Toronto association if they were still favorable to such a proposition that brought the matter before the meeting.

President Miller dealt with the greater power the association would have by co-operating. In this way they would have a much greater influence with both Provincial and Federal Parliaments in regard to legislation affecting their interests. The plan probably followed, if such an organization were formed, would be for each association to have representation in a provincial executive according to size, and this executive would have power to deal with big questions affecting all the trade. J. S. Bond, D. W. Clark, G. W. Hall, and Mr. Fry, spoke strongly in favor of the formation of such a union, and the London grocers will be assured that the local association is willing to co-operate in such a movement. It was stated that there are about 17 separate retail grocers' associations throughout the province, and it is probable that they will be communicated with at an early date, and their views on the matter secured.

Displaying Fruits Over Sidewalk.

J. S. Bond reported on the interview with the medical health officers by himself, D. W. Clark, and Neil Carmichael, in regard to the meaning of the display by-law. Some grocers had been ordered not to show such lines as pumpkins, potatoes, etc., outside. The association wanted to know if these lines were included in the by-law. The M.H.O. seemed confused and "at sea," and admitted that he didn't really understand the meaning of the by-law. However, he believed that any goods such as potatoes, pumpkins, etc., that had to be peeled or boiled, could be shown outside, and signified his intention of having the by-law amended so that it could be clearly understood.

Weight of Bag of Potatoes.

D. W. Clark thought the standard weight of a bag of potatoes should be placed at 75 pounds, as this would make it exactly five pecks, instead of the odd weight of 80 pounds, as now proposed. The association will petition the Dominion Government to set the weight at 75 pounds for the above reason.

Six for a Quarter.

The old soap question was brought to the front again. Selling at 6 for 25c is still prevalent, the department stores being the chief offenders. One member reported that a department store was getting a supply through a retail grocer and selling it at cut prices, and pointed out that the retail grocers were not standing together in trying to keep the price cutters from getting supplies.

The following nominations for officers for the year 1912 were made —President, R. W. Davies; vice-president, D. W. Clark, G. W. Hall, Mr. Fry; rec.-secretary, C. F. Thorne, Mr. Fry; treasurer, B. Snow, D. McLean, J. S. Bond, D. W. Clark; executive, D. McLean, J. Blood, D. Bell, T. Clarke, N. Carmichael, Mr. Fry, G. W. Hall, R. Mathews, D. W. Clark; trustees, F. Johnston, D. Bell and D. W. Clark.

The elections will take place at the January meeting.

G. W. Hall advised that the association appoint a legislation committee to look after the interests of the grocer in by-laws being enacted by the city council.

J. Munholland, Yonge St., was admitted to the association.

J. Blood thought that vegetables should be sold by weight. If made compulsory the peddler also would have to carry scales.

COMMENTS ON THE SIDE.

"I always weigh my potatoes. A peck measure holds all weights."

"I put my pecks up in paper bags so that the deliveryman does not have to wait to empty them."

"They say soap is going to drop after the first of the year."

"I think the grocers should take more interest in the municipal elections and the several by-laws to be voted on."

"How does the association stand in regard to giving Christmas presents?"

"Oh, that's dead long ago," replied one member.

"The department stores are getting a big share of the soap trade."

"I sell just as much soap as ever."

"I know of ten good customers who used to buy all their soap from me who never buy a bar. If they get their soap trade, they get some of their other trade too."

"While we may not be selling as much soap, I think we are making just as much money on it."

"One of the big stores advertise cluster raisins at 15 cents, and then when they get them there, sell them something at a higher price."

"That's the way to do."

"One of the department stores is getting 2 cents per can more for a certain brand of salmon than any grocer in the city."

"The more we talk to our customers about them the more we advertise them."

Novel Christmas Drawing Contest For the Children

Portage La Prairie, Man., Dec. 21.—(Special)—Brown's Limited, of this city believe that if you can get the children interested, you will have the whole family interested in Christmas goods. With this is view they have just completed a Christmas contest for school children, giving ten prizes for the best pen and pencil drawings of Santa Claus.

The first portion of their page adverment in the local paper used in announcing this contest read: "Dear children—we believe there is a great deal of hidden talent among the children of our city which needs only some little incentive to see the light of day and we have decided to inaugurate and conduct at our store for a few weeks prior to the holiday season, a novel and interesting drawing contest. We want as many pencil and pen drawings of Santa Claus as we can obtain. If you come to the store we will give you two sheets of paper designed expressly for the drawing and also a sheet of Santa Claus designs which you may use as a guide."

There were five classes, according to the ages of the children. The winners were determined by a voting contest held at the store at which any visitor or customer was entitled to one vote whether he purchased or not. Every child contestant was given six Santa Claus postal cards to mail to their friends, to bring them to the store to see the drawing and cast a vote.

Following the name of the firm at the bottom of the ad. is the inscription: "Where a dollar does its duty."

Christmas Fruit Trade Has Been Good

Will Compare Favorably With Other Years—Good Holiday Trade Expected Until After New Years—Vegetable Specialties Selling Well—First Estimates of California Citrus Crop—Big Shipment of Japanese Oranges—Celery High in Price.

The annual big Christmas harvest time of the wholesale fruit men is on the wane. For some time all has been briskness around the fruit markets, and especially has this been so during the past week or so. The greater bulk of Christmas goods for country merchants went out last week, while greater quantity of supplies were purchased by city dealers this week. However, there is always a good holiday demand for fruits between Christmas and New Year's, and business is expected to be on large scale next week.

Oranges have been big sellers, although it is thought the trade has not been as large as last year for reason that prices have been higher and crops were late in maturing. Vegetable appetizers for the Christmas table, such as ripe tomatoes, lettuce, imported cucumbers, sweet potatoes, mushrooms, etc., have been given their full share of attention.

The preliminary estimates of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange give the probable shipments of oranges and lemons from the entire state for the coming year as 49,200 cars. Southern California is expected to send about 46,000 cars—a considerable increase over output of year just closed, when 43,585 carloads, the largest crop in the history of the industry then, were shipped.

A recent arrival in Victoria, B.C., was a shipment of 24,490 boxes of Japanese oranges for distribution in Canada and the United States. This is the largest shipment of oranges brought across Pacific this year.

The weather has not been exactly seasonable for lemons of late, and for this reason they have been lagging somewhat and are a shade easier.

Spanish onions are easy in Europe, but this is thought to be only temporary from fact that staples have been neglected in the Christmas rush.

Although high in price, some Canadian markets received shipments of California celery for Christmas trade. Prices are expected to ease off after Christmas has passed.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS.—The present week opened with one of the busiest days the wholesale district has gone through in a long time, and employers experiences a 6 a.m. to 7 p.m. schedule daily for the week. There has been good demand for cranberries with some Cape Cods offering. The price is firm and it is expected stocks will be pretty well depleted during next three weeks. Grapes, oranges, pineapples, grape fruit and lemons are moving well, with brisk trade especially in first two. Apples are also receiving considerable attention with prices holding firmly. There has been a large sale of holly at $4 a case, and holly wreaths at $2 a doz. This feature of the trade is reported much heavier than usual.

VEGETABLES. — The wholesale fruit men have entered into the conspiracy to make the Christmas dinner a success, and particularly that of the wealthy, who can afford California celery, Boston lettuce, New York cucumbers, sweet potatoes, and the other delicacies that add to the sorrow of the dyspeptic, but to the joy of the average individual. Prices for these articles are reasonable and compare rather favorably with price of potatoes, under the circumstances. The jobbers have prepared well for a big trade, and are realizing it. Retailers apparently cleaned out their old stocks pretty thoroughly before they came into the market. The change in the weather this week was an extra incentive.

GREEN FRUITS.—The past week or two has been harvest time for the local wholesale fruit men. Trade in all departments has been quite satisfactory. Bulk of supplies for Christmas trade went out to country merchants last week, and on account of mildness of weather it was not found necessary to ship in heated cars, a paper cover in refrigerator cars sufficing. The city trade started in to purchase heavy at the beginning of the week, and it is believed that when totals are made up there will be record showing.

Florida and navel oranges have been good sellers. Almeria grapes have sold fully up to expectations. Cranberries have been in good demand, while grape fruit, pineapples, bananas, apples and lemons have come in for their full share of attention.

Florida oranges are quoted this week at $3 to $3.25, while California navels

Fish - Oysters

Weather Unfavorable for Advent Trade

Advent Trade Has Not Been All That Could be Desired—Weather Man Receives the Blame—Frozen Fish Were not Big Feature They Would Have Been With Colder Weather—Retailers Should Feature Oysters Between Christmas and New Year's—Weather on Eastern Coast More Favorable for Fishing.

Reports from some centres indicate that the Advent fish trade has not been all that it might have been. Unseasonable weather has been chief cause, the adverse effects being especially felt in frozen fish which would have been a big feature under more favorable weather conditions. Although there is a tendency to feature other lines this week, the cooler weather and three special fish days have helped sales considerably.

Between Christmas and New Year's is a splendid time to feature oysters. There are many family gatherings with the accompanying oyster shppers, and dealers who push this line during this period should find results gratifying.

The weather conditions along the eastern coast have been more favorable for fishing and there have been increases in the receipts of cod and haddock. Smoke houses and curing plants are busy preparing finnan haddie for which the demand is good. The supply of smelts is not equal to the demand, the United States markets taking the bulk of supplies.

QUEBEC.

MONTREAL.—The Advent trade in fish has been somewhat disappointing. Such is consensus of opinion, and entire blame is laid on the shoulders of the weather man. The disappointment has been felt chiefly in frozen fish which with cold weather would have been a big feature. As it was the bulk of trade was in salted, smoked and cured fish. Many orders received for delivery three weeks ago have not been filled as far as frozen fish was concerned. The orders included different kinds and because of the mild weather the item for frozen fish in each order was not filled. The result was that refrigerator space has been pretty well filled up and in a number of cases fresh frozen fish was left in the cars on the tracks near the end of last week. Early this week with a weather change for the better orders were filled out of these cars. On the whole, however, the market has been fairly satisfactory, and the local trade expect this week with three fast days to add considerably to the business already done.

The supply of lake fish has been good and fresh fish from the Atlantic coast is reported good as the result of rather favorable conditions. As far as supplies are concerned there is no complaint heard and prices are regarded as being rather low.

The oyster trade has been heavy. One firm figures an increase in demand for bulk oysters at 25 per cent., while for shell oysters the increase has been about 20 per cent. This must be regarded as satisfactory in the light of the conditions that have obtained.

After the holiday it is not expected that any slump will be felt. With ideal weather there will be a good demand, and it is a fact that a great many dealers have not as large supplies as is usual at this season. For that reason there should be a tendency toward steady buying. Prices do not show any special change. The salmon run was light and that fish will be steady as will be halibut for which there is always a firm demand.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

ST. JOHN.—Favorable weather conditions prevailing throughout the past week have been responsible for larger catches by the fishermen, and market has been well supplied with splendid variety. The sale of fish here has been encouraging since Advent set in, and owing to the extra fish days, but the absence of high winds has enabled the fishermen to report better success than for some time past. Fair quantities of lobsters are now being received, but the price is quite stiff, owing to the operations of United States buyers along the coast. The softness of the weather at present has caused a falling off in the stock of smelt, because there has been no fishing through the ice, but this will be remedied with a little cooler temperature.

Our Wish is Your Wish that the coming year may see your business even healthier than it is at present and that all enjoyment possible may be yours at Xmas and New Year.

BEFORE

you start stock-taking consider for a few moments whether it is not possible for you to place a FISH DEPARTMENT at the back of your store. A clean, tidy department which will show your customers that you are attending to their wants.

AFTER

having decided that it is quite feasible, write us for information. We can tell you what others have done and just how much it has cost them. We can provide any quantity on the shortest possible notice, being THE fish people of Canada.

Genuine Imported Scotch
KIPPERS and FINNAN HADDIE

We have imported a choice lot of these lines for our trade.

Scotch cured goods are admitted to be the most superior grade in cured fish of all descriptions, and our observations on this shipment bear out this conclusion.

The Kippers are nice stock, medium size fish, packed about thirty pair to the box. They are smoked to a nicety and for a fish for breakfast they are really hard to beat.

The Finnan Haddie are packed in boxes, weighing one stone each, 14 lbs. The fish are beautiful thick fish, and with the well-known Scotch Cure, have an appetizing appearance that go about three parts of the way towards selling them.

These fish are higher in price than the domestic-cured goods and they are well worth it. It is usually impossible to bring these goods to Canada on account of the prohibitive freight and duty charges, but on account of an extraordinary catch off the Old Country coasts this fall we were enabled to buy them cheap enough to import them.

WE KNOW YOU CAN SELL THEM and besides you will give your trade an article that you can recommend very strongly, and that will bring your customers back for more.

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE

Sales MUST Repeat

Over nine hundred thousand housewives now use FIVE ROSES—
Because it has the Selling Ability.
The same difference that exists between a counter attendant and a good salesman.

Do YOU know what that means?
Just this—
That the first bag must sell the second.

Advertising has a tremendous driving force—yet it can sell only one bag.

Your own salesmanship can make only first sales—trial orders.

The flour itself must have the compelling magnetic influence that draws irresistibly the customer back in spite of price and favor.

Twenty-three years ago there were —all told—only 800 barrels of FIVE ROSES flour sold in the world.

To-day there flows out of the big FIVE ROSES mills a constant uniform stream—10,500 barrels a day. Can any sane person deny in the face of such brutal facts that FIVE ROSES must possess a compelling sales force?

FIVE ROSES will not sell itself—no flour will.

Five Roses is packed to suit your trade in barrels and halves. Also in bags of 7, 14, 24, 49, and 98 lbs.

Daily capacity, 10,500 barrels.

But once introduced, Brother Grocer, your trade is rivcted for all time.

A woman can no more give up the FIVE ROSES habit than she can abandon her keen ambition for better baking.

Consider merely the dollar-and-cents side—just think how safe your trade might be—

If YOU could sell FIVE ROSES flour.

Maybe you can—maybe you can't, for we don't sell everybody, remember that.

Write our nearest office—perhaps we can come together.

Write NOW.

With Only One Writing The McCASKEY SYSTEM The End of Drudgery

Simp ifies the Handling of Accounts

¶ You might just as well use a quill pen instead of a steel or gold one as to keep your accounts in a set of books instead of The McCaskey System.

¶ More than 70,000 merchants in all lines of business are using The McCaskey System. It shortens and simplifies Book-keeping, keeps every account posted and totalled to the minute, keeps every customer informed of what he owes. By giving a statement of the account in full with each purchase you improve your collections, put an end to errors and misunderstandings with customers over their accounts.

¶ The McCaskey system keeps you from forgetting to charge an account. It automatically limits the credit of those upon whom you wish to set a credit limit. It will prove your loss to the penny if your store burns.

¶ We'd like to send you some letters from people you know about The McCaskey System. There is also an entertaining book "Book-keeping Without Bocks," that will be sent for the asking.

Business Management--First of a Series

Need of an Inventory at End of Year Emphasized—Too Many Business Men Content to Live on Guesswork—$10,000 Almost Lost in Three Years—Stocktaking Subject of Next Article.

By H. C. Carson, F.S.S.

When arrangements were made for this series of talks on business management as a feature for the coming year, the writer stipulated that the first should appear in December. My chief reason for so doing was that I wished to talk first of all on the subject of stocktaking, and the time is close at hand when this very necessary task should be undertaken. Every merchant owes it to himself, and to his banker and creditors as well, to ascertain just how he stands when the year's business has been terminated, and the only satisfactory way to accomplish this is to close the books and accounts, take an inventory of what he owns and what he owes, and prepare a balance sheet or statement of affairs. I know that many a so-called business man is content to make a rough guess at the value of the stock on hand and to let it go at that, but the chances for such a man to become a merchant are remote—he may remain a shopkeeper until such time as his guessing habit has landed him in such a hopeless muddle that extrication has become impossible, and failure stares him in the face. Such a man deserves little sympathy. He has succeeded in fooling himself, as he has, perhaps, a perfect right to do, but what about the banker who has loaned him money and the creditors who have advanced him goods? They will be the first to be abused if they do not extend a helping hand in his time of distress, when in reality they show him a kindness when they fail to prosecute for obtaining credit based on statements of estimated worth. The position does not become less reprehensible because unintentional. Negligence in business is, after all, akin to fraud on those who are made to suffer through the negligence.

On Brink of Failure.

I know a man who commenced business some years ago on a capital of $10,000. Before the end of three years, ruin had all but overtaken him. During that time he did not take an inventory of his merchandise. His practice was to add an average of 33 1-3 p.c. to the cost of his purchases, and each day, after the amount of his sales had been ascertained, he would set aside, as a separate fund, 33 1-3 p.c. of the amount, labelled gross profit account. Out of this fund he paid his help, store expenses, and personal expenditures. His sales approximated about $100 per day, so that he figured on about $33.33 for his gross profit fund per day. He had no intention of deceiving anyone, least of all himself. He paid his bills in a regular manner and believed himself to be in a highly satisfactory way of business. He lived well, though not extravagantly, and was happy. But he was blind, palpably and hopelessly blind. The inevitable end, Mr. Merchant, is clearly in your mind as you read this, and you begin to wonder how he lasted so long. I also wondered when I was called in to save the situation, if possible. It was almost too late. What had been happening? The diminishment of his stock had been gradual, and, therefore, less perceptible, but even his blind eyes had at last seen that it had dwindled almost to a vanishing point, compared with its original completeness. He had grown suspicious of his help. They must have been robbing him, he said. That he himself had been the culprit never once crossed his mind, and when I pointed out that he had been robbing his own business to the extent of $8.33 per day, his indignation became so violent that he threatened me with dismissal as incompetent. It is on occasions such as this, however, that an auditor must show firmness as well as reason, and to the lessons then taught is due the fact that this shopkeeper has recovered his loss of about $6,000, and is now a merchant, successful and respected, and with a growing instead of a diminishing capital.

Where Error Lay.

What were the lessons? First of all, he had miscalculated his gross profits by appropriating the same proportion of his sales as he had added to his purchases. This is an error more common than is realized, and to which many failures are due. One day's sales, aggregating $100, may be taken to illustrate the point:

Cost of goods sold	$ 75.00
Profit added (33 1-3 p.c.)	25.00
	$100.00

The amount that he should have placed in his gross profit fund was $25, according to these figures, but he had taken a third of the total sales, as follows:—

Day's sales	$100.00
Gross profit (33 1-3 p.c.)	33.33
	$ 66.67

As is seen, this method left, after deducting the alleged profit, only $66.67 with which to replace goods that had cost $75.00, or a daily stock depletion of $8.33. He had failed to remember what any 12-year-old boy could have told him—that one-third added to the cost equals only one-fourth of the proceeds. It might be argued that what he was losing on one side he was gaining on the other, and that there was no real shrinkage in assets. That argument would have been fallacious, at least in his case, because he had regulated his store and living expenses too close to the amount of his imaginary profit to permit adjustment in that way.

Convinced, by this time, that he had been grossly stupid, the next lesson taught him how negligent he had been. He had never taken stock. Had he done so at the end of the first year he would have discovered a shrinkage of about $2,500, or 25 p.c. of his capital, and heroic measures would have been taken then and there to discover the leak, and prevent its recurrence. But he preferred to deceive himself with an annual statement based on estimated stock, and not until two and a half years had elapsed, and it became apparent that all was not right, did he attempt to learn his real position in the only real way. By this time 60 p.c. of his capital had vanished. It was a rude shock, but better late than never, and that he adapted his management to fit his strained resources and, after a time, succeeded in recovering his prestige, is proof that business skill has at least equal value with capital.

Next Article on Stocktaking.

The next talk will deal with methods in stocktaking and the principles that should govern in the preparation of an annual statement of affairs, but it is hoped that enough has already been said to convince all business men who may read this introductory article, that the duty of taking stock, annoying sometimes and inconvenient always, is imperative as a precaution against unseen danger. As a country develops, competition in trade becomes more keen and exacting, and success more difficult to achieve and retain. Buying and selling is becoming more and more an art, or science, in which skill and watchfulness play the leading role, in contra-distinction to the slip-shod methods that were permissible a decade or so ago. The extension of credit, too, is being measured more by rule and material fact, and less by sentiment or personal favor, and the merchant who measures up best in the eyes of his banker and other creditors, is the one who knows, by rigorous and painstaking examination, just how his business stands, and can present, for their consideration, an exact and well arranged statement of affairs, at the close of each business year.

The Acceptance of Inferior Poultry

Best Articles Submitted in Answer to Question Raised in Issue of December 8—Should Inferior Poultry be Accepted by Dealers From Good Country Customers at Same Price Paid for Best Offerings?—The Three Winners.

In the issue of The Grocer of Dec. 8, a reader asked a question regarding the propriety of accepting or declining inferior poultry at same price as paid for good material. The letter in part ran as follows:—

"Our store is located in a good farming section with two other competitors. We sent out circulars soliciting poultry during the winter months. We had a good market for nice dry-picked and bled chickens, etc., and were offering a cent more per pound than competitors. Two young women entered the store and told the clerk they had chickens in the buggy. The assistant was sent out for them and took them to the scales. He called my attention to them as he thought they did not look up to the mark.

"I examined them, and they were the worst lot of chickens I ever saw, small, had been scalded and their necks broken instead of bled; also, they were of an unusual color and the flesh of some badly torn. I took them in myself and told the young women that we could not handle them at any price. I was very sorry that I had to reject them, and pointed out they were quite unsalable in the market we had, that we were pleased and willing to take all kinds our circulars asked for, and that we were paying top-notch prices for good stuff only.

"The young women made a few purchases and left, and upon inquiring I found they belonged to a family who had just begun to deal with us and were pretty good buyers. I never consulted the proprietor as he was busy with a traveler, and I knew he put faith in my judgment, although he would have taken the stuff himself. I still feel uneasy about it, and if it is not troubling you too much I trust you will comply with my wishes."

The winners of the prizes receive $1 each for their answers. The successful contestants were:—A. E. White, manager The W. H. Stone Co., Winnipeg; J. I. Emmerton, Bervie, Ont., and J. Brunner, Tavistock, Ont. Their opinions are given herewith.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

By A. E. White.

I read with considerable interest the article in your issue of Dec. 8, dealing with the purchase of inferior quality of farm produce, which as pointed out, so frequently obtains in country stores.

As regards the action of the clerk, in the instance given, I would say that in my opinion he was quite right in refusing to purchase the supply offered for sale if really under the impression that the young women were strangers to the store, as unless there had been some very good reasons for so doing, he certainly would not have been justified in accepting poultry of inferior quality at the same price as his firm was allowing for high grade goods. On the other hand, I feel that had he been aware that the vendors were regular customers it was a matter which should have been referred to the manager or proprietor, as in a case of this kind it is for him to decide whether he cares to sacrifice his profit on the poultry for the sake of avoiding any unpleasantness with a customer spending, possibly, a very considerable amount of money per year with him.

Should Exercise Judgment.

I am certainly not in favor of clerks feeling obliged to submit every small point, requiring a decision, which arises in their daily work, to the one in charge, as it is best both for themselves and their employer that they should assume a certain amount of responsibility, and be able to make decisions for themselves. But in a matter such as the one under discussion, I feel that had the clerk been aware that the parties offering the poultry were regular customers, he should certainly have consulted the person in charge as to his course of action.

If, however, he was under the impression that they were not regular customers, I consider his decision quite justifiable.

FROM DIFFERENT VIEWPOINTS.

By J. I. Emmerton.

In reply to your request in issue of The Grocer of December 8, for readers to compete for the three prizes offered for best reasons as to whether or not a merchant should accept inferior poultry from a good country customer, I herewith offer my humble reasons for judgment thereon, and if considered no good, your waste paper basket is handy.

To arrive at an all-round conclusion on a transaction of this kind we are forced to view it from two important points of view. First, from standpoint of encouraging and establishing dishonorable, dishonest, and unjust business principles, among ourselves, in business generally and among the better class of customers. Secondly, we are forced to view it from the standpoint of established custom among grocers and general merchants in handling and accepting poultry, butter, eggs, etc., upon a flat valuation of so much per pound or per dozen, regardless of quality.

A Question of Honesty.

Considering and judging the clerk's method of dealing with said customer from the first standpoint, would say he acted very wisely and with broad vision. First, because the said customer was acting dishonorably, dishonestly and unjustly to the merchant, in offering poultry in that condition. Secondly, the clerk, also his employer providing he approved of his clerk's accepting the poultry, would be acting dishonorably, dishonestly and unjustly to themselves, and also to the honorable patrons of their store. Furthermore, if the merchant expected to dispose of them along with his good stuff, in the hope that the good would sell the bad, likewise he would again be dishonorable, dishonest and unjust to himself, to his fellow merchants in general, to his honorable patrons and those of every fellow merchant, to the buyer to whom he sells, be he an individual, a wholesale or commission house or an open town or city market, because of the fact that he is doing his share towards lowering the standard of quality, thereby necessitating the lowering of valuation to suit the quality. Thirdly, to accept poultry or any other produce of the quality referred to, and be honorable, honest and just himself, presuming again the employer approves of his clerk's doings, the employer must necessarily stand the loss, and in so doing encourage and establish habits among his patrons that have but one result—the tendency of lowering the mental, moral and business character of the community.

Should Have Made an Offer.

Considering the transaction from the second standpoint would say the clerk acted wisely and honorably in his employer's interests, but failed to realize his full opportunity. If he had no authority to offer a reasonable price for poultry of that quality, he should have consulted his employer, and if the best price he could offer was not to the satisfaction of customer, he could endeavor to impress upon them that his employer had their personal welfare under his consideration and was offering the best possible price, and also to try and impress the fact that the interests of the merchant and his customer were mutual, and by putting inferior stuff on to the market he injured both parties. By earnest endeavor to demonstrate beyond a doubt, a personal interest in your customer, is one of the strong levers to success.

The Problem of Competition.

From the merchant's point of view it is sometimes wise to accept inferior poultry, if dealing in that line, even at a sacrifice, rather than offend a good customer, from the fact that it is almost universally the case that in every community there are one or more competitors eagerly and anxiously awaiting an opportunity to disturb the peace and harmony of your patrons, in the hope by so doing of gaining patronage themselves. Then again, accepting stuff of this quality should never be done without clearly informing your customers that you do so simply because you have an interest in them and appreciate their trade, but could not again repeat any favors of that nature.

Talk quality, impress quality, insist on quality in goods and service both to a customer and from a customer.

REASON WITH CUSTOMER.

By J. Brunner.

When a customer brings in such stuff, one naturally feels like telling him it is not fit for market, and he had better take it home with him.

It is a provoking proposition, and if the customer happens to be a desirable one, it is at times a very difficult one to handle.

I have found it is not a good plan to absolutely refuse to take it at any price. Customers who are usually in the habit of bringing in good butter or poultry will at times have a poor lot, and of course expect the merchant to take it off their hands at some price. If he refuses, the next dealer may take it, and by so doing stands a good chance of getting their next lot of good produce which they have to offer.

The customers in question may have known their poultry was not up to the mark, and possibly did not expect to get the "Top Notch" price.

Convince by Comparison.

If the salesman had placed the poultry beside some of that on hand, to let them see the great difference there is in the handling of poultry, they would no doubt have been willing to accept a much lower price, if he had shown his desire to do the best he could under the circumstances; and even if there would not have been a cent of profit in that day's transaction, it would have been much better than to refuse to take the poultry, and drive away a good customer.

Refusing to take inferior produce at any price offered by a customer hits a "vital spot," and the salesman in question will no doubt never again have an opportunity to refuse to take this customer's produce.

Year's Ups and Downs in Sugar Market

1911 Opened With Prospects For Low Market—Why No Landslide Occurred—July Hot Weather Contributed Further to Phenomenal Rise—Close of Year Sees the Market Growing Weaker.

The past year has been an interesting one in sugar with its phenomenal advances and extremely high price. Fortunes might have been made during the past twelve months during which this staple commodity soared to the highest pointed reached in 22 years. That point was reached on Sept. 8 when refined on a Montreal basis went to $5.85, which it is interesting to note was an advance of $1.65 above the lowest point for the year. Since then there has been a period of inactivity until the recent declines in the market began.

Yes, truly fortunes might have been made in sugar during the past year. However, if any person had predicted a year ago that sugar would have reached the high point that it did, he would have been laughed at by the wise ones. A year ago sugar men in general looked forward to a lower level for sugar than during 1910. Thus is shown just what an uncertain article sugar is.

Early Prospects Changed.

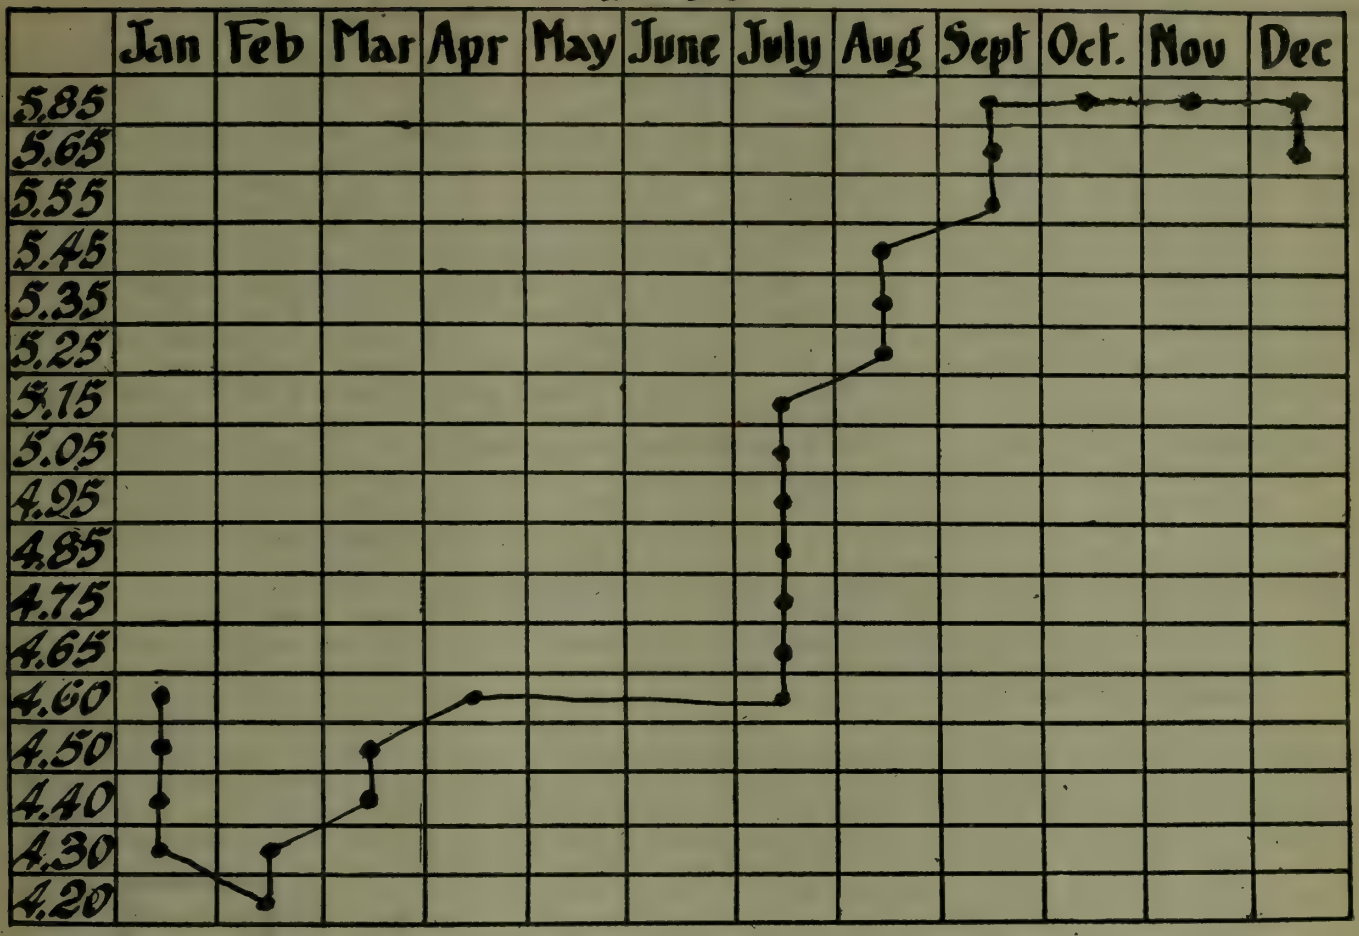
However, their predictions considering conditions at the time were soundly based. The prospects for the Cuban crop at that time were rosy. The sugar world was waiting for prices to tumble. They did make a start in that direction and with the Cuban crop coming forward prices during January sagged off from $4.60 to $4.20.

Here the market swayed in the balance. "Has the bottom been reached?" was the question asked. Interest was at the high tension mark, awaiting for some deciding information. It came too and very suddenly, when prediction was heralded forth that the Cuban crop would be 200,000 tons short. It was not long in moving the market and on Feb. 24 refined went up 10 cents. The shortage in Cuba became more apparent and prices expanded accordingly, going upward to 4.60 on April 18.

"Well," said the sugar world, "the flurry is over." It was, for the time, and during May and June inactivity reigned. In June the season of increasing demand was reached, but only a steady market was expected, probably with some slight advances, depending upon the volume of demand. If a person had even then predicted $5.85, he would probably have been laughed at.

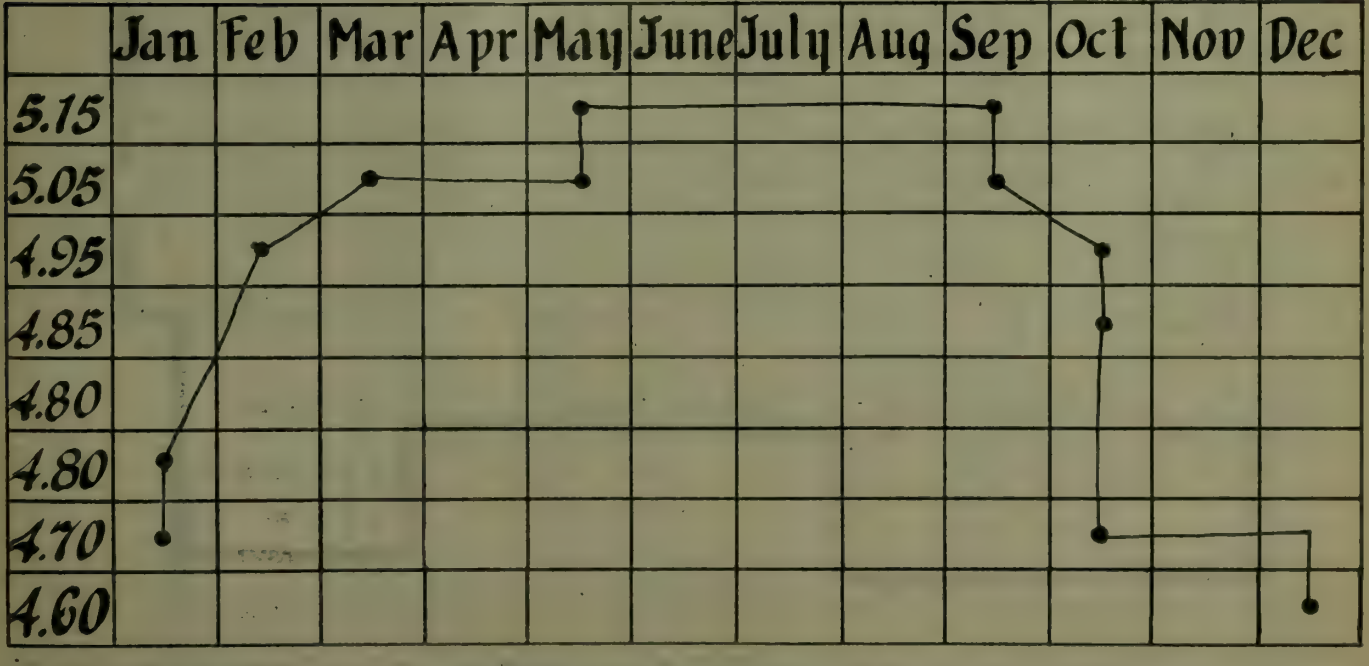
The Great July Spurt.

However, there was yet a shock booked to make the world later sit up and take notice. Little attention had up to this time been directed to Europe, where the beet crop was just getting nicely started. While the trade scorched under the extreme heat of July, European beet quotations began to advance sharply and the information come out that the heat which was causing the retailer's collar to lie limp, was also having a damaging effect on the beet crop of Europe. Prices on this side the water were not long in moving in sympathy and the phenomenal upward trend set in and in July alone prices were advanced 55 cents. That was not the end either. Additional advances followed each other with great rapidity, 40 cents being added in August and 30 cents more in September.



September Arrested Advance.

The end of the soaring came on Sept. 8. Sugar had made history. It had reached the highest point in 22 years. Apparently, it was content, having made the record, to let up. From September until well on in December there was no change but weakening was apparent. United States prices which had gone extremely high began to recede and it was apparent that Canadian prices would do the same as the advent of Cuban crop approached. Our chart on the opposite page records the advances and recessions during the year.



The Present Prospects.

What can be said of the present condition of the markets? It is expected that the movement already inaugurated in prices will be continued. There are several features which point to this. In the first place estimates from Europe in regard to the beet crop are more favorable, showing a decrease of 200,000 tons from the first estimated shortage. Cuba is also promising well. One estimate places the probable output of the island at 1,875,000 tons as against last year's yield of 1,483,451 tons, an increase of over 3000,000 tons, which will help considerably to make up the normal shortage for the year. Then again, it is anticipated that Russia will be allowed to increase her exports of raw sugar, although the Brussels Convention which is dealing with the question has adjourned to Jan. 29.

1911

Will Not Reach Low Level.

"How low is sugar going to go in this campaign?" was a question put to one sugar man.

"Well," he replied, "one cannot look for very low prices. It is quite evident that the year's shortage has been considerable and it is going to take some little time to make it up. The increase in the Cuban production now expected will help some but falls much below the total sugar shortage.

"Judging from present condition of the market, I would probably say that $5.40 for refined Montreal 'might' probably be near the low price for the campaign unless conditions change from what they are at the present."

Such is the opinion of one sugar man. He allows for a decline of 45 cents from the highest point of the season. How near is his guess to what will ultimately come? Time will tell.

Planning a General Merchant's Store

Dealer Sends Plan of Present Establishment Which He Intends Rearranging in Spring—Will Likely Use Metallic Ceiling—An Interesting Contribution.

Herewith is an interesting addition to the problem of planning a general merchant's store introduced in the issue of The Grocer of Dec. 15. On Dec. 11 C. H. Shupe, of the Shupe Grain Co., North Buxton, Ont., wrote asking for a somewhat similar plan for general store to that required by G. Norman Willets. He also sent plan of his present store, which he intends enlarging and re-arranging in the spring.

Before his letter was posted The Grocer had reached him with plan suggested for Mr. Willets, and his second letter, that of Dec. 16, was written afterwards.

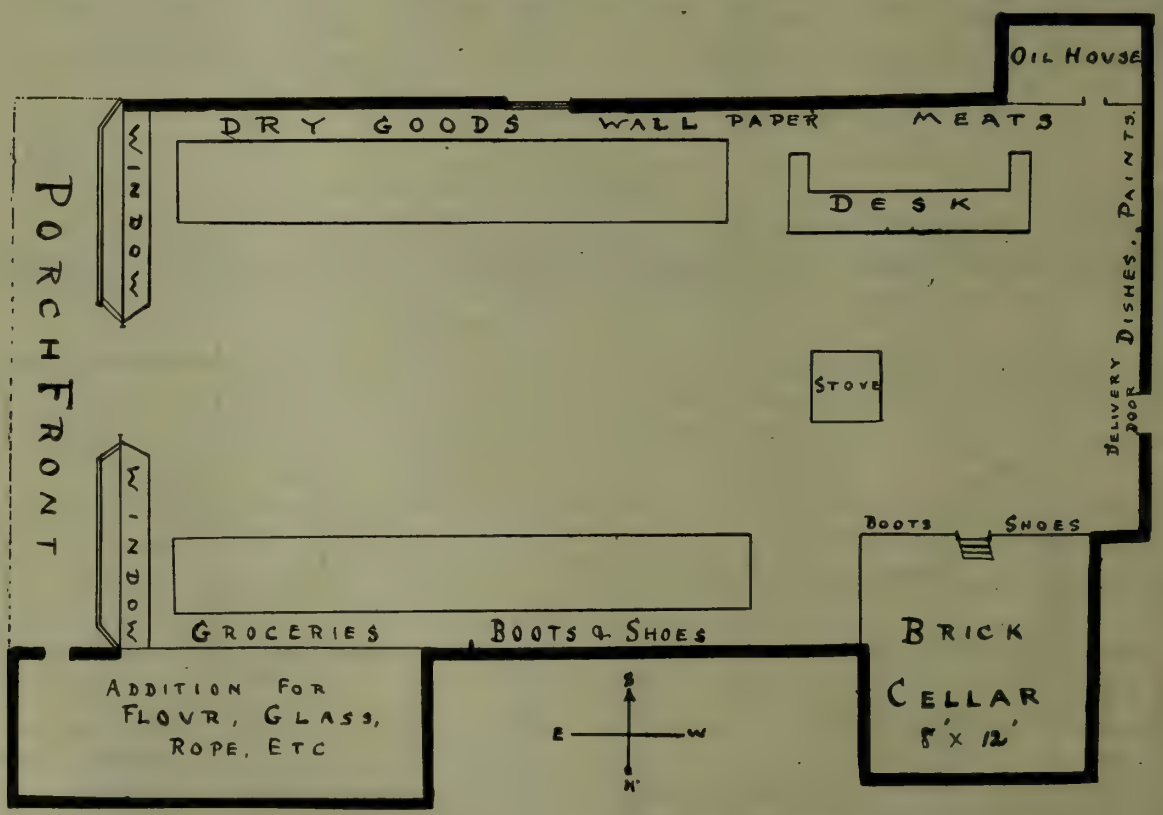
The Grocer has reproduced plan of Mr. Shupe's present store, as will be seen by fig. I., and there is also submitted suggestion for plan for new store as he requests.

Mr. Shupe's First Letter.

The Canadian Grocer :—Accompanying this letter you will find a plan of my present store, which I wish to renovate in the spring and enlarge same, making it 10 ft. wider and 10 ft. longer, cutting off the oil house addition on south side and the flour and glass room on the north.

As no doubt you have the opportunity of examining more stores than I, I thought you could possibly give me a plan for the enlarging.

Would like also to know if I could use the cellar for a furnace room and use hot water or steam for heating, or would it be better to build furnace room outside the store entirely ?



Our ceilings are 11 ft., with a peak roof. I was thinking of making a flat roof and using metallic ceiling.

The front would also have to be altered, which could be easily done, as the present building is a timber frame, and has an 8 x 8 timber across front about 8 ft. from xoor.

If you can give me a good plan from the foregoing description, I would be pleased to hear from you.

C. H. SHUPE.

North Buxton, Ont., Dec. 11, '11.

Present Plan of a North Buxton Store which will be Changed in the Spring.

Location of Furnace Room.

The cellar in the new store may be used for furnace room. Many stores, however, are now building furnace rooms outside store proper. This lessens chance of fire, and it may be that a little lower insurance rate could be secured in such a case. The furnace room should practically be a cellar outside the building with plumbing underground.

Metal ceilings are gradually gaining favor among all classes of merchants. They are attractive in appearance and sanitary in character, and can be easily kept clean.

The removal of the front porch would furnish more light and would give the display windows a better chance of selling goods.

The Second Letter.

Editor Canadian Grocer :—Re your issue of Dec. 15, under head "Planning a General Merchant's Store :"

I was much struck with the plan as outlined therein. My store is 20 ft. wide by 50 deep, but is minus the unpacking room and storage, which I keep in outbuildings conveniently removed to make danger of fire less. Judging from the amount of shelving asked for in plan, I would judge the stock would be about same as my own.

Now let me say at first that 20 ft. is not wide enough. Shelving and ledge will be 2 ft., alley back of counter 2 ft., and counter 2 ft. 8, or 6 ft. 8 inches total. Double this and you have 13 ft. 4 in., which leaves only 6 ft. 8 in. for the showcases down the centre, and where are the customers going to move about. I I omitted the showcases, and find even then too little room in centre, the result being that I am enclosing a plan of present store, which I expect to change next spring, making the store 30 ft. wide.

If G. N. Willets is cramped for room to build on, possible the plan might do, but as he wants side delivery door I suspect he has more room to build on.

Now the extra cost in width of store and roof, etc., is only a trifle to what it is when you have to tear down to widen, so by all means do not cramp too narrow.

Any suggestions furnished along lines of enquiry on enclosure would be much appreciated.

C. H. SHUPE.

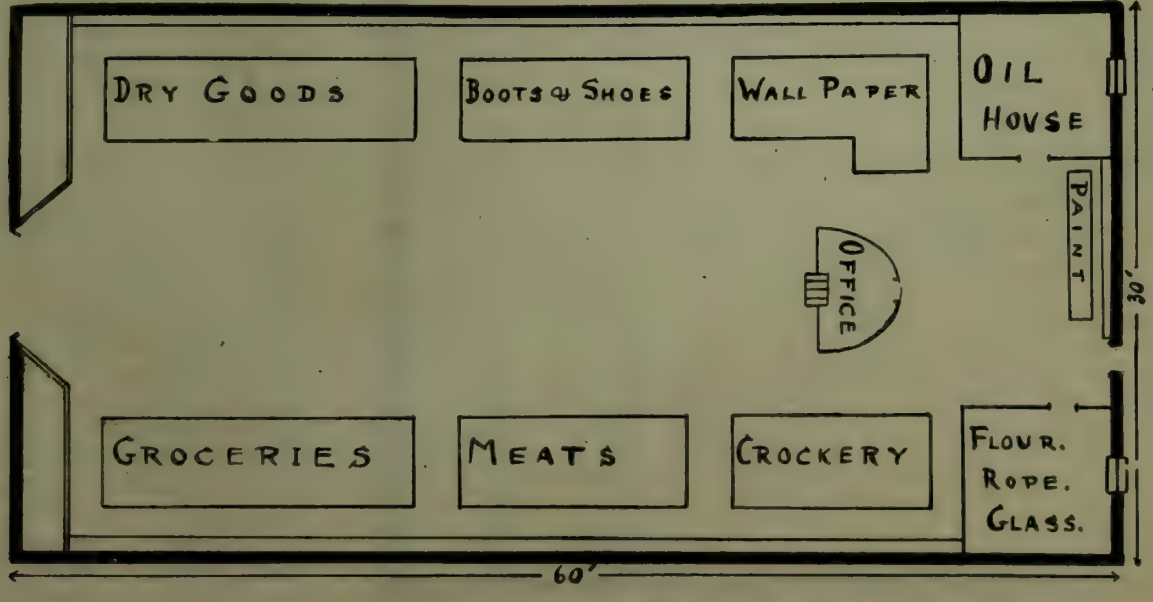
Departments Classified.

In fig. II., the plan suggested, the departments are arranged with a view to convenience, sanitary conditions, and classification. The grocery department should, of course, be given greatest prominence, as it is most used by customers. Meats are placed beside it, as these two are directly associated, and both should be as far away from the oil department as possible.

On the opposite side dry goods, boots and shoes and wall paper are placed, as these are more or less associated with one another. If the wall paper is placed in the corner near the oil house, a better display could be made than if it were against a side wall. Paints are placed near the rear door, as they are in a way associated with oils. The office in the centre near the back of the store allows a good view all round.

As stated in the last article on the subject, The Grocer would appreciate hearing from other general dealers with plans of stores which they have found adequate and convenient.



KEEPS NAME BEFORE PUBLIC.

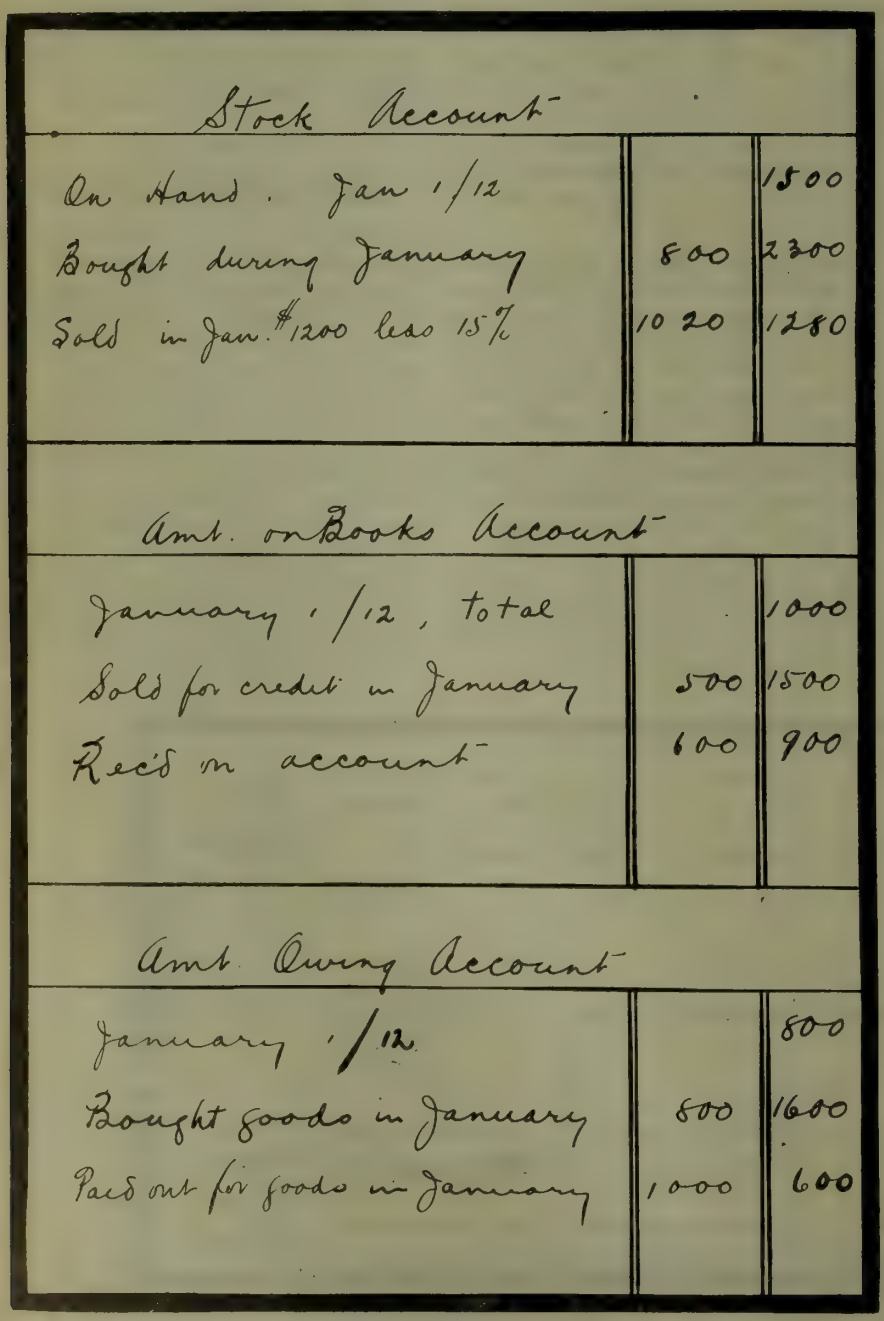
Toronto, Dec. 28.—A Yonge St. grocer believes that keeping your name before the public helps the business, because customers recall it when they wish to make purchases. One of the methods he has of attaining this end is his name and a small ad. on every paper bag that leaves his store. Thus, a customer in looking over her stock before going out shopping, is reminded of his store. In the ad. the name is outstanding, followed by "provisions, groceries fruits ; butter and eggs a specialty." Below this is an inscription "the store that aids economists."

He also believes in a good delivery outfit as a trade attraction. His wagon, which is of the covered variety, bears his name and number plainly. On his entrance door is the sign bearing his name, while his name in gold letters on a hanging glass sign adorns both show windows.

SPLENDID MONTREAL WINDOWS.

Montreal, Dec. 28.—Among the merchants along the Main street, the leading grocers have displays that are on par with the general tone of the Christmas windows. Jas. Graham, John Robertson & Sos, Walter Paul, E. J. Quinn, Gravel Freres, A. Dionne, Son & Co., W. J. Brown, and others, have attractive windows showing wealth of Christmas grocery ideas. In some cases it might be difficult to select the best, and yet there are one or two that seem to stand out clearly for the carefulness with which the design has been carried out. Altogether, however, the grocers have ably upheld their share of the decorative Christmas displays.

Suggested Arangement of Departments When Store is Remodelled.



Taking an Inventory Once Every Month

Simple System Which Must Be Begun in January After Annual Stock-taking Operations Are Over — Will Show Approximate Standing at Any Time.

All up-to-date business men agree that it is a valuable asset to be able to tell at intervals the standing of their business. The man who takes stock yearly can tell once how his business stands, but there are a large number who would like to know oftener. There is, however, a great deal of labor involved in taking complete inventory of financial standing several times a year.

Here is a plan whereby the grocer may tell approximately at all times throughout the year the standing of his business. If there is anything wrong he does not have to wait until December to find it out and have it remedied. Instead, on any day, with little work, he can find just how his business compares with the last time he took stock and whether it has been progressing favorably.

The method is simple, and while not giving this information just as exact as annual inventory, it gauges it closely enough to tell how the business is getting on. Then, again, at the end of the year the annual inventory can be taken the same as usual.

Stock Account

On Hand. Jan 1/12		1500
Bought during January	800	2300
Sold in Jan. $1200 less 15%	1020	1280

Amt. on Books Account

January 1/12, total		1000
Sold for credit in January	500	1500
Rec'd on account	600	900

Amt Owing Account

January 1/12		800
Bought goods in January	800	1600
Paid out for goods in January	1000	600

Accounts Necessary to Take Inventory at Any Time During Year.

Three Accounts Kept.

The accompanying cuts will explain the plan itself. First we have the Stock Account. On Jan. 1, when stock was taken, we found we had $1500 worth of goods on hand. Now, during January, we purchased $800 worth as shown by the invoice book. During that same time we sold $1200 worth, which, with the estimated profit on the same deducted, shows amount of goods taken from stock during that month.

How do we find the amount of profit? During the previous year we sold, say, $14,400 worth of goods on which we made a gross profit of $2,160, which means 15 per cent. This will vary with stores, but for sake of argument our last year's business shows the average profit as 15 per cent.

Amount on the Books Account.

The amount on books at end of January is simply found. When inventory was taken on Jan. 1, the amount was $1000. There was sold in January for credit $500, while $600 was received on account, so that the amount left on the books would be $900.

On Jan. 1 the amount owing was $800. There was bought on credit in January $800, while there was paid out on account owing, $1,000. This leaves debts of $600 at the end of January.

Perpetual Inventory.

Thus, at the end of January we have the Amount of Stock, the amount on books, and the amount owing, so that with the other resources and liabilities such as cash in bank and on hand, notes payable and receivable, etc., a complete inventory can be made. At end of February the same thing can be done, and in this manner at any time throughout the year, the merchant may tell exact standing of his business, or, in other words, he has a perpetucal inventory.

At end of the year, the usual inventory should be taken, for as the percentage of profit may vary, so this perpetual inventory may not be exactly accurate.

It is quite evident that this perpetual system has to be started immediately after the annual stocktaking and inventory. Care should be taken to get the average profit as nearly accurate as possible.

Now comes a man in York, Neb., who claims that dogs are the cause of the high cost of living. "There are six million dogs in the United States," he says. "You say the dog lives on waste. There should be no waste. If there is, that is another cause of high prices. Other animals are productive; the dog is destructive. The damage inflicted by six million dogs is enormous."

BUSINESS MANAGEMENT ARTICLES.

Commencing with this number, a series of weekly articles on Business Management will appear in The Canadian Grocer, from the pen of H. C. Carson, F.S.S., F.R.C.I. Mr. Carson is Municipal Editor of The Financial Post of Canada, and his writings on Municipal Finance and Administration are recognized as authoritative throughout Canada. He is a Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute, a Member of the Royal Society of Arts, and his statistical labors were recognized two years ago by a Fellowship in the Royal Statistical Society of Great Britain.

The practice of his profession as a Consulting Accountant and Auditor has brought him into close touch with the various phases of business life in Canada, and the United States, and he is well qualified by education and experience, to render sound and practical advice regarding the numerous problems that arise in business.

These articles will be practical in nature, and devoid of literary embellishment, and The Grocer strongly recommends every reader to study the series carefully. Every reader will be welcome to submit questions to be answered or problems to be solved, and every effort will be made to make 1912 a year of real business education.

CERTIFICATED GROCERS.

In the Fall Campaign number of The Grocer, there was an exceedingly interesting and educative article on the Institute of Certificated Grocers in England. This is a question that should be fully gone into by associations in this country as it opens the way to the elimination of the inexperienced dealer who so frequently not only ends in failure but causes loss and troubles to competitors.

If such an Institute were established in this country, it would, beyond a doubt elevate the standing of the trade to a much higher degree. Every day, for instance, we hear of dealers selling goods at cost or less. This is only one of many shortcomings which would come under the scope of the Institute. A sample examination paper was also given in our Fall Number of Nov. 3, illustrating the splendid work being done.

Canadian dealers would certainly do well to emulate the example from England, and we would strongly urge the trade to look deeper into this large question with a view towards perpetuating the work of the Motherland in this respect in this country.

WESTERN WHEAT SITUATION.

Threshing still continues throughout the country, but the quality of grain threshed from stooks which are covered with snow is so poor that elevators are refusing to handle the grain at all in many places.

Reports have been received from several points where farmers have been unable to market their grain unless they load and ship the cars themselves to Winnipeg or the head of the lakes. In fact, a case is known where one man carted his grain ten miles to town, and was refused a market by the elevators, and finally had to sell to livery men for the small price of 35 cents per bushel. Reports eminating from Government authorities for the Province of Saskatchewan state that there are 25,000,000 bushels of grain yet to be harvested in this province. A large part of this is flax and the remainder wheat and oats.

CANNED MILK HIGHER.

It was pointed out last week that the high price of raw material and extra cost of production was likely to result in increase in price of canned milk.

The intimation was well worth heeding. One firm at least has advanced prices on evaporated and condensed milk 15 cents per case. Another house has increased the price on one line and intimated that other lines may advance also. Other firms are seriously considering the problem, it is said, because of the increased cost under which they have to operate.

ROLLED OATS DECLINE.

This week a further decline of 35 cents per barrel is announced by a number of firms in rolled oats. Added to the reduction of two weeks ago, it makes a total drop of 60 cents per barrel during the month.

The reason for the reduction is not altogether easy to explain. Prices have been easing off in the face of a fairly steady oat market, although it is pointed out that across the line there is greater weakness.

Then again some of the mills which have lowered prices this week, favored higher prices a week or so ago, yet in the meantime the oat market has varied little.

The failure of prices to work in unison with the oat market, and the differences in prices as quoted by different firms would lead to the belief that something of a price-cutting war is being indulged in by mills at present. Competition for business just now at least appears to be keen.

Talk on Wholesale and Retail Legislation

Address to the Canadian Credit Men's Association at Winnipeg—Reforms That Have Made Rapid Progress in the West—Application of Criminal Code to Sale of Property by Debtor.

By Norman Mackenzie, Regina, Sask.

The Canadian Credit Men's Association represents one of the most important branches of industry in the West and already represents millions of dollars, yet at the present time it is only in its infancy. Even before its legal life I have been interested in it, and it has certainly been the most aggressive infant I have ever came in touch with.

Before steps were taken to incorporate it, I was busy formulating a scheme of a Bulk Sales Act for Saskatchewan, as mentioned by your chairman, and while on the subject he made some remarks which I think should be commented on. What I did in reference to the Act was done simply as a lawyer. The bulk of the ideas in reference to changing the Manitoba Act came to me from time to time through suggestions from members of your Association made in reference to particular business transactions, from ideas which occurred to me in attending to the different difficulties which arose in connection with the wholesale business. These suggestions and ideas were from time to time jotted down by me as they arose, and were largely supplemented by the discussions and ideas of your Executive itself when the Bill was discussed in detail. These ideas were finally brought into a draft Act, and if I mention to you some of the details that occurred during the process of bringing the draft Act to our Statute Books, you will realize when other legislation arises that it is not always an easy matter to introduce and pass in a new country, where many of the legislators are new, bills which touch on new branches of mercantile law.

Went Straight to Government.

There were two ways in which the legislation could have been brought up. One was to interest private members to such an extent that a majority in the House could be obtained; and here the difficulty would arise that unless the financial and political interests of such members were identical with ours and with those of their constitutents, trouble would be sure to arise and the bill might have been defeated on the general vote. We came to the conclusion that as the bill was one which interested the public at large, and was for the benefit of all parties, the best plan was to go squarely before the Government and endeavor to show them that it would be for the common good of the community to pass the act.

On calling the attention of the Government to the act, they first refused to pass any opinion on it until its aspect from the standpoint of the community had been fully considered, and until we had placed before them all the other legislation which had been passed by other legislatures in Canada, or had been brought before such legislatures, and, with this end in view, we obtained all other Canadian bills or acts on the subject. We found that Manitoba, British Columbia and Quebec had already legislated on the subject, while Ontario and another province had introduced legislation, but had apparently deemed it wise to wait until they saw the success of those who first undertook to legislate on the subject. The draft bill was then again submitted to the Government, with copies of all the legislation on the subject, with annotations showing what legislation had already been passed and what ideas were new, after which it was accepted by the Government, who stated that they thought it advisable to introduce the bill themselves.

The Bill Delayed.

I shall now proceed to tell you what happened after the bill had been passed into the hands of the Government. The session during which it was to be introduced dragged on from day to day, and the issues which were raised were such as at times to completely sidetrack our legislation. First the subject of reciprocity came up, then the C. P. R. land resolution, then the blockade of supplies, and finally, and most important, came the Grain Act, and it was not until practically the day the House expected to rise, that the bill received its third reading. I then found that one point in the bill had been omitted, and on pointing this out to the Attorney-General, it was remedied at the last moment by an amendment to the Statute Law Amendment Act, the result being finally the act as forwarded to you being assented to by the Lieutenant-Governor.

I understand that since the passage of the act here, the Manitoba Act has been amended to comply with the provisions of ours, and in conversation with supporters of the Government I have been told that they felt the act was a most beneficial one, and they were of the opinion that if new ideas arose which would make the act even more complete, suggestions as to amendments would be cheerfully received by the Government. The only point at the present time which occurs to me would add to the strength of the act is that sixty per cent., both in amount and number of the creditors should be necessary to consent to a sale by the debtor. We did not get both in the act; but I believe this can be remedied without difficulty at the next session of the legislature. Another point which I think should be brought to the attention of the Government, and would assist the public generally, is that assignments of book accounts should be registered in such a way that the attention of the public would be brought to the change in the assets of the debtor.

Retailers Helped.

One thing that I feel assisted greatly in bringing the act before the legislature was the fact that your association allowed the legislation to speak for itself. No deputations were sent to endeavor to explain what was put before the Government in plain language, nor were any promises asked for; the act was simply submitted and spoke for itself. I do not know of any stronger recommendation from my standpoint which could be given the legislation as it stands, than realizing as I did, sitting from day to day in my office, how quickly the act was brought to the attention of the public, particularly to the retail dealers. Even before the act was printed and distributed, retail dealers throughout the country consulted me as to proposed sales being made by them, and expressing their anxiety to come strictly within the terms of the act.

We have now been given the legislation and I understand the motto of your association is that "union is strength," but we must remember that legislation is one thing and the direct carrying out of the intention of the act is another. The legislature has now done all that it can do and it remains for us to do the balance. For years the different provinces of Canada have had Creditors' Relief Acts in existence, whereby all execution creditors must share pro rata in the assets of the debtor, and I cannot help but feel that if this Association is ever to have weight with the public and to assist the individual members, the same principle must be carried out wherever possible practice before judgment, as legally it must after judgment; that is, that the assets of the different debtors of this association should by arrangement be distributed ratably before judgment as well as after, that the old inclination of each wholesale house to secure itself at the cost of its brother creditors should be abandoned, and that the association should act on a system whereby every creditor will share, and where securities taken would be for the benefit of all those, doing away with promiscuous litigation against the debtor, and actions based on the Fraudulent Preference Act being brought by one creditor against another, for we cannot but remember that while the Government have now legislated as to the rights of the wholesale men against the retail men, they had already legislated under the Fraudulent Preferences Act as between one creditor and another, and it is as incumbent on us to avoid running foul of the question of fraudulent preferences, as it is for us to carry out the spirit of the Bulk Sales Act.

I feel the above suggestion, if carried out, will in the long run not only be of benefit to your association, but to each wholesale house individually and to the public at large, including the retail dealer, and I emphasize this fact, for watching business transactions of this description from day to day, it has been pitiable to see so many instances occur where the large creditors show every inclination to assist the retail dealer, grant him an extension and do everything possible to save him from insolvency, and then, as in one particular case I know, the smallest creditor give instructions for the issue of a writ, which naturally brought about an assignment, a sacrifice of the goods and the incurring of costs which were finally paid by the debtor out of goods on hand which should have been turned into cash and paid to the creditors.

The Criminal Code.

Another point on which I think I could profitably speak to-night is in reference to the application of the Criminal Code to sales and disposal of property by the debtor. Wherever the Criminal Code has been distinctly violated, I think it is the duty of the association to prosecute to the bitter end; but where, through ignorance or stress of circumstances or bad advice, the debtor, without real intent to defraud, has disposed of his property, I can only say that it is, in my opinion, a mistake to invoke the Criminal Law. Many cases arise where the biased view of the creditor might suggest the arrest of the debtor, but in twenty-four cases out of twenty-five, when the facts were brought before an unbiased person, it would be plain that it would be folly, not only on account of the lack of the necessary criminal ingredients, but because the acquittal of every such debtor only tends to weaken the standing of the wholesalers and arouses the sympathy of the public, and also weakens the chances of the association to obtain further legislation to protect them.

Another point which I think should be carefully considered by the Association and by the various solicitors who are representing them, is the care which must be taken to formulate a system in reference to the report on the standing of debtors which will keep the association and the solicitor strictly within the law, and prevent actions under the circumstances laid down in McIntosh v. Dun, in the Privy Council, and Smith v. Dun recently in your own Courts. This is not a matter to be discussed here, but one to be taken up with great care and exercised with the utmost prudence.

Knight of the Grip Registers Kick About Delays

By A. P. H.

The total amount of time lost by travelers throughout the Dominion through the indifference of retailers means an immense sum of money yearly. Instead of giving the traveler his hearing or his order at once, the retailer is wont to keep him waiting while he performs some minor work that could just as well be done at any other time.

Especially is this habit of delaying the traveler more prevalent in the small towns and villages where it is a common occurrence in some instances for a traveler to have to call at a store several times before he receives his order, while in many cases it would be just as easy for the merchant to give it to him on his first call.

Now, while he may do it pleasantly enough, his thoughts may be different. Put yourself in his place and you will no doubt make an effort to eliminate this loss of time as far as it lies in your power.

CREDIT MEN'S BANQUET.

Address to Be Given by Member of Parliament on Bulk Sales Question.

Toronto, Dec. 28.—The Eastern Branch of the Canadian Credit Men's Association will hold their monthly banquet on Thursday evening, Jan. 4, at McConkey's, this city. The feature will be an address by W. D. McPherson, M.P.P., on the bulk sales question. Mr. McPherson introduced a bill into the Ontario Legislature some time ago on this question, but it did not go through, chiefly on account of objections from the attorney-general. It is quite likely, however, that when it is again introduced there will be no objections from that source.

Although the eastern wholesalers have only been organized about a month, the work is progressing favorably. They have secured offices at 58 Front St. west, and appointed L. J. Ball as secretary. One of the chief objects of this association is to prevent bad debts.

The fifteen hours a day method will not make a man successful. It will make him unfit to enjoy success if he should win it.

It isn't all advertising to throw a lot of words into type. The question of the right kind of copy is a serious one. "I'd rather have fifty dollars' worth of copy in a five dollar space than five dollars worth of copy in a fifty dollar space," remarked one big advertiser recently.

Reproduction of Frank's fruit window at corner of Church and Carlton Streets, Toronto. This was a handsome display and cut does not do justice to it.

1911 a Good Year for Grocery Trade

General Satisfaction with Past Years' Business—The Last Week of Year, as Usual, Finds Trade Quiet—Sugar Holds Same Weak Position—Canned Milk Strong and Advancing—Grocery Staples are on Whole Steady—Syrup Down in Winnipeg—Coal Oil Lower in Montreal.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

POINTERS :—

Brazil Nuts.—Another advance.

Coal Oil.—Up one cent per gal.

Condensed Milk.—Firmer.

Montreal, Dec. 28.—The Christmas season has passed with a flourish before the turning of another new leaf in the history of the Canadian grocery trade. It has been a prosperous year, and high tide of business that gathered months ago rolled on unbroken to the very end. December has not been seasonable with its weather, and while this may have had some ill effect on trade, it was not noticeable in groceries, although with real winter it is possible that this last record would have been broken. The present week is not generally regarded as an important one from a business standpoint, although the local houses were busy. It is felt that owing to comparatively high prices, retail grocers did not purchase as extensively as they might have, that supplies will become exhausted sooner than usual and that business will, therefore, be good earlier in the year. It is also conceded that snow and cold weather will have a good effect. One hears many remarks in other circles that the mild weather has been "killing" to them. If they require the genuine article it generally results that everyone benefits. Altogether the new year opens to a confident trade. Prices have held firmly, and in the majority of cases they should continue strong..

SUGAR.—The tendency to decline is still with the market, and further reductions are expected in near future. The Cuban sugar yield is likely to exceed last season's by about 350,000 tons. Estimates of the European yield are larger, and this appears to make Europe less a factor in the market. The general tone at present is downward with the announcement of a reduction a possibility at any time.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.—There is a fair sale for molasses in small orders, but after the first of January, and with the advent of cold weather there should be more enquiries from the retail trade. Syrups are moving steadily. This is a seasonable line and should be extensively handled.

DRIED FRUITS.—The supply of California and Valencia raisins, as previously stated, is none too plentiful, although no change has been made in price. The last boat of the season carrying dates, figs, etc., is the Armanistan. The Christmas demand for all kinds of dried fruits has been of the best, and for the reason that stocks are generally not heavy the market is likely to remain firm. Dried fruits will be worth watching early in the year to find out any movement in regard to buying, etc. Prunes are steady and firm, but the spot trade is quite ordinary. Grocers have sold extensively this year of Malaga raisins and table raisins of all kinds have received more attention than ever with evident results.

NUTS.—Brazil nuts are higher again this week, and supplies appear to be quite limited. The holiday demand for nuts was good, and generally speaking, compares well with other years. Shelled walnuts and almonds appear to retain their steadiness and strength of the pre-holiday jobbing trade.

TEAS.—Reports of the tea market indicate a relief to the tense situation that has prevailed for some time. Poor grades of tea that first were held strongly received a setback. The supply of good liquoring teas was so very limited that firm prices prevailed. The whole market, however, is firm.

RICE.—There is nothing special in this market. Routine trade is passing at former prices. Consular advices from Ceylon state that although there are 600,000 acres under rice, the amount harvested each year is insufficient for home consumption. The customs returns for 1910 show that rice to value of more than $15,000,000 was imported during the year.

Canned Goods.

TORONTO.—The past year has been somewhat of an interesting one in canned goods. The great feature was the short packs in a number of lines. The dry hot spell of early summer as all well know was responsible for a small delivery of tomatoes, peas, blueberries, strawberries, raspberries and some other lines, which in face of ruling conditions are considered good property. Salmon was another line to fall short, especially in the better grades.

As intimated last week, some firms are quoting condensed and evaporated milk at 15c per case higher. The high cost of raw material is the cause. Other firms intimate they will probably find it necessary to advance their quotations also.

One firm quotes Singapore pineapple in ¾'s cubes and grated at $1.20 per doz., and 1½'s, sliced and whole, at $1.65. Hawaiin in 2's are worth $2.40 per doz.

Toronto, Dec. 28.—Another successful year for the Canadian grocery trade is about to pass into history. Trade during the past twelve months has been good and when the sales sheets are made up for the year, they should indeed compare favorably with those that have gone before. Many firms are looking forward to substantial increases over the past few years. Some even hope to establish a record that will make them hustle during 1912 to keep up with. Jobbers in general appear well satisfied with business during 1911.

Trade this week is quiet. Wholesalers are being accorded a breathing spell. Travelers are taking a well earned rest until the opening of the new year. Preparations are being made by the majority of houses for stocktaking, and the same preparation on the part of retailers no doubt accounts for some of the present quietness.

The year closes with grocery staples with exception of sugar holding a steady position. In this regard might be mentioned canned goods, dried fruits, tea, coffee, nuts and other lines.

SUGAR.—There is practically nothing more to add to what has already been said. The market is in about the same condition as a week ago. The next move is undoubtedly downward, and presumably will come if not before, shortly after, the new year.

While the tendency is downward, sugar men point out that extremely low values in this staple cannot be expected. While estimates of the European beet crop have recently been enlarged, and while Cuba gives promise of a yield in excess of last year, there is still a big shortage that cannot be made up for some little time, and accordingly very low prices cannot be looked for until production warrants it.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES. — The weather has not been the most seasonable for syrups, but in spite of this fact there has been a fairly good demand. The opening of the year and real cold weather should bring increased activity.

DRIED FRUITS—There are no special features to report in dried fruits. The end of the Christmas trade finds no overplus of spot stocks. Peels are next to being scarce, although the demand will now slacken materially. Malaga raisins found a good sale for the festive season and are now quite well cleaned up.

Figs and dates are receiving considerable attention from retailers. No prices have been made on the dates on third steamer, Armamistan, which will be last for season.

Prices on prunes continue to stiffen on the coast as supplies diminish.

Tea.—Colombo shipments have rather more than realized anticipations, the actual shipments during November being 5,000,000 lbs. in excess of the same month last year, and furthermore the estimate for December is put at 2,000,000 lbs. more than Dec. 1910. In some quarters at least, it is felt that prices have about gone the limit for the present considering conditions.

Coffee.—Market conditions on coffee affecting prices to the retail trade show no great variation. Trade seems to be running along fairly briskly.

The world's visible supply of coffee on Dec. 1st, was 13,420,000 bags as against 13,122,000 on Nov. 1 and 14,755,000 bags on Dec. 1, 1910. Thus the statistical position is shown to remain quite strong.

Nuts.—With the passing of Christmas interest in nuts has dwindled somewhat. Retailers will, no doubt, aim to clean stocks up this week. While Christmas is the season of big demand, nuts should be an all the year round seller, and the dealer will no doubt find them so if he maintains his assortment and gives them the required prominence.

The holiday trade reduced wholesalers' stocks to quite a low level. Brazils are real scarce. Almonds still hold their steady position.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 28.—To surprise of most grocery wholesale firms in the city trade this year remained quite firm up to Christmas holidays. As is the general case a slackening prevails at this period and last week the tone of the trade seemed to be edging towards such a condition existing. During the week, however, a large volume of business has been transacted and sorted orders have been rushed out in considerable quantity.

The serious congestion of cars has to some extent been rectified and freight traffic has once more apparently resumed its normal appearance. Shipments by no means reached their destination as quickly as under general circumstances, but conditions are a great deal better than they were last week, and as great attention is being paid to the solving of this problem by all railroads, it is expected that traffic will be on its normal basis within another week.

Travelers are all off the road and many who returned to the city at the earlier part of the week have left to spend Christmas in the east. Others have departed for western homes and will not go out again until after the new year. The tone of the market throughout the week has been somewhat weaker than of late, and syrup has shown a decline of 10c following recent sugar drop. Dried fruits are holding steady, while Christmas lines such as nuts and seeded raisins are still moving rapidly.

SUGAR—The readjustment in the sugar market and the easing off of conditions to the south resulted in the decline of 10c on local market referred to last week.

SYRUP—Syrup took another decline of 10c this week, due it is reported to further weakness on the southern market. As the demand in this commodity is only normal at best of times it is not expected these declines will cause any great flurry.

WINNIPEG.

CANNED GOODS—Trade in canned goods during last few months has been considerably lighter when compared with this season last year. While wholesale jobbers refuse to be quoted in any definite remarks, yet they stated that decrease in volume of trade transacted appears to be due in part to the high price existing for almost all lines of canned goods. It was pointed out that canners had been unable to supply the demand in many of the lines and as result prices had been forced up. This meant they reached heights which were practically prohibitive and the small consumer was absolutely unable to enjoy these luxuries. As is well known canners were unable to supply full orders. In fact only a small percentage of orders for tomatoes, raspberries, strawberries, peas and gooseberries were supplied. Last summer prices were considered high but when compared with the prices that are in existence to-day, it will be seen that in the majority of cases advances have taken place. On the whole it is the opinion that owing to the small stocks higher prices will yet be seen and the majority of the canned good lines will be practically off the market before the season is over.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Dec. 28.—There were practically no changes in markets during the week but good business prevailed, as had been expected. In fact the grocers were vastly encouraged by the amount of trade transacted, wholesale and retail, as it was beyond even their most cheerful expectations. Fine weather all through the week resulted in drawing large shopping crowds, and in inducing trade, and the bulk of the business was done before Saturday when rain fell heavily. Poultry was in brisk demand and large quantities were sold, while dairy produce also came in for liberal share of attention. Turkeys owing to soft weather toward latter part of the week took a drop to 23 cents and ranged to 27 cents. Geese and chickens were unchanged in price, as were eggs, selling at 50 cents for hennery stock, and butter ranging from 24 to 29 cents.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

HALIFAX, Dec. 28.—Grocers report Christmas trade ahead of last season. The retailers had an excellent week's business in all lines. The sales of fruit, both dried and green, were heavy, oranges and grapes selling particularly well. The last steamer that arrived here landed 1,800 barrels and several hundred cases of Jamaica oranges. The fruit was sweet and of good flavor, but oranges were smaller than usual at this season of the year. They are selling at $4.50 to $5 per barrel re-packed. Lemons are easier, there being a drop of fifty cents per case this week. Extra fancy are selling at $3.50 for 300 count, and fancy (420 count) $5. Florida oranges are quoted $4 per case, and California navels at $3.50 to $4.

Potatoes are still in good demand at $2 per barrel. Several vessels with large cargoes arrived this week from Prince Edward Island. The open weather has materially assisted shipments this season.

Local dealers turned over enormous quantities of apples this week. The stock handled was principally Bishop Pippins, and they were of exceptionally fine quality. Apple growers are holding hard stock until the early varieties are cleaned up.

A BOOT BOOKLET.

Under the title, "Canada's Sixth Industry," Howland E. Watson some little time ago wrote of the United Shoe Company. Now, at the Christmas season, the company is sending out profusely illustrated copies of this article. The booklet is handsomely gotten up, and contains a great deal of interesting information.

ANOTHER CANNING FACTORY.

Bloomfield, near Picton, Ont., is to have a fourth canning plant. H. W. Bedell, B. Y. Cooper, E. B. Purtelle and Benjamin Leavens are the men behind the proposition. The new company will be capitalized at $50,000.

An advertisement recently issued by The Fair, one of Chicago's largest department stores occupies 20 pages. This ad. marked the 35th anniversary of the store, and each page was devoted to a separate department. This advertisement cost $21,000.

CALENDARS FOR 1912.

"Great Expectations" is the subject of an attractive calendar gotten out by W. Hanna & Co., general merchants, Port Carling, Muskoka Lakes, Ont. The illustration shows a boy fishing with a home-made rod and line, and a fox terrier beside him watching intently for results.

Dominion Canners, Hamilton, Ont., have gotten out a small, though very neat 1912 calendar. The illustration is a rural scene printed from water color. It is set with green border in white cardboard, the whole being attached to green cardboard background with edges showing. It is hung by a green ribbon, while the calendar itself is tastefully attached to the card by green ribbon.

"The Goddess of Summer" is the subject of a handsome calendar sent out by the California Fruit Distributors. It is from an original painting by Zula Kenyon, in which the artist has combined the beautiful face of a famous American model, Miss Longfellow, with a graceful figure and setting, carrying out the idea of the incarnation of summer.

J. W. Island, 262 Dundas Street East, Toronto, retail grocer, has given his customers an exceedingly attractive calendar this year, which can be put together as a paper holder on the wall. It is something out of the ordinary, and serves a double purpose.

ANNUAL STAFF GATHERING.

Hamilton, Ont., Dec. 28.—The annual banquet of Wagstaffe, Ltd., tendered to their employes last Friday night was a most enjoyable event. About 300 were present in the preparatory room, which was tastefully decorated for the occasion. Fred T. Smye presided.

J. W. Wagstaffe, who founded the business about nine years ago, gave an address emphasizing the fact that failure is not a pernicious occurrence in the life of any man. His talk told of experiences in his own life, which well illustrated his point.

There was also an impromptu programme, and later the guests tripped the light fantastic till after midnight.

NO HARDSHIP AT ALL.

MacLean Publishing Co.—I am in receipt of your favor with account to July, 1912, year's subscription which I enclose herewith for Canadian Grocer.

The payment in advance is no great hardship when you come to consider that every issue contains suggestions and advice that are well worth the year's subscription, and which should appeal to the slowest grocer between here and Halifax, and give him new inspiration to get into the march of progressiveness. I fear a lot of us get into a rut, and become lazy and indifferent; it's then we need a live up-to-date trade newspaper to stimulate and get us moving. You are to be congratulated on the proposed improvements in your paper, and trust your subscription list may be doubled in the year 1912, with payments in advance.

Have you ever thought that a great many grocers needlessly limit the sale of

to the Christmas season and thereby suggest to their trade that mince meat is only good to eat at that particular time?

Has it ever occured to you that these grocers are throwing away money just as much so as if they took cash from the till and threw it down the sewer?

Think it over. It is worth while.

Is there one real good, live reason why it should be so? Especially so when our mince meat is procurable.

Holiday Quotations in Pork Products

Lard is, However, Moving Fairly Well — Christmas Poultry Trade Satisfactory—Egg Production Beginning to Show Signs of Increasing Earlier Than Usual, Due to Educative Work Among Farmers—Cheese Holds Strong Position—Butter Continues Steady.

Pork products have not been in brisk demand. Last week the presence of Christmas poultry in the limelight detracted from provisions, which still appear to be under the holiday spell. One redeeming feature is an appreciable demand for lard, brought about partly by the high price of butter, and partly by the fact that Christmas baking has reduced dealers' stocks considerably. Hams have also been going out fairly well.

Conditions at different centres may vary somewhat, but on the whole the Christmas poultry trade was a source of satisfaction. Supplies of turkeys and other poultry were quite large, and the demand was good, so that shipments to market centres were generally well cleaned up.

The tendency in new laid eggs seems to be downward, indications being they will begin to come forward earlier than usual. This has already shown itself at some points, and prices are easier. U. S. dealers have sent out word they will have new stocks to offer shortly. Earlier production is due no doubt to the educative work being done among the farmers.

The cheese market is quiet, but maintains its strong position. Bids have been coming forward from English buyers, and with the strong statistical position now present, there is a firm tendency in this commodity.

Butter rules steady with fair demand and moderate production; receipts, however, showing considerable range in quality.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—Prices for live and dressed hogs here remain at last week's figures. Provisions have been rather quiet, although retailers have been successful in selling more than an ordinary amount of ham and bacon, probably for the breakfasts of the holiday season. Pure lard also sold well. On the whole, however, there is no particular feature to this department.

EGGS.—It is likely that the price for new laids will decline within a few weeks. The fact is that there is every promise of new stocks coming forward earlier than usual. Reports have been received from the country stating that new laids will be a little more plentiful in but a short time, and U. S. dealers have sent out notifications that they will have new stocks to offer shortly. This earlier production is no doubt due in a large measure to the educative efforts that have been put forth within recent years with a view to securing the aid of farmers toward the general improvement in the production of eggs. Of course, the first receipts that will begin to be appreciable will be light, but it seems that the season will be opened sooner than in past years. The demand is good and should increase if prices show any easier feeling. Country reports state that hens have already begun to lay, and the market will be followed for first signs of increasing receipts. Eggs from the United States will soon be receiving freely in spite of the duty of three cents per dozen.

Reports indicate plentiful supplies throughout the country, and it is felt that there may be a weaker market if supplies come forward as freely as it is thought may be the case. One jobber stated there seemed to be more than an ample supply of turkeys, and at 22 cents the bulk of the sales will cease with the holidays. Chickens and geese have also been in good demand.

been pointed out that after the holiday, demand would be less keen, thus inducing easiness. Such has been the case New laids, which ranged high last week, have settled down, 35 to 40 cents being the ruling price this week. Storage eggs have been finding a considerable demand. The arrival of new laids has been heavier of late, and the increase is expected to continue.

POULTRY.—Conditions surrounding the Christmas poultry trade were satisfactory indeed. As anticipated, a goodly quantity of birds, including the desired turkey arrived, while a pleasing feature was the good demand which cleaned supplies up well, leaving decks next to bare at the opening of this week. Prices remained at practically the same level as quoted earlier in the week. New Year's always brings forth a certain demand for poultry, although much smaller than for Christmas.

SPECIALIZES ON CHEESE.

St. John, N. B., Dec. 28.—"As you can see my price for cheese is two cents more than my competitor across the street, but that doesn't matter," said a local grocer last week. "I've got as much as four cents more for it, but my price, as a general rule, is two cents more, for the best. For a few years past I have been making a specialty of keeping only the best standard cheese on hand, and I find that not only my regular customers know this, but outsiders as well, and it has worked to my advantage. I am starting to do the same with other dairy articles such as eggs and butter, and I believe it will be a good thing for me. I am particular in buying my stocks of cheese to secure only the best available, even if it is a little higher, for those who have been dealing with me know it is reliable, and they are really my best advertisers, for they tell their friends of the fact. Another thing you may have noticed—I pay special attention to displaying it, and I often invite a chance customer to sample it with the result that he or she generally buys. I am heartily in favor of a dealer in groceries specializing in certain lines of goods, for it advertises his other wares, and brings him increased custom."

The United States packs $157,101,000 into tin cans yearly. At least that is the value of products used in canning in 1909, as against $130,466,000 in 1904. Of all the products, canned vegetables were put up in the greatest quantity, namely, 32,573,434 in 1909. Canned tomatoes led with 12,883,414 cases.

Rolled Oats Reduced 35c. Per Barrel

By Number of Mills This Week, Although Market for Raw Material Remains Fairly Steady — Competition for Business Appears Keen—Holiday Confectionery Trade Good—Increased Sale for High-class Confections, Both in Bulk and Package —Dealers Being Absorbed in Holiday Goods Have Neglected Flour.

The unexpected announcement of a drop of 35 cents per barrel in rolled oats was made this week by a number of milling firms, a total drop of 60 cents per barrel during the month. The action of the rolled oats market of late would seem to indicate that competition for business is very keen, as recent big declines have come in the face of a fairly steady Canadian market for raw material. Some of those firms which favored higher prices a week or so ago were among those to give a New Year present in the form of the announced decline.

Flour is apparently still being neglected by the retail dealer. Consumptive demand is not large and attention given it by the retailer during the past few weeks has been comparatively small. However, with the turn of the year and return to normal conditions it is probable that this commodity will take on renewed activity.

Argentine still looms large as a factor in shaping wheat prices. Conditions now point to large yield, although there have been some damage reports from northern portion. Still, the world's wheat crop is shaping good. However, in really superior grades there is an undoubted shortage in many quarters of the globe which will assist in improving lower grades also.

The world's wheat shipments last week totalled 10,394,000 bushels against 9,120,000 the previous week and 11,792,000 bushels a year ago. The visible wheat supply in the United States increased 70,000 bushels last week.

As during every holiday season, retailers have had good sales in confectionery. Christmas trade was quite satisfactory, a feature being the increasing sale for high priced goods both in bulk and package. Christmas stockings and confection novelties found ready sale while pop corn, mixed candies and cheaper lines were pushed by the retail trade.

Cornmeal is slightly easier on account of new corn which is lower than figures on the old stock.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR.—Domestic flour trade is as yet somewhat under the holiday cloud. Consumptive demand from the retailer is not large, but with opening of year he will probably direct more interest to this line. Prices show no change.

CEREALS.—A decline of 35 cents per barrel in rolled oats announced by a number of mills this week was not generally expected at this time. The oat market has been holding fairly steady, although across the line it has been developing a weaker tendency. When the decline of 25 cents per barrel came two weeks ago, it was reported to be for purpose of drumming up business and a firming tendency was not an unlooked for thing. One firm even set a date when prices would go up 20 cents per barrel. They did not, however, due, it has been said, to keen competition among millers. This week several mills, among them those firms which before favored higher prices, reduced quotations 35 cents per barrel, a total drop of 60 cents per barrel this month. All mills have not as yet announced the lower figures quoted. Apparently competition is keen, and rolled oats millers are not working well together. The important point, however, to the retail trade is that they have the lower prices on this commodity. Now, after the holiday rush is a good time for the retailer to feature cereals.

CONTRACTIONS CAUSED TROUBLE

Halifax, N.S., Dec. 28.—"It is not wise to use too many contractions in making out bills for customers," said a Halifax merchant recently. "The other day one of my women customers stormed into the store with a look that denoted trouble for some one, and throwing down her bill on the counter, remarked in a hasty tone :—'There's that bill that I paid this morning. I see you have two mats charged up to me, and I never bought a mat of any description from you in my life. Surely someone else must have bought it and you charged it to me.'

"I was somewhat taken back for a moment, as I thought we must have committed some horrible mistake which might cost us this woman's trade, but I picked up the bill to find out the date, and found that the two mats she thought were charged to her were nothing else than two boxes of matches. The clerk had contracted the item into two mats. After a great deal of talking I explained fairly satisfactorily what it meant, but before she left she gave me a parting thrust : 'Paper must be very scarce that you cannot write the words in full.' While most customers would have understood, still in some cases these contractions cause unpleasantness, and I have decided to make only those that will be easily understood by customers.

"Some of the contractions which sometimes puzzle customers are 'mat.' for matches, 'tap.' for tapioca, 'tob.' for tobacco, 'cab' for cabbage, 'tom.' for tomatoes, 'straw.' for strawberries, 'mol.' for molasses, and 'bis.' for biscuits.

Fruit Selling Well for New Year's Trade

Holiday Trade Still in Bloom—General Satisfaction With Christmas Trade—Larger Offerings of Navel Oranges and Market Shows Somewhat Easier Tendency—California Celery Still Holds High—Potatoes Maintain Their Position—More Attention Will Now be Given to Staples.

Christmas, with its accompanying flood of fruit, is once more a thing of the past. General satisfaction is expressed with this year's business. Trade was good, comparing favorably with those that have gone before, and decks were pretty well cleaned of Christmas supplies. A portion of this week is generally given over by retailers to cleaning up odd left-overs, but quite a nice volume of business is expected to come forward in anticipation of the New Year's trade.

In regard to California products, offerings of navel oranges are indeed ample, and there is a little easier tendency in evidence. California lemons handled by Western Canadian trade are in abund ant supply, and are by no means firm. Celery from that state is not moving freely yet, and prices are holding high. There have been some odd shipments to Canadian markets for the holiday trade.

Potatoes have receded none from the position held for past month. Stocks held at most centres are not large nor are offerings at present time. Spanish onions have been somewhat neglected of late, but with the passing of the holiday and the arrival of colder weather, greater interest is expected.

With opening of the year attention will again become centred to a greater extent upon staple lines.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS.—The holiday trade in fruit was exceptionally good and is bound to last until after the first week in the new year. There was a good call for cranberries, but it is thought the rather high price proved a deterrent to the trade. Oranges and apples sold well and grapes likewise. The latter are becoming scarce and it is generally held that it will not be long until prices begin to soar. One opinion expressed was that Malagas would likely bring from $8 to $9 if sales continued fairly strong.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—Quietness has followed in the wake of the Christmas rush. Many dealers give the first part of this week at least to the clearing up of stocks. Later in the week, it is anticipated there will be considerable demand for fruit for the New Year's trade. Wholesalers are apparently well satisfied with volume of Christmas trade.

California navels are slightly easier. With Christmas past the demand will not be so keen. Mexicans are quoted at $2.25 to $2.50. Valencias at $4.75 to $5.50.

Fish - Oysters

Retailers Should Give More Time to Fish

With Favorable Weather Trade Should Show Activity—Oysters in Fair Demand—Lobster Fishing Commences on Nova Scotia Coast—Newfoundland Sends Large Shipments of Dry Cod to Mediterranean Ports.

The anticipation of the Christmas turkey kept the appetite for fish in the background last week. Then, again, dealers were busy pushing holiday goods, so that general conditions were not conducive to large trade. Interest has been somewhat greater this week, and with the opening of the new year, sales are expected to become more active. The retailer with more time will direct attention to this line and with favorable weather substantial sales should result.

Lobster fishing season is now in full swing on Nova Scotian coast, and catches so far have been good, the United States markets getting big portion of supplies. Haddock fishing has also been good under favorable weather conditions. Newfoundland continues to send large shipments of dry codfish to Mediterranean ports. Prices on codfish hold firmly.

QUEBEC.

MONTREAL.—The market is quiet after rather active business last week. The mild weather continuing through Christmas proved unseasonable and the complete trade expected did not materialize as it should have. Owing to holiday spirit there was not as much attention shown to fish as usual. Prices are practically unchanged.

NOVA SCOTIA.

HALIFAX.—Fishing season is now in full swing on the Nova Scotia coast. While the season has been opened less than a week some large catches have been made, and indications are industry will be as good as last year. Already large shipments are being made to United States. The first steamer sailing took over one thousand crates, and the second shipment totalled 1,100 crates, valued at $14,000. While these lobsters are shipped to Boston dealers, many of them are forwarded to New York and Chicago, and it is even stated some of them find their way back into Canada again. The lobsters offering on the local market are small.

Haddock are coming on market in large quantities. Weather during past week was exceptionally favorable for fishing, and some good catches have been made. The shipments of smoked haddies to Boston market are heavy and bloaters are also selling well.

Outside of some activity in herring there is not much doing in salt fish trade. Foreign demand for dry codfish continues good. There is a good enquiry for salt mackerel with practically no stock offering. Herring are now plentiful and sales are fairly good.

ONTARIO.

TORONTO—The rush of holiday shopping naturally detracted from fish last week but with passing of the festive season trade is expected to show signs of increased life again. The weather, while somewhat more favorable to the cause, could indeed be more so.

About the only lines of fresh caught fish listed are steak cod and haddock and prices on both are firm. Lake herring are quoted at 3 and 5 cents.

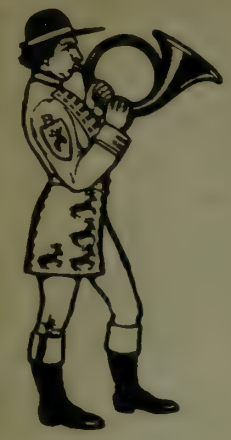
KEEPING FROST FROM WINDOWS.



Montreal Grocers Using Double Window System.

Montreal, Dec. 28.—Regarding the method employed by a Smith's Falls grocer of preventing his window from becoming frosted, it may be said that a large number of Montreal's best grocers have adopted this plan. The lower half of the window of each of such stores has practically a double window an arrangement being made whereby the second window is placed on the outside as referred to by W. Hyndman, and in every case the result has been most satisfactory. The lower parts of the windows are free from frost in contrast with the upper parts and with other windows that have been neglected.

A. Hamstra & Co., American managers for Biscuit Fabrick "Delindeboom," of Mydrecht and Amsterdam, Holland, manufacturers of Frou Frou Wafer products, are removing their headquarters from Grand Rapids, Michigan, to the Fort Deaborn Bldg. in Chicago, the first week in January. The local office in Grand Rapids will be maintained as a branch.

Hager & Perry, Parry Sound, Ont., have opened grocery business recently purchased from W. L. Kenney & Co.

There are many fine Christmas displays in Toronto grocers' windows. A traveler calls attention to two particularly fine displays in the windows of B. S. McMurty, Eglinton, and on Yonge St., at corner of Marlboro.

Make your motto for 1912, "Fish and lots of it," and you'll make no mistake.

Wide Awake Methods in Retailing

Montreal Dealer Gives Away Many Calendars—Vancouver Retail Firm Opens Deposit Account Department in New Store—Grocery Display in Shape of Harp—New Brunswick Dealer Has Special Clerk for Confectionery.

Giving Away 1,100 Calendars.

Montreal, Dec. 28.—While the calendar question finds many grocers who oppose it there are quite a number who thus remember their customers at Christmas. When something out of the ordinary in such calendars is noticed it is usually worth mentioning. Walter Paul, a St. Catherine St. grocer with a branch store on University St., distributed eleven hundred calendars among his special customers. The designs of the calendars which were of four subjects were artistic and this little remembrance of the firm was dainty, attractive and would surely be prized by recipients. The work of the artist, Fred. S. Burgy, in "A Long Summer Day" and "Winter's Crystal Beauty" is well reproduced and the calendar does not bear a flamboyant reference to the grocer who presented it.

Open Deposit Account Department.

Vancouver, B.C., Dec. 28.—The H. A. Edgett Company, Ltd., has made another move, and is now located on Pender Street, at the corner of Cambie. It is the first large retail store to go on to this street. The Edgett Company originally started on Harris Street in the east end, under the name of Edgett Bros., but came up to Cordova Street, then around to Hastings and now into a large stone building, erected for their use, and on which they have a long lease. The building, on a corner, is three stories high, all of which is occupied. The firm is branching out, and have added everything for the household, such as furniture, hardware, crockery, etc.

The interior of the store is finished in spotless white, with an abundance of light. Throughout the latest ideas have been adopted in store methods. The fresh and cooked meats and delicatessen are shown on sanitary white opalite glass with a plate glass covering. This not only protects the goods from dust, but the effect is particularly pleasing to the patron, and shows the goods off to the best advantage.

A new feature will be the deposit account department. For some time this store has done business on the strictly cash basis, goods being either paid for at the store or sent c.o.d. Now an account may be opened by a customer with the firm by depositing a sum not less than $5, nor more than $100, interest on which is allowed at 12 per cent. on the daily average of the account. A statement of this account will be rendered each month, showing withdrawals or amount of purchases checked up against it.

A Grocery Harp.

London, Ont., Dec. 28.—(Special.) — Scandrett Bros., retail grocers, have a unique and attractive Christmas window. A large harp about three feet high, made of macaroni and assorted peels, is the feature. —

Richard Eckert, of Gorman, Eckert & Co., is in the field for mayor of 1912. Many of the grocers are working for him.

Jas. McKenzie, secretary of the Retail Grocers' Association, has opened a branch store at corner of Maitland and Dufferin Sts.

Special Clerk for Confectionery.

St. John, N.B., Dec. 28.—"I have given to one of my clerks," said a local grocer last week, "almost complete control of the confectionery end of my business, and in allowing him to assume responsibility for the success of this department, I think I am making a wise move. Already, I can notice an improvement, although he has had charge only a week. Formerly any of the clerks, or myself, would arrange the chocolates or candies in the silent salesmen or on the glass shelves suspended above it, but until the Christmas and New Year's rush is over, he will have all to do with pushing the sales of confectionery, attending, of course, in spare moments, to filling orders, and other work. There is an old saying that 'two many hands spoil the pudding,' and I have just begund to find it out in connection with selling in different departments. As you see, I have endeavored to separate my chocolates and candies from other lines, and have reserved considerable space for them, and my showcase has been pushed into a prominent position and made to appear as attractive as possible with tempting lines and displays. I do not stock very heavily in chocolates in my case, but as you can see, each different kind is neatly heaped together in a half-pound mound with a white perforated napkin beneath, and a small price ticket on top, which appears to me to be far more attractive than when a lot of boxes are jammed into the case."

SPECIALIZES IN POULTRY WITH SUCCESS

Vancouver Dealer Considers Prominence Given to This Department Results in Good Advertisement—Growth of Business Necessitates Enlarging Establishment—Proprietor Going East for New Ideas.

Vancouver, B.C., Dec. 28.—(Special.) —T. F. McDowell, who a few years ago started for himself in the grocery trade at 704 Granville street, has established a fine business, and has made a name for himself in the special line of poultry. In this case, as in many others, it has paid the dealer to single out some line of goods, and concentrate thereon. Not that other and principal lines are to be disregarded in any way, but by giving attention to some one thing a dealer is able to get good advertising and get good trade. "To him that hath it shall be given," and it is remarkable when a man succeeds how many good things are added to his success. Mr. McDowell has found things coming his way so much that he has to enlarge his place of business, and soon after the first of the year he will visit principal cities in the east to get in touch with the newest methods and plans of arrangement, so that the enlargement may be carried out on thoroughly modern lines.

Mr. McDowell has popularized his poultry under the name of Hazelwood brand, and he makes a point to see that his customers are completely satisfied. This is one of the elements of success, and establishes a good-will that means larger and more secure business.

In going into the poultry line in connection with his grocery trade, Mr. McDowell made a bid for the high-grade birds selected by the packers of the east for the old country market. Special care is taken with these to bring them to the market in superfine condition. For two weeks they are milk-fed, and every step is thorough and careful, from picking the feathers to the scientific trussing. By establishing a standard of quality, with a good selection, Mr. McDowell is becoming well known in Vancouver as a poultry specialist.
